The Service

1. This War Tax Service when sent you is complete to the time of subscription. It is kept up to date by the insertion of new pages as often as new regulations, rulings or decisions are released.
2. Reports of new matter are sent you by first class mail with a Report Letter which lists the pages included in the report. The report letters are consecutively numbered. If the number of a new report indicates the non-receipt of the preceding report, or if pages are found missing, notice thereof should be sent us that we may forward duplicates.
3. The several divisions of this War Tax Service are indicated by guide cards. Every division is complete in itself including, as it does, the statutory provisions pertaining to its subject, a compilation of the regulations, decisions and rulings in force January 1, 1923, forms, new matters, and, where necessary, an index.
4. All paragraphs are numbered for reference purposes. The paragraph numbers appear in boldface type in the left margin. The numbers in small type below the paragraph numbers are references to other paragraphs bearing on the same subject. When new matter is inserted, the Service should be kept fully cross referenced by the entry of the new paragraph numbers opposite the respective preceding paragraphs to which back reference is shown.
5. The numbering of paragraphs and pages is consecutive throughout each division of the Service, differing series of paragraph and page numbers being utilized for the respective divisions.

-REPORT NO. 45-

FINAL REPORT FOR THE 1923 SERVICE

JANUARY 3, 1924.

This Report is a part of the 1923 Service. We were mistaken in thinking that Report No. 44, dated December 27, 1923, would be the last. Internal Revenue Bulletin No. 39 (December 31, 1923) carried an Excess Profits Tax ruling.

Enclosed herewith are pages as listed below for insertion in your 1923 Service.

"Excess Profits Tax" division:

Supplementary Bulletin Rulings:

Sec. 326. Art. 831. - 29 to 32 (For substitution for Art. 831. - 29-30. - Ruling No. 45 is new.)

THE 1924 SERVICE.

This Report, being for the 1923 Service, is sent to all 1923 subscribers. Renewal subscriptions (for 1924) have not been received from all 1923 subscribers. We suggest that you be certain that your 1924 subscription has been sent to us. The 1924 books have been distributed and the first 1924 Report is being mailed to-day.

Very truly yours,

THE CORPORATION TRUST COMPANY.

This new district was established by the President, as now shown, on March 5, 1923, effective April 1. We have withheld publication until now, as it was understood that a modifying Executive Order might issue changing the district so that it would include that part of Manhattan Island only lying north of 23d Street and west of 5th Avenue. Such change is now no longer expected.

Title IV.—Estate Tax.

1 Sec. 400. That when used in this title—

2 The term “executor” means the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator, any person in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent;

3 The term “net estate” means the net estate as determined under the provisions of section 403;

4 The term “month” means calendar month; and

5 The term “collector” means the collector of internal revenue of the district in which was the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death, or, if there was no such domicile in the United States, then the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate of the decedent in the United States, or, if such part of the gross estate is situated in more than one district, then the collector of internal revenue of such district as may be designated by the Commissioner.

[Rates.]

6 Sec. 401. That, in lieu of the tax imposed by Title IV of the Revenue Act of 1918, a tax equal to the sum of the following percentages of the value of the net estate (determined as provided in section 403) is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this Act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

7 1 per centum of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000;

2 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

3 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

4 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

6 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $750,000;

8 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $750,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

10 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000;

12 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

14 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

16 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

18 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

20 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

22 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000; and

25 per centum of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000.

8 The taxes imposed by this title or by Title II of the Revenue Act of 1916 (as amended by the Act entitled "An Act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the army and navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917) or by Title IX of the Revenue Act of 1917, or by Title IV of the Revenue Act of 1918, shall not apply to the transfer of the net estate of any decedent who has died or may die from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the war against the German Government, or to the transfer of the net estate of any citizen of the United States who has died or may die from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while serving in the military or naval forces of any country while associated with the United States in the prosecution of such war, or prior to the entrance therein of the United States, and any tax collected upon such transfer shall be refunded to the estate of such decedent.

[Determination of value of gross estate.]

9 Sec. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

10 (a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

11 (b) To the extent of any interest therein of the surviving spouse, existing at the time of the decedent's death as dower, curtesy, or by virtue of a statute creating an estate in lieu of dower or curtesy;

12 (c) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has at any time created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (whether such transfer or trust is made or created before or after the passage of this Act), except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title;

13 (d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have been received or acquired by the latter from the decedent for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth: Provided, That where such property or any part thereof, or part of the consideration with which such property was acquired, is shown to have been at any time acquired by such other person from the decedent for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, there shall be excepted only such part of the value of such property as is proportionate to the consideration furnished by such other person: Provided further, That where any property has been acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, as a tenancy in the entirety by the decedent and spouse, or where so acquired by the decedent and any other person as joint tenants and their interests are not otherwise specified or fixed by law, then to the extent of one-half of the value thereof;

14 (e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth; and

15 (f) To the extent of the amount receivable by the executor as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life; and to the extent of the excess over $40,000 of the amount receivable by all other beneficiaries as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

[Determination of value of net estate.]

16 Sec. 403. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

17 (a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

pended for the support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered, but not including any income taxes upon income received after the death of the decedent, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes;

19 (2) An amount equal to the value of any property forming a part of the gross estate situated in the United States of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent where such property can be identified as having been received by the decedent from such prior decedent by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, or which can be identified as having been acquired in exchange for property so received: Provided, That this deduction shall be allowed only where an estate tax under this or any prior Act of Congress was paid by or on behalf of the estate of such prior decedent, and only in the amount of the value placed by the Commissioner on such property in determining the value of the gross estate of such prior decedent, and only to the extent that the value of such property is included in the decedent's gross estate and not deducted under paragraphs (1) or (3) of subdivision (a) of this section. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since September 8, 1916;

20 (3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises, or transfers, except bona fide sales for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after the decedent's death, to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917; and

22 (b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States—

23 (1) That proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per centum of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States;

24 (2) An amount equal to the value of any property forming a part of the gross estate situated in the United States of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent where such property can be identified as having been received by the decedent from such prior decendent by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, or which can be identified as having been acquired in exchange for property so received: Provided, That this deduction shall be allowed only where an estate tax under this or any prior Act of Congress was paid by or on behalf of the estate of such prior decedent, and only in the amount of the value placed by the Commissioner on such property in determining the value of the gross estate of such prior decedent, and only to the extent that the value of such property is included in that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States and not deducted under paragraphs (1) or (3) of subdivision (b) of this section. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since September 8, 1916; and

25 (3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises, or transfers, except bona fide sales for a fair consideration, in money, or money's worth, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after the decedent's death, to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any domestic corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes within the United States. This deduction shall be made in case of the estates of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917.

26 No deduction shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 404 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States.

27 For the purpose of this title stock in a domestic corporation owned and held by a nonresident decedent shall be deemed property within the United States, and any property of which the decedent has made a transfer or with respect to which he has created a trust, within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 402, shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.

28 The amount receivable as insurance upon the life of a nonresident decedent, and any moneys deposited with any person carrying on the banking business, by or for a nonresident decedent who was not engaged in business in the United States at the time of his death, shall not, for the purpose of this title, be deemed property within the United States.

29 Missionaries duly commissioned and serving under boards of foreign missions of the various religious denominations in the United States, dying while in the foreign missionary service of such boards, shall not, by reason merely of their intention to permanently remain in such foreign service, be deemed nonresidents of the United States, but shall be presumed to be residents of the State, the District of Columbia, or the Territories of Alaska or Hawaii wherein they respectively resided at the time of their commission and their departure for such foreign service.

- 30 In the case of any estate in respect to which the tax has been paid, if necessary to allow the benefit of the deduction under paragraphs (2) and (3) of subdivision (a) or (b) the tax shall be redetermined and any excess of tax paid shall be refunded to the executor.

- 31 Sec. 404. That the executor, within two months after the decedent's death, or within a like period after qualifying as such, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 403; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 403; and (d) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

- 32 Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The Commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

- 33 Sec. 405. That if no administration is granted upon the estate of a decedent, or if no return is filed as provided in section 404, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return and the Commissioner shall assess the tax thereon.

[Payment of tax. Extension of time. Penalty.]

- 34 Sec. 406. That the tax shall be due and payable one year after the decedent's death; but in any case where the Commissioner finds that payment of the tax within such period would impose undue hardship upon the estate, he may grant an extension or extensions of time for payment not to exceed three years from the due date.

- 35 The executor shall pay the tax to the collector or deputy collector, and to such portion of the tax, not paid within one year and six months after the decedent's death, interest at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the expiration of one year after such death shall be added as part of the tax irrespective of any extension or extensions of time that may have been granted for the payment of the tax, or any portion thereof.

36     Sec. 407. That where the amount of tax shown upon a return made in good faith has been fully paid, or time for payment has been extended, as provided in section 406, beyond one year and six months after the decedent's death, and an additional amount of tax is, after the expiration of such period of one year and six months, found to be due, then such additional amount shall be paid upon notice and demand by the collector, and if it remains unpaid for one month after such notice and demand there shall be added as part of the tax interest on such additional amount at the rate of 10 per centum per annum from the expiration of such period until paid, and such additional tax and interest shall, until paid, be and remain a lien upon the entire gross estate.

37     The collector shall grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which shall be sufficient evidence of such payment, and shall entitle the executor to be credited and allowed the amount thereof by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

38     If the executor files a complete return and makes written application to the Commissioner for determination of the amount of the tax and discharge from personal liability therefor, the Commissioner, as soon as possible and in any event within one year after receipt of such application, shall notify the executor of the amount of the tax, and upon payment thereof the executor shall be discharged from personal liability for any additional tax thereafter found to be due, and shall be entitled to receive a receipt or writing showing such discharge: Provided, however, That such discharge shall not operate to release the gross estate from the lien of any additional tax that may thereafter be found to be due while the title to such gross estate remains in the heirs, devisees, or distributees thereof; but no part of such gross estate shall be subject to such lien or to any claim or demand for any such tax if the title thereto has passed to a bona fide purchaser for value.

39     Sec. 408. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid on or before the due date thereof the collector shall, upon instructions from the commissioner, proceed to collect the tax under the provisions of general law, or commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid, and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court, to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto.

40     If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undistributed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution. If any part of the gross estate consists of proceeds of policies of insurance upon the life of the decedent receivable by a beneficiary other than the executor, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiary such portion of the total tax paid as the proceeds, in excess of $40,000, of such policies bear to the net estate. If there is more than one such beneficiary the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiaries in the same ratio.

[Tax a lien for ten years.]

41 Sec. 409. That unless the tax is sooner paid in full, it shall be a lien for ten years upon the gross estate of the decedent, except that such part of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration, allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be divested of such lien. If the Commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability of an estate has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, issue his certificate, releasing any or all property of such estate from the lien herein imposed.

42 If (a) the decedent makes a transfer of, or creates a trust with respect to, any property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth) or (b) if insurance passes under a contract executed by the decedent in favor of a specific beneficiary, and if in either case the tax in respect thereto is not paid when due, then the transferee, trustee, or beneficiary shall be personally liable for such tax, and such property, to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of such transfer, or to the extent of such beneficiary's interest under such contract of insurance, shall be subject to a like lien equal to the amount of such tax. Any part of such property sold by such transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth shall be divested of the lien and a like lien shall then attach to all the property of such transferee or trustee, except any part sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

[Penalty for failure to file, or for false, notice or return.]

43 Sec. 410. That whoever knowingly makes any false statement in any notice or return required to be filed under this title shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

44  Whoever fails to comply with any duty imposed upon him by section 404, or, having in his possession or control any record, file, or paper, containing or supposed to contain any information concerning the estate of the decedent, or, having in his possession or control any property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same upon request to the Commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, who desires to examine the same in the performance of his duties under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in a civil action in the name of the United States.

45    Sec. 411. (a) That the term "resident" as used in this title includes a citizen of the United States with respect to whose property any probate or administration proceedings are had in the United States Court for China. Where no part of the gross estate of such decedent is situated in the United States at the time of his death, the total amount of tax due under this title shall be paid to or collected by the clerk of such court, but where any part of the gross estate of such decedent is situated in the United States at the time of his death, the tax due under this title shall be paid to or collected by the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate in the United States, or, if such part is situated in more than one district, then the collector of such district as may be designated by the Commissioner.

46    (b) For the purpose of this section the clerk of the United States Court for China shall be a collector for the territorial jurisdiction of such court, and taxes shall be collected by and paid to him in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as the taxes collected by and paid to a collector in the United States.

47    (c) The proviso in the Act entitled "An Act making appropriation for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," approved June 4, 1920, which reads as follows: "Provided, That in probate and administration proceedings there shall be collected by said clerk, before entering the order of final distribution, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, the same inheritance taxes from time to time collected under the laws enacted by the Congress of the United States from the estates of decedents residing within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States," is hereby repealed.

48    Sec. 1400 [of the Revenue Act of 1921]. (a) That the following parts of the Revenue Act of 1918 are repealed, to take effect (except as otherwise provided in this Act) on January 1, 1922, subject to the limitations provided in subdivision (b):

Title IV (called "Estate Tax") on the passage of this Act [i. e., at 3:55 P. M., November 23, 1921];

49    (b) The parts of the Revenue Act of 1918 which are repealed by this Act shall (unless otherwise specifically provided in this Act) remain in force for the assessment and collection of all taxes which have accrued under the Revenue Act of 1918 at the time such parts cease to be in effect, and for the imposition and collection of all penalties or forfeitures which have accrued or may accrue in relation to any such taxes. In the case of any tax imposed by any part of the Revenue Act of 1918 repealed by this Act, if there is a tax imposed by this Act in lieu thereof, the provision imposing such tax shall remain in force until the corresponding tax under this Act takes effect under the provisions of this Act. * * *

RETURN FOR FEDERAL ESTATE TAX.

AN ITEMIZED INVENTORY BY SCHEDULE OF THE GROSS ESTATE OF THE DECEDENT, WITH LEGAL DEDUCTIONS.

Decedent's name ..... Date of death ....., 192

Residence at time of death .....

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS—READ WITH CARE.

1. PENALTIES.—For failure to file return when due, a fine not exceeding $500, or 25 per cent added to the tax, or both. For knowingly making a false statement in this return, a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment, or 50 per cent added to the tax, or any or all of the three. For willfully making a false or fraudulent return, 50 per cent shall be added to the tax. Section 3176, U S Revised Statutes.

2. This return is required for the estate of every resident decedent whose gross estate exceeds $50,000, and for the estate of every nonresident decedent any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. The term "United States" used in this form means only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

3. This return is due one year after the date of death, and must be filed with the collector of the district in which the decedent was domiciled at the time of death, or, in the case of a NONRESIDENT, with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

4. Regulations No. 63, 1922 Edition, should be carefully studied before making out this return.

5. All papers used in preparing the return should be carefully preserved for reference or inspection. All estate tax returns are verified by an Internal Revenue officer before the tax is determined by the Bureau.

6. If the decedent left a will, a certified copy must be filed in duplicate with the return:

There should be filed in duplicate and as a part of the return such supplemental data and statements as may be necessary to substantiate the return and establish the correct tax.

In the case of the estate of a NONRESIDENT, there should be filed—

(1) Certified copy of will, if decedent died testate, or of each will if decedent left more than one, to govern in different jurisdictions.

(2) A certified copy of inventory of the complete gross estate, whether situated within or without the United States. Separate schedules should be made for property within and without the United States, respectively, whether or not deductions are claimed.

(3) If any deduction is claimed, a certified copy of schedule of debts and expenses allowed. If certified copy of inventory of all property outside the United States is filed with the return, such property need not be entered under the respective schedules.

7. This form consists of cover sheets, general information sheet and thirteen schedules. Care should be taken to see that the return is complete and that all schedules are included in the proper order.

The inventory of the gross estate in resident estates must be set forth upon the schedules provided, and should not be attached in the form of an exhibit or separate statement.

8. The questions asked under each schedule should be specifically answered, and if the decedent owned no property of any class specified under the schedule, the word "None" should be written across the schedule.

9. If there is not sufficient space for all entries under any schedule, use additional sheets of the same size, numbering them consecutively as follows: Schedule A-1, A-2, etc., and insert them in the proper order in the return.

10. Where the decedent died from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States or any country associated with the United States in the prosecution of war against the German Government, or prior to the entrance therein of the United States, see Articles 9 and 10, Regulations No. 63, 1922 Edition.

11. Property identified as received from an estate taxed within five years under the Revenue Act approved September 8, 1916, or subsequent Revenue Acts, or identified as exchanged for such property, must be entered in Schedule G exclusively and not under any other schedule, whether real estate or other property.

12. Property owned jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, must be entered in Schedule D under the caption "Jointly Owned Property," and not under any other schedule whether real estate or other property.

13. Further instructions will be found under each schedule. If these instructions are carefully observed, it will greatly assist the estate and the Bureau. Returns not in accordance with the instructions upon this form will not be accepted.

SCHEDULE B.
STOCKS AND BONDS.

INSTRUCTIONS

Give a complete and adequate description of all securities, as follows:

STOCKS.—State the number shares, exact title of corporation, common or preferred, par value, and quotation at which returned. If a listed security, state principal exchange upon which sold. If unlisted, show the address of the issuing company.

Examples: 10 shares American Car & Foundry Co., preferred, par $100, at 98, New York Exchange.
10 shares Eagle Manufacturing Co., Red Bank, N. J., common, par $25, at 30, unlisted.

BONDS.—State quantity and denomination, exact title, kind of bond, interest rate, interest and due dates. State the exchange upon which listed or the address of company, if unlisted.

Example: Ten $1,000 Baltimore and Ohio Railway Co. first mortgage 4 per cent registered 50-year gold bonds, due 1948. January, April, July, and October, at 96, New York Exchange.

Listed stocks and bonds should be returned at the mean between the highest and lowest quoted selling price upon the date of death, if there were no sales on day of death at the mean between the highest and lowest sales on the nearest date thereto if within a reasonable period; if death occurred on a Sunday or holiday quotations of the nearest previous day should be used; if listed on several exchanges quotations of the principal exchange should be employed.

If actual sales are not available and the stock is quoted on a bid and asked basis, the bid as of date of death should be taken.

Unlisted securities which are dealt in actively by brokers or have an active market should be returned at the sale price as of the date of death or the nearest date thereto if within a reasonable period either before or after death. Only sales in the normal course of business should be employed. Where no such sale occurred the nearest bid should be used.

Inactive stock and stock in close corporations should be valued upon the basis of the companies' net worth, earning and dividend paying capacity, general market conditions, and special conditions affecting the particular companies, their future prospects, and all other factors having a bearing upon the value of the stock. The financial and other data upon which the estate bases its valuation should be submitted with the return.

Securities returned as of no value, nominal value, or obsolete, should be listed last, and the address of the company and the State and date of incorporation should be stated, if obtainable from the certificate. Copies of correspondence or statements of reasons for return at no value should be retained for inspection.

Interest on bonds should be apportioned to the date of death and returned in the interest column. Dividends upon stock declared prior to death, and payable after date of death, must be returned separately unless reflected in the price at which the stock is returned.

In nonresident estates the actual depository on date of death of all bonds should be shown and if the inventory of the entire gross estate is filed with the return only bonds actually within the United States and stock of corporations or associations created or organized in the United States should be listed under this schedule.

Paragraph 2 of Article 14, Regulations No. 63, 1922 Edition, should be carefully reviewed before completing this schedule.

SCHEDULE C.

MORTGAGES, NOTES, CASH, AND INSURANCE.

INSTRUCTIONS.

The four classes of property on this schedule should be listed separately in the order given.

MORTGAGES.—State (1) two values and unpaid balance, (2) date of mortgage, (3) name of maker, (4) property mortgaged, (5) interest rates and date of interest. For example: For $5,000, unpaid balance $5,000; dated January 1, 1910, John Doe to Richard Roe; premises 22 Clinton St., Newark, N. J.; interest payable at 6 per cent per annum January 1 and July 1; interest paid to January 1, 1912.

NOTES, PROMISSORY.—Give similar data.

CASH IN POSSESSION.—List separately from bank deposits.

CASH IN BANK.—Name bank and address, amount in each bank and give serial number and nature of account, whether checking, savings, time deposit, etc. Include accrued interest in income column, or indicate if included in total on deposit. If statements are obtained from banks they should be retained for inspection.

INSURANCE.—The proceeds of all life insurance to whomsoever payable must be returned regardless of value. Insurance payable to executor must be returned first. State (1) name of company, (2) number of policy, (3) name of person receiving insurance. Include full amount received. All insurance on life of decedent should be entered.

IMPORTANT:—If there is insurance payable to beneficiaries other than the executor, deduction may be taken at bottom of this page equal to the amount returned for such insurance, but not exceeding $40,000.

If decedent was a nonresident, and died subsequent to 3:55 p. m., November 23, 1921, Washington time, insurance on his life need not be included as a part of his gross estate. Neither should bank accounts situated in this country be included where the nonresident decedent died subsequent to said date unless decedent was doing business in the United States. All facts in this connection, however, should be reported whether or not it is contended that the bank account is not taxable.

For further instructions see Articles 27 to 31, inclusive, Regulations No. 63, 1922 Edition.

DEBTS OF DECEDENT.

INSTRUCTIONS.

Itemize fully below all valid debts of the decedent due and owing at the time of death. Preserve all vouchers for inspection.

Itemize fully below all valid debts of the decedent due and owing at the time of death. Preserve all vouchers for inspection. If deduction is claimed for a debt, the amount of which is disputed or the subject of litigation, only such amount may be deducted as the estate concedes to be a valid claim. If the claim is contested, that fact should be stated.

Enter notes unsecured by mortgage under this heading and give full details, including name of payee, face and unpaid balance, date and term of note, interest rates and date to which interest was paid prior to death.

Care must be taken to state the exact nature of the claim as well as the name of the creditor. If the claim is for services rendered over a period of time, state the period covered by the claim. Example: January 1, 1919, Edison Electric Illuminating Company for electric service during December, 1918, $25.

PROPERTY IDENTIFIED AS TAXED WITHIN FIVE YEARS.

Enter in this schedule, by separate estates if more than one estate is involved, the total amount deductible as representing property received from an estate taxed within five years or acquired by exchange for property so received.

NOTE.—It is of prime importance to bear in mind that where the estate is entitled to this deduction under the Revenue Act approved February 24, 1919, that is, where the prior decedent died subsequent to October 3, 1917, and the second decedent died subsequent to 6.55 p. m., February 24, 1919, and prior to 3.55 p. m., November 23, 1921, Washington, D. C. time, the right to the deduction is governed by the provisions of that Act. In such case, there may be deducted under this schedule the full value as of the date of the second decedent's death of the property previously taxed and included in Schedule "G" and the full value of property acquired by equal exchange. Where the present decedent gave additional valuable consideration over and above the value of the property, given in exchange, there should be deducted such proportion of the value at date of the present decedent's death of the property acquired in exchange as the value of the original property bore to the entire consideration given. For example, an item of property valued at $10,000 at the time of the first decedent's death and $15,000 at the time of the second decedent's death, and which was given by the second decedent to the present decedent's death of the property acquired in exchange should be listed under Schedule "G" and two-thirds of such value deducted under this schedule.

IMPORTANT—If the right of deduction is not acquired under the Revenue Act approved February 24, 1919, it is governed by the provisions of the Act approved November 23, 1921, in which the same inactives apply as to Schedule "G," and only the amount of the value of the property previously taxed was included in the prior decedent's gross estate deducted under this schedule, but in no case to exceed the amount of the value of such property as is included in Schedule "G" and not deducted under Schedules "H" to "K" inclusive. This also applies although the property previously taxed was exchanged for other property included in Schedule "G."

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Estates subject to notice.—This notice must be filed for the estates of all resident decedents where in any case the value of the gross estate, as defined by the law, exceeds $50,000.

2. Persons required to file notice.—Where an executor or administrator has been appointed by court decree, he must file the notice, which must contain a statement of the value of all the property constituting the gross estate of the decedent. Except as hereinafter mentioned, all persons having actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent at the time of his death must file this notice. This requirement applies to agents, bankers, brokers, custodians, debtors, factors, fiduciaries, guardians, joint owners, partners, safe-deposit companies, trustees, warehouse companies, and all other persons having possession of property of the decedent. Such persons are relieved of the duty of filing notice only where the executor or administrator has, within the time prescribed, filed a notice including the property in the possession of such persons. In case of doubt, the notice should be filed.

The notice may be executed by one executor or administrator.

3. Time for filing notice.—An executor or administrator, appointed by court decree, must file the notice within two months after his qualification. Persons having actual or constructive possession of the property of the decedent, when required to file notice, must file the same within two months after the decedent's death.

4. Place of filing.—This notice must be filed with the Collector of Internal Revenue for the district in which the decedent had his domicile at time of death.

5. Gross estate.—The gross estate as defined by section 402 of the Revenue Act of 1921, approved November 23, 1921, includes—

- (a) Property which after decedent's death is subject to payment of charges, to expenses of administration, and to distribution as a part of his estate;
- (b) Interest of surviving spouse, as dower, curtesy, or estate in lieu thereof;
- (c) Property transferred or placed in trust in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death.
- (d) Property held jointly or as tenants in the entirety.
- (e) Property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by decedent.
- (f) (1) Insurance payable to a decedent's estate, his personal representatives, or to any person for the benefit of the estate.
- (2) Insurance payable to beneficiaries, other than the estate, in excess of $40,000.

6. Lien.—The tax is a lien for ten years upon the entire gross estate, except such part of it as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration allowed by any court having jurisdiction.

7. Penalties.—The penalty for knowingly making any false statement in this notice is a fine not to exceed $5,000, or imprisonment, or both. Penalty for failure to file notice as required is a fine not to exceed $500, and cost of suit.

8. Delinquency.—In the event of failure to file this notice within the two months prescribed by law, a detailed explanation under oath should accompany notice when filed.

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Estates subject to notice.—This notice must be filed for the estates of all nonresident decedents having any gross estate, as defined by the law, consisting of property situated in the United States, which includes the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

2. Persons required to file notice and time of filing.—This notice must be filed by all persons having possession of any property, situated within the United States, which forms part of the gross estate of a nonresident decedent. The notice must be filed within sixty days after receiving information of the decedent's death, or, where possession is acquired after such death, within sixty days after taking possession. This requirement applies to agents, bankers, beneficiaries, brokers, custodians, debtors, factors, fiduciaries, guardians, joint owners, partners, safe-deposit companies, transferees, warehouse companies, and all other persons having possession of property constituting part of the gross estate of the decedent.

3. Place of filing.—This notice must be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C.

4. Gross estate.—The gross estate, as defined by section 402 of the Revenue Act of 1913, approved February 24, 1919, includes:

- (a) Property which after decedent's death is subject to payment of charges, to expenses of administration, and to distribution as a part of his estate.
- (b) Interest of surviving spouse, as dower, courtesy, or estate in lieu thereof.
- (c) Property transferred or placed in trust in contemplation of death or to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death.
- (d) Property held jointly or as tenants in the entirety.
- (e) Property passing under a general power of appointment.
- (f) (1) Insurance payable to a decedent's estate, his personal representatives, or to any person for the benefit of the estate.

(2) Insurance payable to beneficiaries in excess of $40,000.

5. Property situated in the United States.—The notice is required only with reference to property situated in the United States. This includes all property, whether real or personal, which is actually situated in this country, including bonds, money on deposit in domestic banks, and debts due by domestic creditors. It also includes stock in domestic corporations, wherever the certificates may be kept, and life insurance payable by domestic insurance companies.

6. Liability for tax.—Any person in possession of property which constitutes a part of the estate of a nonresident decedent may be held personally liable for the payment of the estate tax in the event that the property is removed from the jurisdiction of the United States before the tax has been satisfied, or provision made for its payment.

7. Lien.—The tax is a lien for ten years upon the entire gross estate, except such part of it as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration allowed by any court having jurisdiction.

8. Penalties.—The penalty for knowingly making any false statement in this notice is a fine not to exceed $5,000, or imprisonment, or both. Penalty for failure to file notice as required is a fine not to exceed $500, and cost of suit.

9. Delinquency.—In the event of failure to file this notice within the sixty days prescribed by law, a detailed explanation under oath should accompany the notice when filed.

[Reverse of Form 705.]

INSTRUCTIONS

1. By whom notice must be filed.—This notice must be filed by each company, transfer agent, or registrar requested to make transfer of stocks or bonds owned by any person who at the time of death was a nonresident of the United States, and issued by a corporation organized in the United States. The term "United States" means the several States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

2. Time of filing.—This notice must be filed by the company, transfer agent, or registrar within two months following the date of death, or immediately upon receipt of the request for the transfer, unless the transfer is made upon the order of an executor or administrator appointed in the United States.

3. Place of filing.—This notice must be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C.

4. Supplemental data.—Copy of will, inventory, or other documents received with the order for transfer will assist the Bureau of Internal Revenue if submitted with this notice. Transfer of stock should not be made unless notice has been filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and permission to make such transfer has been granted.

50 Article 1. The various statutes.—The Federal estate tax was first imposed by the Act of September 8, 1916. This law was amended by the Act of March 3, 1917 (Title III), and the Act of October 3, 1917 (Title IX). These two statutes increased the rate of tax. The Revenue Act of 1918 (Title IV), which became effective 6.55 p. m., Washington, D. C. time, February 24, 1919, reduced the rates applicable to the smaller net estates as compared with those of Title IX of the Revenue Act of 1917, and contained a number of provisions not found in any of the prior acts. The Revenue

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Act of 1921 (Title IV) became effective at 3.55 p. m., Washington, D. C. time, November 23, 1921. It re-enacts without change the rates of Title IV of the Revenue Act of 1918, supplants all prior acts as to the estates of decedents dying after the effective date thereof, embodies numerous changes, but continues many of the provisions of the earlier acts. It is herein referred to as "the statute." References to other statutes are specific.

51 Art. 2. Transfers reached.—The statute subjects to tax transfers by will and under intestate laws, and also transfers made by the decedent in his lifetime, when made in contemplation of death or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, excepting, however, bona fide sales for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Transfers of certain other property interests are also included.

52 Art. 3. Neither a property nor an inheritance tax.—The Federal estate tax is imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every person dying after September 8, 1916, determined in the manner prescribed by the applicable law. (See Art. 1.) The tax is not laid upon the property, but upon its transfer from the decedent to others. The subject of tax is the transfer of the entire net estate, not any particular legacy, devise, or distributive share, and the relationship of the beneficiary to the decedent has no bearing upon the question of liability, or the extent thereof. The transfer of property is taxable, although it escheats to the State for lack of heirs.

ESTATES SUBJECT TO TAX.

53 Art. 4. Description of taxable estates.—The tax is imposed upon the transfer of the net estate. The term "net estate" has a distinct meaning in the statute, signifying the difference between the total value of the gross estate and the total of the authorized deductions. One of the deductions authorized in the estate of a resident decedent is the specific sum of $50,000, and consequently there is no net estate where the gross estate does not exceed that amount. No such deduction is authorized in the estate of a nonresident decedent. (See Arts. 53 to 58, inclusive.)

54 Art. 5. Definition of "resident" and "nonresident."—The statute provides (paragraph (5) of section 2) that the term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

55 A resident is one who, at the time of his death, had his domicile in the United States; or one who was a citizen of the United States at time of death and with respect to whose property any probate or administration proceedings are had in the United States Court for China. (See Sec. 411.) A missionary who, at the time of death, was serving as such under a foreign missionary board of any religious denomination in the United States, will be presumed to have died a resident of the United States, if domiciled therein at the time of his or her commission and departure for such service, and not a nonresident merely by reason of his or her intention to permanently remain in such service. (See Sec. 403(b).) Subject to the foregoing exceptions, and the presumption applying in the case of such missionaries, all other persons are nonresidents.

56 Except as stated above, and in section 400 of the statute in respect to the exemption accorded on account of military or naval service in the late war, the statute takes no account of the citizenship of the decedent, but prescribes different rules for the estates of residents and nonresidents.

57 A citizen of the United States is a nonresident if his domicile is in Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, or other foreign country, whereas a citizen of a foreign country is a resident if his domicile is in the United States. A person acquires a domicile in a place by living there, for even a brief period of time, with no definite present intention of later removing therefrom. Residence without the requisite intention to remain will not suffice to constitute domicile, nor will intention to change domicile effect such a change unless accompanied by actual removal.

DETERMINATION OF TAX LIABILITY.

58 Art. 6. Manner of determining liability.—The first step in the determination of tax liability is to ascertain the total value of the decedent's gross estate. (See Arts. 11 to 31, inclusive; also Art. 53.) The second step is to subtract from this value the total deductions authorized in order to arrive at the value of the net estate. (See Arts. 32 to 52, inclusive, as to estates of residents; and Arts. 54 to 58, inclusive, as to estates of nonresidents.) The third step is to obtain the sum of certain percentages of successive portions of the net estate, as provided by the applicable taxing act. (See Arts. 7 and 8.)

59 Art. 7. Rates of tax.—The Revenue Act of 1916, the amendment thereto of March 3, 1917, the Revenue Act of 1917, and the Revenue Act of 1918, each imposed different rates of tax. The rates imposed by the Revenue Act of 1921 are the same as those prescribed in the Revenue Act of 1918. In each act the rates contained therein are applicable to the estates of decedents dying on or after the effective date thereof, and prior to the effective date of the next succeeding act. A table of the several rates is given below:

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

- 60 The rates prescribed by the different acts, as set forth above, apply to the estates of decedents dying within the following dates:

Column 1, Revenue Act of 1916, effective Sept. 9, 1916, to Mar. 2, 1917, inclusive.

Column 2, amendment of Mar. 3, 1917, effective Mar. 3, 1917, to Oct. 3, 1917, inclusive.

Column 3, Revenue Act of 1917, effective Oct. 4, 1917, to 6.55 p. m., Washington, D. C., time, Feb. 24, 1919, inclusive.

Column 4, Revenue Act of 1918, effective 6.55 p. m. Feb. 24, 1919, to 3.55 p. m., Nov. 23, 1921 (Washington, D. C., time), on which last named hour and date the revenue Act of 1921, became effective.

- 61 Art. 8. Computation of tax.—For the purpose of computing the tax, the net estate is divisible into blocks, each block being taxed at a different and increasing rate. The preceding table gives the amount of the various blocks and the applicable rate of tax under each of the taxing acts. For example, the tax upon the net estate of $1,240,000 of a decedent dying on March 1, 1919, is computed as follows:

Amount of first block.....	$50,000 at 1 per cent	$500
Amount of second block.....	100,000 at 2 per cent	2,000
Amount of third block.....	100,000 at 3 per cent	3,000
Amount of fourth block.....	200,000 at 4 per cent	8,000
Amount of fifth block.....	300,000 at 6 per cent	18,000
Amount of sixth block.....	250,000 at 8 per cent	20,000
Remainder.....	240,000 at 10 per cent	24,000

Total net estate.....1,240,000 Total tax.....75,500

- 62 There is subjoined a table for ascertaining the tax without the detailed computation given above. An illustration of its use is as follows: The net estate of a decedent dying March 1, 1919, amounts to $1,240,000. By reference to the table it will be seen that the last complete block preceding this amount is $1,000,000, and that the total tax computed on a million dollars under the rates in force amounts to $51,500. Upon the remainder of the net estate, $240,000, the tax is computed at the rate set out in the next following line, or at 10 per cent. The tax on this amount is consequently $24,000. The following result is thus obtained:

Total tax on.....	$1,000,000 =	$51,500
Tax on.....	240,000 =	24,000
Totals.....	$1,240,000	$75,500

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

EXEMPT ESTATES—SERVICE IN WORLD WAR.

64 Art. 9. Exempt estates.—The first exemption from estate tax, on 8 account of military or naval service in the war against Germany, was contained in the Revenue Act of 1917, and applied to the estate "of any decedent dying while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States, during the continuance of the war in which the United States is now engaged, or if death results from injuries received or disease contracted in such service, within one year after the termination of such war," and was limited to the increased rates of tax imposed thereby, and to the estates of decedents dying after its passage.

65 In the Revenue Act of 1918 the exemption was extended to include the estate "of any decedent who has died or may die while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war or from injuries received or disease contracted while in such service," and embodied a retroactive provision rendering the exemption available under the former Acts, and authorized the refund of taxes collected under the provisions thereof from estates to which the exemption applied. Where such taxes have been paid or collected, a claim for refund on Form 843 should be filed accompanied by such of the proofs prescribed in Article 10 as may be applicable to the particular case. (See Arts. 63 and 96.)

66 The Revenue Act of 1921 exempts from tax the estates of two classes of decedents, namely: (1) Where the decedent died from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the war against the German Government. The term "military or naval forces of the United States" includes, among other units, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Army Nurse Corps, Female, and the Navy Nurse Corps, Female; but does not include personnel of the Public Health Service. (2) Where the decedent, a citizen of the United States, enlisted in the military or naval forces of any country associated with the United States in the prosecution of such war, and whose death resulted from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while serving in such forces, either prior to the entrance of the United States into such war, or during the time such country was associated with the United States in the prosecution thereof. The estate of such a decedent is not deprived of the benefit of this exemption by reason of the fact that, as a condition precedent to his enlistment in the military or naval forces of any such country, the decedent was required to take an oath of allegiance to such country or to the reigning sovereign thereof. Under the retroactive provision of this Act the exemption, as will be noted, is made available to the estates of those whose deaths resulted from injuries received or disease contracted "in line of duty" while serving, as above set out, in the military or naval forces of such a foreign country. The exemption is conditioned, both with respect to service in the military or naval forces of the United States and such a foreign country, upon death resulting from injuries received or disease contracted "in line of duty;" a condition which, in all cases, operates wherever the death occurred subsequent to the effective date of this Act. (See Art. 1.) The Act contains a refundment clause similar to that in the Revenue Act of 1918. (See Arts. 63 and 96.)

67 As to the United States, and so far as concerns the provisions of the various Revenue Acts imposing an estate tax, such war terminated March 3, 1921, by virtue of the joint resolution of Congress approved on that date.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

68 Art. 10. Exemption must be proved.—In every case where the exemption is claimed the right must be proved by the estate. Formal claim for exemption on Form 793, accompanied by supporting evidence, should be filed with the notice required by section 404 (see Art. 63), or as soon thereafter as the necessary evidence may be secured, and in any case not later than one year after the decedent's death. Where decedent died before his discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, and it is claimed that his death resulted from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty during the war with Germany, there should be submitted:

(1) In the case of a soldier, a certificate of the Adjutant General of the Army; in the case of a sailor, a certificate of the Surgeon General of the Navy; in the case of a Marine, a certificate of the Commandant of the Marine Corps; and in the case of a person who served in any auxiliary force comprehended within the term "military or naval forces of the United States," a certificate of the proper authority, showing the occurrence of death while in the service, and whether, by the official records, it resulted from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty during such war.

(2) In the event that the official records do not disclose all the pertinent facts, then affidavits of officers or enlisted men will be considered in connection with such records as to the incurrence of injury or disease in line of duty during such war.

69 Where the decedent died after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, there should be submitted:

(1) Certificate of discharge from the service, or a duly verified copy of such certificate.

(2) Certified copy of public record of death, showing cause of death.

(3) Affidavit or affidavits of the attending physician or physicians, setting forth decedent's medical history while under the treatment of such physician or physicians.

(4) Affidavits of officers or enlisted men or other evidence bearing upon the question whether death resulted from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States during such war.

70 Where it is claimed that the decedent, a citizen of the United States who enlisted in the military or naval forces of any country associated with the United States in the prosecution of such war, died from injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty while in such foreign service, as more fully explained in the third paragraph of this article, there shall be submitted:

(1) Evidence showing his citizenship at the time of such enlistment.

(2) A complete copy of the official records of his service in the forces of the foreign country, certified by the custodian thereof.

71 Where, in any case, it is determined by the Commissioner that the estate is entitled to the exemption, the executor will be notified to that effect, and his duties with respect to the tax will cease. If the evidence submitted in support of the claim is found not to be satisfactory, such further evidence will be called for, or such investigation instituted, as the Commissioner may direct. If it is determined that the estate is not entitled to the exemption, the executor will be required to file return and pay tax in the same manner as executors of other taxable estates.

GROSS ESTATE—GENERAL.

72 Art. 11. Character of interests included.—It is designed by the foregoing provision of the statute that there shall be included in the gross estate the value of all property of the decedent whether real or personal, tangible or intangible, the beneficial ownership of which was in the decedent in his lifetime, and which, upon his death, formed his estate.

73 The test which determines whether the value of a given interest is to be so included, pursuant to the foregoing provision of the statute, is that stated therein which requires that the property, after death, shall be subject to: (1) payment of the charges against the estate, (2) payment of the expenses of administration, and (3) distribution as a part of the estate.

74 The value of a vested remainder should be included in the gross estate. Nothing should be included, however, on account of a contingent remainder where the contingency does not happen in the lifetime of the decedent, and the interest consequently lapses at his death. Nor should anything be included on account of an interest or an estate limited for the life of the decedent. There should be included, however, the value of an annuity payable to, or an interest or an estate vested in, the decedent for the life of another person who survives him. For rules in valuing such remainders, annuities, and interests or estates pur autre vie, see Article 15.

75 Art. 12. Specific property to be included.—The value of all real property situated in the United States, and owned by the decedent at the date of his death, should be included in the gross estate, whether the decedent was a resident or a nonresident, and whether the property came into the possession and control of the executor or administrator or passed directly to heirs or devisees. The value of real property situated outside the United States should not be included, except as otherwise provided in Articles 55, 56, and 57, where deductions from gross estate are claimed and the decedent was a nonresident. Where the decedent was a resident, the value of all personal property owned by him should be included, wherever situated. Where decedent was a nonresident, the value of so much of his personal property as had its situs in the United States at the time of his death should be included, and the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, if deductions are claimed. (See Arts. 55, 56, and 57.) As to the situs of the personal property of nonresident decedents, see Article 53.

76 A cemetery lot owned by the decedent is part of his gross estate, but its value is limited to the salable value of such part of it as is not designed for the interment of the decedent or members of his family. Rents and interest which had accrued at the time of the decedent's death, whether then payable or not, and unpaid matured coupons, should be included. The value of notes or other claims held by the decedent should be included, though they are canceled by his will. As to the valuation of notes and claims, see Article 14, paragraphs 4 and 7. All bonds, whether federal, state, or municipal, and whether or not containing a tax-free covenant, should be included.

[Value of state and municipal bonds not to be excluded, ¶423.]

77 Dividends on either common or preferred stock should be included only where declared prior to the decedent's death and not reflected in the market value of the stock on the day of death. Thus dividends, both declared and payable to holders of record on a date prior to the decedent's death, should be included, provided the stock was selling "ex-dividend" on the date of death.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

78 Example: A 5 per cent dividend upon stock is declared March 1, payable on April 1 to stockholders of record on March 15. If the death occurred on March 10 and the market value on that day was 90, the value to be returned for both stock and dividend is 90, the dividend being reflected in the market value of the stock. If the death occurred on March 20, the dividend is not reflected in the market value, and must be returned in addition to the market value of the stock on March 20.

79 Art. 13. Value.—Property of the decedent should be returned at its market or sale value at the time of the decedent's death. The criterion of such value is the price which a willing buyer will pay to a willing seller for the property in question under the circumstances existing at the date of the decedent's death or within such reasonable period thereafter as would afford proper opportunity for an examination and sale thereof. Neither depreciation nor appreciation in value subsequent to the date of decedent's death is considered.

80 Art. 14. Rules for the valuation of property.—(1) Real estate.—Where real property has been sold, the amount received will be taken as its value provided the sale met the conditions laid down in Article 13. Where no sale has been made, the criterion of value is the best price which could have been obtained within a reasonable period of the decedent's death. The property should not be returned at the local assessed value thereof unless such value represents the true market value at the date of decedent's death. All relevant facts and all elements of value should be considered in every case.

81 (2) Stocks and bonds.—The value of stocks and bonds listed upon a stock exchange should be determined by taking the mean between the highest and lowest quoted selling price upon the date of death. If there were no sales on the date of death the value should be determined by taking the mean between the highest and lowest sales upon the nearest date either before or after the date of death if within a reasonable period. If the decedent died on a Sunday or holiday, the transaction of the next previous business day will govern. If the security is listed upon more than one exchange, the records of the principal exchange should be employed. In general, in valuing listed stocks and bonds the executor should observe care to consult accurate records to obtain value as of the date of death.

82 If the securities are not listed upon an exchange but are dealt in actively by brokers or have an active market, the value should be determined by taking the sale price as of the date of death or of the nearest date thereto if within a reasonable period. Securities which are not dealt in actively enough to establish market value clearly but in which there are occasional transactions should be valued upon the basis of the nearest sales to the date of death, provided such sales were in the normal course of business, between a willing buyer and a willing seller who were trying to make the best bargain possible. Where quotations are obtained from brokers or where evidence as to the sale of securities is obtained from the officers of the issuing companies, the executor is requested to preserve in his files the letters furnishing quotations for inspection when the return is verified by an investigating officer.

83 Where securities are actively quoted on a bid and asked basis and actual sales are not available, the bid price as of the date of death will be accepted as the value. In the case of corporate and other bonds where there is no active market, the value is to be determined by giving consideration to the soundness of the security, the interest yield, the date of maturity, and any other relevant factors.

84 Where there is no active market for the stock or securities (whether listed or unlisted) owned by the estate, or where the sales thereof made from time to time are seriously disproportionate in number of shares sold to the holdings of the decedent, and the executor proceeds in good faith promptly and within a reasonable time to make a bona fide sale or sales of any of such stocks or securities, the amount so realized will be accepted as the value. Sales, however, of only a few shares out of a large holding, or sales made without a real effort to secure the widest market possible, or sales made merely for the purpose of fixing value will not be considered as conclusive.

85 If in connection with the value of any particular security conditions of sale or ownership are such that the market value determined as indicated above would not afford a proper basis for the valuation of the decedent's securities, the Commissioner on final audit will establish the value by considering all other factors relating to the case. In any case where the estate contends that the value as established by the general rules stated above is not the fair market value for the security owned by the decedent on the date of his death, the evidence upon which it bases its contention should be filed with the return.

86 Stock in corporations where there have been no bona fide sales within a reasonable period of a number of shares fairly comparable to the decedent's holdings should be valued at what a willing buyer would pay to a willing seller, both being fully informed of the financial condition of the company at the date of death.

87 Where the decedent's holdings are relatively small, a copy of the balance sheet of the corporation nearest to the date of the decedent's death and a statement of the earnings and dividends for the five years preceding death should be submitted in duplicate with the return wherever practicable. Where the decedent's holdings are relatively large, and it is practicable to do so, the fullest financial data should be submitted in duplicate with the return, including in particular balance sheets of the corporation for the five years preceding death, a statement of the net earnings and dividends paid by the company over this period or over a sufficient number (either greater or less) of years prior to the decedent's death to demonstrate the normal earning capacity of the corporation, and a summary of the market conditions and future prospects of the company at the date of the decedent's death, together with a statement showing the relation, if any, of the decedent to the actual operation of the company, the effect of his death thereon, and any and all other factors which may have a bearing upon the value of the stock. Where examinations of a company have been made by accountants, engineers, or other technical experts as of or about the date of death, copies of their reports should be filed with the return where they can be obtained without undue trouble or expense to the estate. In general, the estate should show the basis of its return and submit any financial data that will enable the commissioner accurately and intelligently to review the case.

88 The full value of securities pledged to secure a loan should be included in the gross estate. If the decedent had a trading account with a broker, all securities belonging to the decedent and held by the broker at the date of death must be included at their market value on that date. Securities purchased on margin for the decedent's account and held by the broker should also be returned at their market value on the date of death. The amount of the decedent's indebtedness to the broker, or other person with whom the securities were pledged, will be allowed as a deduction from the gross estate. (See Art. 39.)

89 (3) Interest in business.—Care should be taken to arrive at an accurate valuation of any business in which the decedent was interested, whether as partner or proprietor. A fair appraisal as of the date of death should be made of all the assets of the business, tangible and intangible, and the business should be given a net worth equal to the amount which a purchaser, whether an individual or corporation, would be willing to pay therefor at a normal sale in view of the net value of the assets and the demonstrated earning capacity. Special attention should be given to fixing an adequate figure for the value of the good will of the business in all cases where the decedent has not, for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, agreed that his interest therein shall pass at his death to his surviving partner or partners.

90 In general, the rules stated above relative to the valuation of other property are applicable to the valuation of an interest as proprietor or partner in a business, and all evidence bearing upon such valuation should be submitted with the return, including copies of reports in any case where examinations of a business have been made by accountants, engineers, or other technical experts as of or about the date of decedent's death.

91 (4) Notes, secured and unsecured.—The value of notes, whether secured or unsecured, will be presumed to be the amount of unpaid principal, plus accrued interest to the date of decedent's death, unless the executor establishes the right to return them at a lower value, or as worthless. To establish such a right it must be shown by satisfactory evidence that the note, either in whole or in part, is uncollectible by reason of the insolvency of the party or parties liable, or for other cause, and that the property, if any, pledged or mortgaged as security is insufficient to satisfy it.

92 (5) Cash on hand or on deposit.—The amount of cash belonging to the decedent, either in his possession at the date of death or in the possession of another, should be included. Bank accounts should be returned in the amount on deposit to the credit of the decedent at the date of death. If checks then outstanding, given in discharge of bona fide, legal obligations of the decedent, and not as transfers coming within the provisions of section 402 (c), are subsequently honored by the bank and charged to the account, the balance remaining may be returned, provided the payments effected thereby are not claimed as deductions from the gross estate. Interest which the bank agreed to pay upon condition that the money remain on deposit for a period of time which expired subsequent to the decedent's death, should not be included.

93 (6) Patents, trade-marks, and copyrights.—The basis for valuation of an intangible asset of this character is the present worth of the estimated future earnings of the exclusive right during the rest of its existence. The return received by the decedent should be considered in estimating future earnings.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

94 (7) Accounts receivable, claims, judgments, etc.—A fair valuation for assets of this character at the time of death should be fixed by the executor according to the best information available to him at the time of making return. A right of action which terminated with the death of the decedent should not be included in the gross estate.

95 (8) Other property.—With respect to all other property, excepting household and personal effects, concerning which see paragraph (9) of this article, the executor should ascertain and return the fair market value thereof as of the day of decedent's death. As to property sold subsequent to death, see Article 13. Live stock, farm machinery, harvested and growing crops, where of an aggregate value of $2,000 or more, should be valued, as of the date of decedent's death, by one or more competent and disinterested appraisers, and their itemized appraisal thereof in writing, verified by the oath of each, should be filed in duplicate with the return on Form 706. The executor should also file in duplicate with the return his affidavit as to the completeness of the itemized lists of such property and of the disinterested character and qualifications of the appraiser or appraisers.

96 (9) Household and personal effects—General provisions.—Executors and administrators are required to have careful appraisal made of all household and personal effects of the decedent by one or more competent and disinterested appraisers, except as otherwise provided in subdivision (a) of this paragraph, and the appraisal thereof, reduced to writing and verified by the oath or oaths of the appraiser or appraisers, should be filed in duplicate with the return on Form 706, accompanied by the affidavit in duplicate of the executor as to the completeness of the itemized lists of such property and of the disinterested character and qualifications of the appraiser or appraisers. Where it is desired to effect distribution or sale of any portion of such property in advance of an investigation by a special officer of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, as provided in Article 72, notice thereof should be given to the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge for the Division wherein the decedent was domiciled at the date of his death, or, if such household and personal effects be not located in such Division, then to the Commissioner. If the return has not been filed, the notice should be accompanied by a verified appraisal of such property, and an affidavit of the executor as provided above. If personal inspection by a special officer of the Bureau is not deemed necessary the executor will be so advised. This procedure is designed to facilitate disposition of such property and to obviate future expense and inconvenience to the estate by affording the Commissioner an opportunity to make an investigation, should one be deemed necessary, prior to the sale or distribution. (For location of the officers of the several Internal Revenue Agents in Charge, and the territory embraced in their Divisions, respectively, see Appendix [¶777, herein].)

97 (a) When value is less than $2,000.—When the value of the personalty involved is less than $2,000, the detailed lists may be prepared by the executor personally. A room by room appraisal is desirable; and all the articles should be named specifically, except those of small value, such as common bric-a-brac or cheap books. A separate value should be given for each article named, except that the values of a number of articles contained in the same room may be grouped. The value of an article worth more than $50 should be stated separately. Such an entry as the following would be acceptable:

98 Dining room: Table, six chairs, three pictures (common prints), value $75; sideboard, $60; total, $135.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

99 If there should be included in the lot, however, jewelry or silverware of more than ordinary value, or articles having a marked artistic value, the executor must furnish an appraisal by a person or persons thoroughly qualified by training and experience to judge of the value of such articles.

100 In the case of effects having a total value of less than $2,000, the executor may furnish, as an alternative requirement, a sworn statement in duplicate of the aggregate total value of the property by a professional appraiser or appraisers of recognized standing and ability, or by a dealer or dealers in the class of personalty involved.

101 (b) When value is more than $2,000.—When the value of the effects is more than $2,000, detailed lists must be furnished, prepared by an appraiser or appraisers of recognized competence, or by a dealer or dealers in the particular classes of personalty involved. The lists must be prepared in the same detail as that indicated above for the executor's list. Where the personalty includes jewelry, silverware, or like articles, except in cases where the value of these items is insignificant, the appraisal of a reputable dealer or appraiser of jewelry must be furnished.

102 In the case of articles having marked artistic value, such as paintings, engravings, etchings, statuary, vases, oriental rugs, or antiques, the appraisal of an expert or experts will be required. A description of such articles should be fully given. Where paintings having artistic value are listed, the size, subject, and artist's name should be stated. In the case of oriental rugs, the size, make, and general condition should be given. The weight in ounces of silverware should be stated.

103 (c) Appraisers and basis of appraisals.—Where expert appraisers are to be employed, care should be taken to see that they are men of recognized competence with respect to the particular class of property involved. In order to facilitate the acceptance of the appraisal, appraisers should be employed whose competence is well established.

104 The value to be arrived at in appraising articles of this character is the fair market value on date of decedent's death. Where property is valued by legatees for purposes of distribution, such value will not necessarily be accepted. The original cost of the articles is not necessarily a proper basis, on account of depreciation or appreciation in value.

105 Art. 15. Valuation of annuities, and of life and remainder interests.

—Where the decedent was entitled to receive an annuity of a definite amount during the lifetime of another person, its present worth at the time of the decedent's death must be computed upon the basis of the expectancy of life of the other person. The table marked "A," a part of this Article, should be used for this computation. The amount payable annually should be multiplied by the figure in column 2 of the table opposite the number of years in column 1 nearest to the actual age of the other person.

106 Example: The decedent received under the terms of his father's will an annuity of $10,000 for the life of his elder brother. The brother at the decedent's death was 40 years 8 months old. By reference to the table the figure in column 2 opposite 41 years, the number nearest to the brother's age, is found to be 14.86102. The present worth of the annuity is therefore $148,610.20.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

107 Where the decedent was entitled to receive the annuity during a specified number of years, the table marked "B," a part of this article should be used.

108 Example: The decedent received under the terms of his father's will an annuity of $10,000 for a period of 20 years, 15 of which had expired at the decedent's death. By reference to the table it is found that the figure in column 2 opposite 5 years, the unexpired portion of the 20-year period, is 4.45182. The present worth of the annuity is, therefore, $44,518.20 (4.45182 multiplied by 10,000).

109 Where the decedent was entitled to receive the entire income of certain property during the life of another person, or for a term of years, and the annual rate of income for a period equal to or exceeding the life expectancy of such other person or such term of years, is fixed or definitely determinable at the time of the decedent's death, then the present worth of decedent's right to such income should be computed as explained above in the case of an annuity.

110 Example: The decedent's father placed $100,000 in trust, with directions that it be invested in state and municipal bonds and the entire income paid to the decedent during the life of his elder brother, who was 41 years old at the decedent's death. Before the decedent's death the money was invested in state and municipal bonds maturing at dates beyond such elder brother's life expectancy, and yielding annually an income of $5,000. In this case the rate of income is definitely determinable. By reference to the table, it is found that the present worth of an income of $5,000, dependent upon the life of a person 41 years of age, is $74,305.10 (14.86102 multiplied by 5,000).

111 Where the rate of annual income is not determinable, or where the decedent was entitled merely to the personal use of nonincome-bearing property, a hypothetical annuity at a rate of 4 per cent of the value of the property should be made the basis of the calculation.

112 Example: The decedent died before a fund of $100,000, of which he was entitled to receive the income during the life of a person 41 years old, had been invested by the trustees. The value of a hypothetical annuity of $4,000, dependent upon the life of such a person, is indicated by the table to be $59,444.08 (14.86102 multiplied by 4,000).

113 Where the decedent had a remainder interest in property subject to the life estate of another, and such interest constituted an asset of his estate, the present worth of the remainder interest at the time of death should be obtained by multiplying the value of the property at the time of death by the figure in column 3 of Table A opposite the number of years nearest to the age of the life tenant. Where the remainder interest is subject to an estate for a term of years Table B should be used.

114 Example: The decedent was entitled to receive property worth $50,000 upon the death of his elder brother, to whom the income for life had been bequeathed. The brother at the time of the decedent's death was 31 years old. By reference to the table it is found that the figure in column 3 opposite 31 years is 0.31262. The present worth of the remainder interest is, therefore, $15,631.

GROSS ESTATE—DOWER AND CURTESY.

117 Art. 16. Dower and curtesy.—This provision includes dower and curtesy and all interests created by statute in lieu thereof, although the estate or interest so created is different in character. The effect of the provision is to require the inclusion of the full value of the property, without deduction of the value of the interest of the surviving husband or wife. This rule does not apply to the estate of any decedent dying after September 8, 1916, and prior to 6.55 p. m., February 24, 1919 (the effective date of Title IV of the Revenue Act of 1918), unless the property has its situs in a jurisdiction wherein dower, curtesy, or the statutory interest in lieu thereof is subject to the payment of charges against the estate, the expenses of its administration, and is subject to distribution as part of the estate, or unless there has been an election to take property devised or bequeathed in lieu of dower, curtesy, or such statutory interest, and the property so taken has its situs in a jurisdiction by the laws of which it is subject to the payment of such charges and expenses, and to distribution as a part of the estate.

[Bequest in lieu of dower: Court decision, ¶262.]

GROSS ESTATE—TRANSFERS BY DECEDENT IN HIS LIFETIME.

118 Art. 17. Nature and time of transfer.—A transfer made by the decedent at any time, and in any manner, is taxable when made in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, provided it was not a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. To constitute such a sale it must have been made in good faith, and the price must have been a fair equivalent, and reducible to a money value. The value of property, where title was so transferred by the decedent before September 9, 1916, is to be included in his gross estate if his death occurred after the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1918, but it not to be included if he died prior thereto.

TRANSFERS IN CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH.

119 Art. 18. Nature of transfer.—The words "in contemplation of death" do not mean, on the one hand, a general expectation of death such as all persons entertain, nor, on the other, is the meaning limited to an expectation of immediate death. A transfer, however, is made in contemplation of death wherever the person making it is influenced to do so by such an expectation of death, arising from bodily or mental conditions, as prompts persons to dispose of their property to those whom they deem proper objects of their bounty. Such a transfer is taxable, although the decedent parts absolutely and immediately with his title to and possession and enjoyment of the property. Any transfer made by a decedent within two years prior to his death, without a fair consideration in money or money's worth, is presumed to be taxable if of a material part of his property and in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof. The executor must return the value, as of the date of decedent's death, of all property transferred by the decedent at any time in contemplation of death, where the transfer was not a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, and must disclose in the return all transfers of a material part of decedent's property made at any time without such consideration, but need not include in the gross estate the value of such thereof as he contends were not made in contemplation of death, in which event he may submit with the return evidence of all material facts tending to disclose the decedent's motive at the time, his then anticipation of death, and mental and physical condition.

120 The presumption of taxability of a transfer made within the two-year period may be rebutted by proof that it was not made under the conditions stated in the statute, and such proof must be filed with the return. Unless proof is submitted which is sufficient to rebut the presumption the transfer will be included in the gross estate in computing the tax.

121 The fact that a gift was made as an advancement, to be taken into account upon the final distribution of the decedent's estate, is not enough, standing alone, to establish taxability.

TRANSFERS INTENDED TO TAKE EFFECT AT OR AFTER DEATH.

122 Art. 19. General.—All transfers at any time made by the decedent, other than bona fide sales for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, which were intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, are taxable, and the value of the property so transferred, as of the date of the decedent's death, must be returned as a part of the gross estate.

123 Art. 20. Reservation of income.—A transfer, not amounting to a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, is taxable where the decedent reserved to himself during life the income of the property transferred. In such a case the transfer of the principal takes effect in possession and enjoyment at the death of the decedent, and the value of the entire property should be included in the gross estate. Where the decedent reserved a proportionate part of the income, only a corresponding proportion of the value of the property should be included in the gross estate. If, for example, he reserved one-half of the income, the value of one-half of the property transferred should be included in the gross estate. If he reserved an annuity, so much of the property as is necessary to produce the annuity should be included in the gross estate. A transfer is taxable in accordance with these principles whether the decedent reserved the annuity out of the property conveyed, or payment thereof to him was made by the grantee upon an express or an implied agreement to that effect. Where, however, the transfer was made in contemplation of death, the full value of the transferred property, as of the date of the decedent's death, should be included in the gross estate irrespective of the amount of income or of the annuity payable to the decedent.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

124 A gift of the principal intended to take effect either in possession or enjoyment at or after the decedent's death is taxable, although the income during the decedent's life was payable to some one other than himself. Example: The decedent transferred property to his son, the latter agreeing to pay the income to his mother during the decedent's life. The transfer to the son is taxable.

125 Art. 21. Power of revocation or control.—Property held in trust under any instrument in which the decedent reserved a power of revocation, or any power which has that effect, constitutes a part of the gross estate. For example, where a decedent placed property in trust for the present benefit of his son, but reserved the power to revoke the trust at any time during his life, the value of the entire property transferred should be included in the gross estate.

126 Art. 22. Valuation of property transferred.—The property to be valued is the interest owned and transferred by the decedent; but the value of such property must be ascertained as of the date of the decedent's death. Where the transferee makes additions to the property, or betterments, the enhanced value of the property at that date, due to such additions or betterments, is not to be included.

GROSS ESTATE—PROPERTY HELD JOINTLY.

127 Art. 23. Property held jointly or as tenants by the entirety.—The statute provides for the inclusion in the gross estate of interests held jointly by the decedent and any other person or persons, and of estates by the entirety. This class of property includes all interests, whether in real or personal property, where the survivor takes the entire property by right of survivorship, and consequently the decedent's interest therein forms no part of his estate for purposes of administration. It does not include interests held as tenants in common, where the interest of each tenant passes free from any right of survivorship.

128 The following are examples of this class: Real estate held by joint tenants; real estate held by husband and wife (known as an estate by the entirety); money deposited in a bank or trust company in the joint names of the decedent and another and payable to either or the survivor; and, in general, all securities and other personal property, where the title thereto was vested in the decedent and one or more other persons, subject to the right of survivorship.

129 Art. 24. Taxable portion.—The entire value of such property is prima facie a part of the decedent's gross estate, but as it is not the intent of the statute that there should be so included a greater part or proportion thereof than is represented by an outlay of funds, which, in the first instance, were decedent's own, or more than a fractional part equal to that of the other joint owner where neither had parted with any consideration in its acquirement, facts, which in a given case bring it within any one of the exceptions enumerated in the statute, may be submitted by the executor.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

130 Whether the value of the entire property, on only a part, or none of it, enters into the make-up of the gross estate, depends upon the following considerations: (1) So much of the property (whether the whole, or a part thereof) as originally belonged to the other joint owner, and which at no time in the past had been received or acquired by the latter from the decedent for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, forms no part of the decedent's gross estate. (2) Where the facts are otherwise the same as in (1), but the decedent paid to such other joint owner a consideration for the interest by him (the decedent) acquired in the property, then such portion of the value of the property, proportionate to the consideration so paid, constitutes a part of the gross estate. (3) Where the property, or a part thereof, or a part of the consideration wherewith it was acquired, had at any time been acquired by the other joint owner from the decedent as a gift, or for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, then such portion of the value of the entire property, proportionate to the consideration, if any, which in the first instance was paid from such other joint owner's own funds, forms no part of the gross estate. (4) Where the property was acquired by the decedent and his or her surviving spouse as tenants in the entirety by gift, will, or inheritance, then but one-half of the value of the property becomes a part of the gross estate. (5) Where acquired by the decedent and the other joint owner as joint tenants by gift, will, or inheritance, and their interests are not otherwise specified, or fixed by law, then one-half only of the value of the property is a part of the gross estate; or, where so acquired by the decedent and two or more persons, and the interests of the several joint tenants are not otherwise determinable, then the decedent and the other joint tenants surviving him shall each be deemed the owner of an equal fractional part, and the value of one only of such fractional parts is to be included in the gross estate.

131 The following are given as illustrative: (a) The decedent may have furnished the entire purchase price, in which case the value of the entire property should be included in his gross estate; (b) the decedent may have furnished a part only of the purchase price, in which case only the value of a corresponding portion of the property should be so included; (c) the decedent, prior to acquisition of the property by himself and the other joint owner, may have given to the latter a sum of money which later constituted such other joint owner's entire contribution to the purchase price of the property, in which case the entire value of the property should be included; (d) the other joint owner, at a date prior to the acquirement of the property, may have acquired from the decedent, for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, property which thereafter became as such, or in a converted form, part of the purchase price of the property. In such a case, the value of the property to be included is to be reduced proportionately to the consideration furnished by the other joint owner in the original transaction; (e) the decedent may have furnished no part of the purchase price, in which case no part of the property should be included; (f) the decedent and spouse may have acquired the property by will as tenants by the entirety, in which case one-half of the value of the property should be included.

GROSS ESTATE—PROPERTY PASSING UNDER POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

132 Art. 25. General rules.—The value of all property passing under a 14 general power of appointment must be included in the gross estate of the person exercising the power (known as the donee, or appointor)

Copyright 1928, by The Corporation Trust Company.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

where the power is exercised by will. It should also be so included when the power is exercised by deed or other instrument executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, the death of the donee of the power. The statute, however, does not require inclusion within the gross estate of the value of the appointed property in the case of a bona fide sale thereof by the donee of the power for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

133 Only property passing under a general power should be included.

A general power is one to appoint to any person or persons in the discretion of the donee of the power. Where the donee is required to appoint to a specified person or class of persons, the property should not be included in his gross estate. Property appointed under a general power should be so included, although the persons to whom the appointment was made would have taken the property had the power not been exercised. A copy of the instrument granting the power should be filed with Form 706 in all cases in order that the Commissioner may determine whether the power is general or special.

134 Example: The income of property is left to a person for life, with the right to name in his will the person who shall receive the property upon his death. He exercises this power in his will. Upon his death, the value of the property so appointed should be included in his gross estate.

135 Art. 26. Powers exercised before and after February 24, 1919.—The provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918, and those of the present statute, respecting transfers effected through the exercise of a general power of appointment are identical, hence, subject to the exception stated in the preceding article, namely, where the appointment was made for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, the value of all property so transferred by the decedent in the exercise of such a power must be included in the gross estate, if his death occurred subsequent to 6.55 p. m., February 24, 1919 (the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1918). Where, however, the decedent died prior to the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1918, the value of the appointed property is not to be so included.

GROSS ESTATE—INSURANCE.

136 Art. 27. Taxable insurance.—The statute provides for the inclusion

15 in the gross estate of certain forms of insurance taken out by the decedent upon his own life. Two kinds of insurance are taxable:

(a) all insurance receivable by, or for the benefit of, the estate; (b) all other insurance to the extent that it exceeds in the aggregate $40,000. The term "insurance" refers to life insurance of every description, including death benefits paid by fraternal beneficial societies, operating under the lodge system. Insurance is deemed to be taken out by the decedent in all cases where he pays the premiums, either directly or indirectly, whether or not he makes the application. On the other hand, the insurance is not deemed to be taken out by the decedent, even though the application is made by him, where the premiums are actually paid by the beneficiary, who may be either a person or a corporation. Where the decedent takes out insurance in favor of another person or corporation, as collateral security for a loan or other accommodation, and either directly or indirectly, pays the premiums thereon, the insurance must be considered in determining whether there is an excess over $40,000. The amount of the loan outstanding at decedent's death, with interest accrued thereon to that date, will be deductible in determining the net estate. (See Art. 39.) Where the decedent assigns a policy, and retains no interest therein, and thereafter pays no part of the premiums, the insurance will not be considered in determining whether there is such an excess.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

137 Art. 28. Insurance in favor of the estate.—The provision requiring the inclusion in the gross estate of all insurance receivable by the executor, without any deduction, applies to policies made payable to the decedent's estate or his executor or administrator, and all insurance which is in fact receivable by, or for the benefit of, the estate. It includes insurance taken out to provide funds to meet the estate tax, and any other taxes or charges which are enforceable against the estate. The manner in which the policy is drawn is immaterial so long as there is an obligation, legally binding upon the beneficiary, to use the proceeds in payment of such taxes or charges.

138 Art. 29. Insurance receivable by other beneficiaries.—The estate is entitled to only one exemption of $40,000 upon insurance receivable by beneficiaries other than the estate. For example, if the decedent left life insurance payable to three such beneficiaries in amounts of $10,000, $40,000, and $50,000 (total, $100,000), the amount of $60,000 should be returned for taxation, which is the excess of the sum of the three policies over the exempted amount. The word "beneficiaries," as used in reference to the $40,000 exemption, means persons entitled to the actual enjoyment of the insurance money.

139 Art. 30. Effective date of insurance provisions.—Insurance receivable by the estate must be included in the gross estate of all decedents who died after September 8, 1916. Insurance payable to beneficiaries other than the estate, however, need not be included in the gross estate of decedents who died before the effective date of Title IV of the Revenue Act of 1918, unless the insurance was originally payable to the estate, and the policy was thereafter assigned, or made payable, to a specific beneficiary in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after the decedent's death; such assignment or change in beneficiary not being for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

140 Art. 31. Valuation of insurance.—The amount to be returned in the case of any policy is the amount receivable by the estate or other beneficiary. In cases where the proceeds of a policy are made payable to the beneficiary in the form of an annuity for life or for a term of years, the present worth of the annuity at the time of death should be included in the gross estate. For the method of computing the value of such an annuity, see Article 15. Where the insurance contract gives an option to receive a fixed sum of money in lieu of an annuity, this sum, if accepted, represents the value of the insurance for the purpose of the tax. If such sum is not accepted the value of the annuity is to be included in the gross estate. Where there is more than one option, and none of them is convertible, the value of the insurance should be determined in accordance with the option actually exercised.

DEDUCTIONS—ESTATES OF RESIDENTS.

141 Art. 32. Deduction of claims, expenses, etc.—In order to be deductible under the foregoing provision of the statute, the item must fall within one of the several classes of deductions specifically enumerated therein, and must also, except in the case of deductible losses during the administration of the estate, be one the payment of which out of the estate is authorized by the laws of the jurisdiction under which the estate is being administered. Unless both of these conditions exist, the item is not deductible. Where the item is not one of those described, it is not deductible merely because payment is allowed by the local law. Where the amount which may be expended for the particular purpose is limited by the local law, no deduction in excess of such limitation is permissible. An item may be entered on the return for deduction though the exact amount thereof is not then known, provided it is ascertainable with reasonable certainty, and will be paid. No deduction may be taken upon the basis of a vague or uncertain estimate. When an uncertain or contingent liability was undetermined at the time of audit of the return by the Commissioner, and, as a consequence, deduction was not allowed therefor in such audit, the remedy is by a claim for abatement or refund when the liability and the amount thereof becomes fixed and determined. (See Arts. 93 to 97, inclusive.)

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

142 Art. 33. Effect of court decree.—The decision of a local court as to the amount of a claim or administration expense will ordinarily be accepted where the court passes upon the facts upon which deductibility depends. Where the court does not pass upon such facts its decree will, of course, not be followed. For example, where the question before the court is whether a claim should be allowed, the decree allowing it will ordinarily be accepted as establishing that the claim is valid and the amount of it. Where, however, a legacy is left to an executor in lieu of commissions, the allowance of the legacy does not establish that the executor's claim for commissions is equal to the amount bequeathed, and that this amount is consequently deductible. (See Art. 36.) Nor will the decree necessarily be accepted even where it purports to decide the facts upon which deductibility depends. It must appear that the court actually passed upon the merits of the case. This will be presumed in all cases where there is an active and genuine contest. Where the result reached appears to be unreasonable, this is some evidence that there was not such a contest, but it may be rebutted by proof to the contrary. Where the decree was rendered by consent, it will be accepted, provided the consent was a bona fide recognition of the validity of the claim—not a mere cloak for a gift—and was accepted by the court as satisfactory evidence upon the merits. It will be presumed that the consent was of this character, and was so accepted, where it is made by all parties having an interest adverse to the claim, when all aspects of the matter, including its effect upon taxation, are considered. The decree will not be accepted where it appears to be at variance with the law of the state; as, for example, if an allowance is made to an executor in excess of the rate prescribed by statute.

143 Art. 34. Funeral expenses.—An executor may deduct such amounts for funeral expenses as are actually expended by him, provided expenditures of this nature are a liability of the estate under the laws of the local jurisdiction. A reasonable expenditure by the executor for a tombstone, monument, mausoleum, or for a burial lot, either for the decedent or his family, may be deducted under this heading, provided such an expenditure is made a charge upon the estate by the local law. Included in funeral expenses is the cost of transportation of the person bringing the body to the place of burial.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

144 Art. 35. Administration expenses.—The amounts deductible from the gross estate as “administration expenses” are such expenses as are actually and necessarily incurred in the administration of the estate; that is, in the collection of assets, payment of debts, and distribution among the persons entitled. The expenses contemplated in the law are such only as attend the settlement of an estate by the legal representative preliminary to the transfer of the property to individual beneficiaries or to a trustee, whether such trustee is the executor or some other person. Expenditures not essential to the proper settlement of the estate, but incurred for the individual benefit of the heirs, legatees, or devisees, may not be taken as deductions. Administration expenses include (1) executor’s commissions; (2) attorney’s fees; (3) miscellaneous expenses. Each of these classes is considered separately. (See Arts. 36 to 38, inclusive.)

145 Art. 36. Executor’s commissions.—The amount deductible as executor’s or administrator’s commissions is such amount as has actually been paid or which at the time the return is filed it is reasonably expected will be paid, but no deduction will be allowed if no commissions are to be collected. Where the amount of the commissions has not been fixed by decree of the proper court, the deduction will be allowed on the final audit of the return provided: (1) That the Commissioner is reasonably satisfied that the commissions claimed will be paid; (2) that the amount entered as a deduction is within the amount allowable by the laws of the jurisdiction wherein the estate is being administered; and (3) that it is in accordance with the usually accepted practice in said jurisdiction in estates of similar size and character. Where the commissions claimed have not been awarded by the proper court the Commissioner on final audit may disallow the deduction in part or in whole, as the circumstances in his judgment justify, subject to such future adjustment as the facts may later require. If the deduction is allowed in advance of payment and payment is thereafter waived, it shall be the duty of the executor to notify the Commissioner.

146 Executors should note that the amounts received in payment of the commissions constitute taxable income and that amounts allowed on final audit are cross-referenced for income-tax purposes.

147 A bequest to an executor in lieu of commissions is deductible as an administration expense in the amount that it does not exceed commissions allowable under local law and practice.

148 Amounts paid as trustees’ commissions do not constitute expenses of administration and are not deductible, whether received by the executor acting in the capacity of a trustee or by a separate trustee as such.

149 Art. 37. Attorney’s fees.—The amount deductible as attorney’s fee is the amount actually paid as such or which at the time the return is filed it is reasonably expected will be paid. If on the final audit of a return, the fees claimed have not been awarded by the proper court and paid, the deduction will be allowed, provided that the Commissioner is reasonably satisfied that the amount claimed will be paid and that it does not exceed a reasonable remuneration for the services rendered, taking into full account the size and character of the estate and local law and practice.

150 Where the attorney’s fees have not been paid at the time of the final audit of the return, the Commissioner may disallow the deduction in part or in whole, as the circumstances may warrant, subject to such future adjustment as the facts may require.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

151 Attorney's fees incident to litigation instituted by the beneficiaries as to their respective interests do not constitute a proper deduction, inasmuch as expenses of this character are properly charges against the beneficiaries personally and are not administration expenses as contemplated by the statute.

152 Art. 38. Miscellaneous administration expenses.—This item includes expenses incident to court proceedings, or the administration of the estate, such as court costs, surrogates' fees, accountants' fees, appraisers' fees, clerk hire, etc. Expenses necessarily incurred in distributing the estate are deductible. This includes the cost of storing or maintaining property of the estate, where it is impossible to effect immediate distribution to the beneficiaries. Expenses for preserving and caring for the property may be deducted, but do not include additions or improvements; nor will such expenses be allowed for a longer period than the executor is required to retain the property. A brokerage fee for selling property of the estate is deductible where the sale is necessary in order to pay the decedent's debts, or the expenses of administration, or to effect distribution. Other expenses attending the sale are deductible, such as the fees of an auctioneer, where it is reasonably necessary to employ one.

153 Art. 39. Claims against the estate.—The amounts that may be deducted under this heading are such only as represent personal obligations of the decedent existing at the time of his death, whether then matured or not. Only such claims as are enforceable against the estate may be deducted.

154 Art. 40. Taxes.—Taxes upon real property should be accrued to the date of death in order to reflect in the gross estate the value of the property upon which they were imposed. This is done by ascertaining the time between the first day of the taxable period wherein the death occurs and the date of death, and computing the proportion of the entire tax upon the basis which this period bears to the entire taxable period. Such proportion of the tax had accrued upon the date of death, and is deductible.

155 Taxes upon personal property are either wholly deductible, or are not deductible at all, depending upon whether the tax did, or did not, become the personal obligation of the taxpayer in his lifetime. If the tax became his personal obligation during his life, the whole amount is deductible as a claim against his estate. If it did not become such personal obligation in his lifetime, no part of it is deductible. The question when the tax became the personal obligation of the taxpayer depends upon the law of the jurisdiction imposing the tax. Prima facie, the date when the tax became the personal obligation of the taxpayer is the date when the assessment was laid.

156 Federal taxes upon income received or accrued during the decedent's lifetime constitute a personal obligation of the decedent, and are deductible. Taxes upon income received after the decedent's death are not deductible. No estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance tax is deductible [see U. S. Supreme Court decision at ¶397].

157 Art. 41. Unpaid mortgages.—The full amount of unpaid mortgages on property included in the gross estate should be deducted under this heading, including interest which had accrued at the time of death, whether payable at that time or not. The full value of the real estate, without any deduction for mortgages, must be returned as part of the gross estate. Real property situated outside the United States is not a part of the gross estate of a resident decedent, nor may deduction be taken of any mortgage upon, or any indebtedness in respect to, such property when owned by a resident decedent.

158 Art. 42. Losses from casualty or theft.—There may be deducted under this heading losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise. If the loss is partly compensated, the excess of the loss over such compensation may be deducted. Losses not of the nature described are not deductible. Losses sustained by reason of depreciation or otherwise in the value of assets of the estate subsequent to the decedent's death, when not arising from any of the causes named, are not deductible. In order to be deductible a loss must occur during the settlement of the estate. Where property has been delivered to the beneficiary, settlement has been effected, and no deduction may be had for loss of the property.

159 Art. 43. Support of dependents.—The support during the settlement of the estate of dependents of the decedent should be deducted, but pursuant to the following rules:

(1) In order to be deductible, the allowance must be authorized by the laws of the jurisdiction in which the estate is being administered, and not in excess of what is reasonably required.

(2) The allowance for which deduction may be made is limited to support during the settlement of the estate. Any allowance for a more extended period is not deductible.

(3) There must be an actual disbursement from the estate to the dependents, but after payment has been made the right of deduction is not affected by the fact that the dependents do not expend the entire amount for their support during the settlement of the estate.

DEDUCTIONS—PROPERTY PREVIOUSLY TAXED.

160 Art. 44. Deduction of the value of transfers taxed within five
19 years.—Where there is included in the decedent's gross estate property received by him by gift, will, or inheritance from any person who died within five years prior to his death, or property acquired in exchange for property so received, the statute authorizes a deduction in behalf thereof, subject to the following conditions and limitations, namely:

(1) The two deaths must have occurred within five years of each other.

(2) The property must be identified either as the same which the decedent so received, or subsequently acquired in exchange therefor.

(3) The property must have formed a part of the gross estate, situated in the United States, of such prior decedent.

(4) An estate tax must have actually been paid by or on behalf of the estate of such prior decedent (the mere filing of a return for such estate not being sufficient).

(5) The property, or that acquired in exchange therefor, in so far as it constitutes a part of the decedent's gross estate, is, for the purpose of inclusion therein, to be valued as of the date of the decedent's death.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(6) The deduction, however, is limited to the value which the Commissioner placed on the property in determining the value of the gross estate of the prior decedent.

(7) The deduction is also limited to the extent that the value of the property, or that acquired in exchange therefor, is included in the decedent's gross estate. (See example following the next paragraph.)

(8) The deduction is further limited to the extent that the value of the property, or of that so acquired in exchange, is not deducted under paragraphs (1) or (3) of subdivision (a) of section 403.

161 Example: The decedent's father died January 1, 1917. Included in his gross estate was a tract of land comprising 200 acres upon which the Commissioner placed a value for estate tax purposes of $20,000. The tax on the father's estate was paid. The son, having inherited the tract from his father, sold 100 acres thereof on January 1, 1920, for $20,000, and commingled the proceeds with his other funds. On the son's death, which occurred January 1, 1921, the remaining one-half of the land was returned as a part of his gross estate at $20,000, which was the fair market value thereof as of the date of his death. Since only one-half of the tract was included in the son's gross estate, the deduction is limited to one-half of the value placed by the Commissioner upon the whole tract when determining the value of the father's gross estate, or $10,000.

162 Under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918 the deduction was available only where the prior decedent died after October 3, 1917, the date of the passage of the Revenue Act of 1917, and the decedent's death occurred subsequent to the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1918. But under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1921 the right to such deduction is made available to the estates of all decedents dying since September 8, 1916. Where, under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918, or any prior act of Congress imposing an estate tax, the deduction was not available, the right thereto is to be determined in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 403 of the Revenue Act of 1921, but where available under the Revenue Act of 1918, it is governed by paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 403 of that act. Where the tax has been paid without taking the deduction, a claim for refund may be made, as provided by Article 96.

163 The burden of proving that the estate is entitled to the deduction rests upon the executor.

164 Art. 45. Property originally received.—If the property originally received from the prior decedent is included in the decedent's gross estate, the executor must describe it fully, and prove its identity.

165 Art. 46. Property acquired in exchange.—The deduction for substituted property is limited to property acquired in exchange for the identical property received from the prior decedent. Where there is a subsequent exchange, the right to deduction is lost.

166 In the case of an exchange the executor must describe and identify fully both the property originally received from the prior decedent and the property acquired in exchange therefor. He must also state the date of the transaction by which the exchange was effected and the name and address of the transferee. If the exchange was made by written instrument of public record, a precise reference must be made to the record containing a transcript of the instrument, and, if by instrument not of record, a copy of the instrument itself must be supplied. If there was no written instrument, an affidavit as to the facts of the exchange by one or more persons having personal knowledge of the matter must be furnished.

DEDUCTIONS—TRANSFERS FOR PUBLIC, CHARITABLE, ETC., USES.

167 Art. 47. Transfers for public, charitable, religious, etc., uses.—In the estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1917, deduction may be taken of the value of all property transferred by will, or by the decedent in his lifetime in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (not including, however, the value of property sold for a fair consideration in money or money's worth), where, in either case, the property is, or has been, transferred (1) to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes; or (2) to or for the use of any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes (including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals), where no part of the net earnings of the corporation or association inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; or (3) to a trustee or trustees exclusively for one or more of the purposes enumerated in (2).

168 Where a trust is created for both a charitable and a private purpose, deduction may be taken of the value of the beneficial interest in favor of the former only in so far as such interest is presently ascertainable, and hence severable from the interest in favor of the private use. Thus, when money or property is placed in trust to pay the income to an individual during his life, and then to pay or deliver the principal to a charitable corporation, or to apply it to a charitable purpose, the present value of the principal is deductible. For the manner of determining such value, see Article 15.

169 The deduction is not limited, in the estates of resident decedents, to transfers to domestic corporations or associations, or to trustees for use within the United States.

170 Art. 48. Religious, charitable, scientific, and educational corporations.—A corporation or association to which such a transfer was made must meet three tests: (1) it must be organized and operated for one or more of the specified purposes; (2) it must be organized and operated exclusively for such purpose or purposes; and (3) no part of its net earnings shall inure to the benefit of private stockholders or individuals.

171 The estate is not deprived of the right to deduct the value of property so transferred by reason of the fact that private individuals are the recipients of the benefits which the corporation or association dispenses. Such right is, however, lost wherever any part of the net earnings of the corporation or association inures to the benefit of a private stockholder or individual. Thus, if the shareholders or members of the corporation or association are entitled, upon a dissolution thereof, to receive the proceeds of its property, including accumulated net earnings, no right of deduction exists, even though the by-laws provide that the shareholders or members shall not receive dividends or other return upon their shares or interests.

172 Art. 49. Proof required.—In order to prove the right of the estate to this deduction the executor must submit:

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(1) Duplicate copies of the will of the decedent or the instrument, if any, in the case of a transfer of property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death, as required by Article 69. Where copies of the will are submitted it will be sufficient if one of these copies is certified, but in such cases the collector should forward the certified copy to the commissioner.

(2) An affidavit by the executor stating whether any action has been instituted to contest the will and whether, according to his information and belief, any such action is contemplated.

(3) Such other documents or evidence as may be requested by the commissioner on review. A return will not be considered as complete within the meaning of section 407 of the act until all such evidence has been submitted.

173 Art. 50. Conditional bequests.—Where the transfer is dependent upon the performance of some act or the happening of some event in order to become effective, it is necessary that the performance of the act or the occurrence of the event shall have taken place before the deduction can be allowed.

174 Where the legatee, devisee, donee, or trustee is empowered to divert the property or fund, in whole or in part, to a use or purpose which would have rendered it, to the extent that it is subject to such power, not deductible had it been directly so bequeathed, devised, or given by the decedent, deduction will be limited to that portion, if any, of the property or fund which is exempt from an exercise of such power.

175 Art. 51. Effective date.—The deduction may be claimed by the estates of all decedents dying after December 31, 1917. Where the tax has been paid without taking the deduction, a claim for refund may be made, as provided by Article 96.

SPECIFIC EXEMPTION.

176 Art. 52. Specific exemption.—There may be deducted from the gross estate of all resident decedents a specific exemption of $50,000. No such exemption is allowed in the estates of nonresident decedents. If more than one return is made for purposes of the tax, the exemption may be taken but once.

ESTATES OF NONRESIDENTS.

177 Art. 53. Situs of property of nonresident decedents.—Bonds actually within the United States, moneys due on open accounts by domestic debtors, and stock of a corporation or association created or organized in the United States, constitute property having its situs in the United States. On the other hand, insurance upon the life of a nonresident, and moneys deposited with any person or corporation carrying on the banking business in the United States by or for a nonresident not engaged in business in the United States at the time of his death, are not to be regarded as property situated therein. [U. S. bonds, etc., see ¶308.]

178 Property of which the decedent has made a transfer, or with respect to which he has created a trust, in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, death, is deemed to be situated in the United States if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

DEDUCTIONS—ESTATES OF NONRESIDENTS.

179 Art. 54. Net estate.—The gross estate of a resident and of a non-
22 resident are made up in the same way. In ascertaining the net estate, however, the transfer of which is subject to tax, there is a radical difference between the two cases. The net estate in the case of a resident is determined by making specified deductions from the entire gross estate, whereas the net estate in the case of a nonresident is determined by making the deductions from the value of so much of the gross estate as is situated in the United States. Thus, in substance, the statute imposes the tax only upon the transfer of so much of the estate of a nonresident as, under the terms of the statute, had its situs in the United States. On the other hand, the estates of nonresidents are not entitled to the specific exemption of $50,000. (See Art. 58.)

180 Art. 55. Deduction of claims, expenses, etc.—In estates of non-
23 residents, deduction from gross estate may be taken, subject to the
26 limitations herein subsequently to be referred to, of disbursements for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, amounts reasonably required and actually expended for the support during settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction under which the estate is being administered. Treatment of the several deductions enumerated above will be found in Articles 32 to 43, inclusive. No deduction may be taken of any income taxes upon income received after the death of the decedent, or of any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes. It is immaterial whether the amounts to be deducted were incurred or expended within or without the United States, but certain limitations are imposed which do not apply to estates of resident decedents, namely: (1) Only that proportion of the aggregate thereof is deductible which the value of that part of the gross estate, which at the time of decedent's death, was situated in the United States, bears to the value of the entire gross estate, wherever situated; and in no event may a sum be deducted in excess of 10 per centum of the value of that part of the gross estate which at the time of death was situated in the United States. (See Art. 58.) Such 10 per centum limitation does not apply to the deduction subsequently considered in Articles 56 and 57. (2) No deduction whatever may be taken unless the executor includes in the return the value at the date of the nonresident's death of that part of the gross estate not situated in the United States.

181 In order that the Commissioner may properly pass upon the items claimed as deductions, the executor should submit a certified copy of the schedule of liabilities, claims against the estate and expenses of administration filed under the foreign estate, succession, or death-duty act; or, if no such schedule was filed, a certified copy of the schedule of such liabilities, claims and expenses filed with the foreign court in which administration was had; or, if items of deduction allowable under section 403 (b) (1) were not included in either such schedule, or, if no such schedules were filed, then the affidavit of the foreign executor setting forth the facts relied upon as entitling the estate to the benefit of the particular deduction or deductions.

182 Art. 56. Deduction of value of transfers taxed within five years.—
 24 The right to deduct the value of property received by a nonresident 26 decedent from any person dying within five years prior to his death, or of the value of property acquired in exchange for property so received, is governed by the same rules as those which apply to estates of resident decedents, subject to the two following exceptions: (1) That such right is limited to the extent that the value of the property, or of that acquired in exchange therefor, is not deducted under paragraphs (1) or (3) of subdivision (b) of Section 403; (2) That such right is not available to any extent unless the executor includes in the return the value at the time of the decedent's death of that part of the gross estate not situated in the United States. (See Arts. 44 to 46, inclusive.)

183 Art. 57. Deduction of value of transfers for public, charitable, re-
 25 ligious, etc., uses.—The right to deduct the value of property trans-26 ferred by nonresidents for public, religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes is governed by the same rules as those applying to estates of resident decedents (Arts. 47 to 51, inclusive), subject, however, to the two following exceptions, namely: (1) That the right is limited to transfers to corporations and associations created or organized in the United States, or to trustees for use within the United States, and, (2) is then available only where the executor includes in the return the value at the time of the nonresident decedent's death of that part of the gross estate not situated in the United States.

184 Art. 58. Determination of net estate.—The following example will show the manner of determining the net estate of a nonresident decedent. The gross estate, wherever situated, amounts to $1,000,000, of which $200,000 represents the value of the property having its situs within the United States (the term "United States" including not only the several States, but also the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia). The funeral expenses, administration expenses, and claims against the estate aggregate $75,000, and there are charitable bequests, for use within the United States, amounting to $25,000. Hence the property situated within the United States constitutes 20 per cent of the entire gross estate wherever situated, and a like percentage of the $75,000 is $15,000. As the last named amount does not exceed 10 per cent of the value of the property situated in the United States, the whole thereof is deductible. The following result is accordingly obtained:

Gross estate within the United States.....	$200,000
20 per cent of $75,000.....	$15,000
Charitable bequests for use within the United States.....	25,000
	40,000

Net estate..... $160,000

185 For the manner of computing the tax on the net estate, see Article 8.

In the example given, had the funeral expenses, administration expenses and claims against the estate aggregated $150,000, 20 per cent thereof, or $30,000, would not have been deductible for the reason that it would have exceeded 10 per cent of the value of the property situated in the United States; such 10 per cent being the maximum permitted by the statute.
 The deduction would accordingly have been limited to 10 per cent of $200,000, plus the charitable bequests, or a total of $45,000, and the resultant net estate would have been $155,000, instead of the amount given in the example.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

186 Art. 59. Payment of tax.—The provisions relating to rates and payment of the tax are the same in estates of nonresidents and of residents. The statute provides that the executor shall pay the tax. If no executor or administrator has been appointed, every person in either the actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent is constituted by the statute an executor for the purpose of tax payment, and is liable for the tax to the extent of the property so in his possession. All checks, drafts, or money orders should be made payable to the order of Collector of Internal Revenue. (See Arts. 79 to 83, inclusive.)

PRELIMINARY NOTICE—ESTATES OF RESIDENTS.

187 Art. 60. When notice required.—A preliminary notice is required to 31 be filed in the case of every resident decedent whose gross estate exceeded $50,000 in value at date of death. This notice must be filed in duplicate with the collector in whose district the decedent had his domicile at the time of death. Where there is doubt as to whether the gross estate exceeds $50,000, the notice should be filed, as a matter of precaution, in order to avoid penalties.

188 Art. 61. Notice by executor or administrator.—The duly qualified executor or administrator is required to file such preliminary notice on Form 704, copies of which may be obtained from the collector, within two months after qualifying as such, if notice has not already been filed. The primary purpose of the notice is to advise the Government of the existence of taxable estates, and filing should not be delayed beyond the two-months period because of uncertainty as to the exact value of the assets. Since the filing of the notice within the prescribed period is mandatory, the estimate of the gross estate called for by the notice is merely the best approximation of value which can be made within the time allowed. The instructions upon the back of the form should be read carefully before executing the notice. The signature of one executor or administrator upon Form 704 is sufficient. For penalties for delinquency in filing notice, or for filing a false or fraudulent notice, see Articles 88 to 90, inclusive.

189 Art. 62. Notice by others than duly qualified executor or administrator.—The term "executor" embraces any person in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent at the time of the latter's death, where there is no duly qualified executor or administrator. The notice on Form 704 must be filed by such persons in every case where an executor or administrator has not duly qualified as such within two months next following the decedent's death. Where, however, an executor or administrator qualifies within such period, the duty of filing the notice devolves upon him, and all other persons are relieved therefrom. [See ¶311.]

190 Art. 63. Exemption claimed on account of military service; notice required.—The executors of estates claiming the right to exemption from the tax under the provisions of Section 401 (see Art. 9), are required to file the two-months notice with the proper collector in the same manner as the executors of taxable estates. The executor should, in addition, write across the face of the form the words "Exemption claimed on account of military service."

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

NOTICE—ESTATES OF NONRESIDENTS.

191 Art. 64. Estates of nonresidents; preliminary notice.—In estates of 31 nonresidents, notice on Form 705 should be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C., by every duly qualified executor or administrator. The notice is necessary if any part of the decedent's gross estate was situated in the United States at the time of death, regardless of the value of that part or of the entire gross estate. If no executor or administrator has been appointed, notice must be filed within two months after the date of death by every person in either the actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent within the United States at the time of his death. If such person has no knowledge of the decedent's death within two months following its occurrence, he should file the notice immediately upon obtaining such knowledge. If there is a delay of more than two months after the death in the appointment of an executor or administrator, persons so in possession should file notice. The term "person in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent" (Section 400) includes, among others, the decedent's agents and representatives; safe-deposit companies, warehouse companies, and similar custodians of property in this country of a nonresident decedent; brokers holding as collateral securities belonging to the decedent or investment funds owned by the decedent, and debtors of the decedent in this country, but does not include any person, corporation, or association carrying on the banking business with whom or with which money was deposited by or for the decedent, unless, however, the decedent was engaged in business in the United States at the time of his death.

192 Art. 65. Transfer agents' notice.—A notice on Form 714 is required to be filed whenever a corporation, its transfer agent, registrar, or paying agent, is called upon to make a transfer of stock or bonds, or to pay dividends or interest, to any successor in interest of a nonresident stockholder or bondholder who died after September 8, 1916, unless the transfer is made upon the order of an executor or administrator appointed in the United States. The notice is required for dividends declared, and for interest which had accrued on bonds, prior to the death of the decedent, although payable thereafter. Notice should be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C., within two months following the date of death, or immediately upon receipt of the request for transfer or payment. A transfer agent should be vigilant to report all cases in which the fact of the death of a nonresident appears. Where the securities are received without the personal assignment of the decedent, but with the transfer order of the foreign executor, it is clear that the case should be reported. Where the securities bear the personal assignment of the decedent, the transfer should be reported if made upon the order of a foreign executor, or if information is received in any other manner that the record owner has died a nonresident of the United States.

193 In order to prevent loss of the tax upon nonresident estates, it is essential that transfer agents exercise great care in reporting all transfers of the kind described. Their records will be examined from time to time by internal-revenue officers to determine whether this regulation is being strictly complied with. Failure to file notice in the manner prescribed will render the transfer agent liable to a fine.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

194 Art. 66. Transfer of stocks and bonds of nonresident decedents; how made.—Wherever a transfer agent is required to file the notice as provided in Article 65, he shall not make transfer of any stocks or bonds standing in the name of a nonresident decedent until there has been delivered to such collector of internal revenue as may be designated by the Commissioner the bond of the party to whom the stocks or bonds are to be transferred with corporate surety in an amount to be fixed by the Commissioner, not exceeding in amount the value of the stocks or bonds to be transferred, conditioned for the payment of the tax upon the transfer of the decedent's net estate. Upon receipt of such notice the Commissioner will at once, upon request, fix the amount for which the bond is to be given. In lieu of such bond a deposit, either of money or of bonds of the United States, of the amount so fixed may be made with such collector of internal revenue as the Commissioner may designate.

195 Where bonds of the United States or moneys are deposited in lieu of the delivery of such corporate bond, return will be made thereof to the depositor after payment in full of the tax on the transfer of the decedent's net estate. If, however, the tax be not paid in full on or before the due date thereof, or within such period as payment may have been extended by the Commissioner, the collateral will be subjected to payment of the tax, or the then unpaid balance thereof, and the excess of the deposit, or of the proceeds thereof remaining, if any, will be returned to the depositor. In lieu of the provisions and restrictions hereinbefore set forth, transfer agents are authorized to make transfer of stocks and bonds standing in the name of a nonresident decedent to the duly qualified ancillary executor or administrator within the United States, provided that such transfer agent at the time of making such transfer gives notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

THE RETURN—ESTATES OF RESIDENTS.

196 Art. 67. When return required.—Date of filing.—A return on Form 31 706 is required in the case of every resident decedent whose gross 32 estate, as defined in the statute, exceeded $50,000 in value. This return must be filed with the collector for the district in which the decedent was domiciled at the time of his death. It must be filed in duplicate within one year after the date of death. When the due date for filing the return, Form 706, falls on a Sunday or on a legal holiday, the due date for filing will be the day following such Sunday or legal holiday.

197 If it is impossible for the executor to file a reasonably complete return within one year from the date of death, the Commissioner may, upon application from the executor showing good and sufficient cause, grant extensions of time not to exceed a total of 180 days from the due date, and no single extension to exceed 60 days. At the expiration of the last extension period granted, a return as complete as possible must be filed, and the executor may thereafter file an amended return when the condition of the estate permits. An extension of time for filing the return does not operate to extend the time for the payment of the tax, which is due one year after the decedent's death unless an extension of time in which to make payment has been obtained as provided in article 82.

198 Art. 68. Persons liable for return.—The statute provides that the duly qualified executor or administrator shall file the return. If there is more than one executor or administrator, the return must be made jointly by all. Where no executor or administrator has been appointed, every person in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent is constituted by the statute an executor for the purposes of the tax, and is required to make and file a return as provided by Section 404. Where, in any case, the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate, he is required to give all the information he has as to such property, including a full description, and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest in the property. Where the executor is unable to make a return as to any property, the statute requires every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, upon notice from the collector, to make return as to such part of the gross estate. For penalties for delinquency in filing return, or for filing a false or fraudulent return, see Articles 88 to 90, inclusive.

199 Art. 69. Preparation of return.—The return must be made on Form 706, copies of which will be supplied by the collector. It must contain an itemized inventory, by schedule, of the property constituting the gross estate, and of the deductions. The instructions printed on the form should be carefully followed. All documents and vouchers used in preparing the return should be retained by the executor, so as to be available for inspection whenever required. Duplicate certified copies of the will, if any, must be submitted with the return, together with duplicate copies of the other documents required by the instructions printed on the form, or any documents which the executor may desire to submit with the return in explanation thereof.

200 Art. 70. Supplemental data.—The statute provides that the executor, in addition to filing notice and return, shall furnish such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax. It is therefore the duty of the executor to furnish upon request copies of any documents in his possession relating to the estate, or on file in any court having jurisdiction over the estate, appraisal lists of any items included in the gross estate, copies of balance sheets or other financial statements relating to the value of stock, and any other information obtainable by him that may be found necessary in the determination of the tax. Failure to comply with such a request will render the executor liable to a fine not to exceed $500, and proceedings may be instituted in the proper United States court to secure compliance therewith. (See Sections 410 and 404.)

201 Art. 71. Procedure where no return has been made.—Section 405 of the statute provides that if no return is filed for the estate of a decedent, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return. The Commissioner may amend this return from such knowledge or information as he can obtain, through testimony or otherwise. A return so made by the Commissioner, or made by the collector or deputy collector, is a sufficient basis for assessing the tax. Where a tax is found to be due upon such a return, both the estate and the executor will be liable for penalties as well as for the tax.

202 Art. 72. Investigation of returns.—An investigation of every return for estate tax will be conducted to verify its accuracy. The investigation will be made by special officers of the Bureau. The fact that an investigation is made does not reflect upon the competence or good faith of the executor, since investigations are required in all cases. The executor should co-operate with the examining officer in order that the tax liability may be correctly determined and the case closed. During the course of the investigation the examining officer will inspect the books and records of the estate, interview the executor and other persons having knowledge of the decedent's affairs, verify the value of the assets and the deductions, and take such other steps as may be necessary in order that the correct amount of tax may be determined.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

203 Upon completion of the investigation the executor will be apprised by the examining officer of his findings, and will be given an opportunity to discuss the case and present such data as he may desire the Commissioner to consider in connection with the examining officer's report. Upon the completion of a review and audit by the Commissioner, the executor will be informed by letter of the result thereof. If the letter contains notification of an amount of unpaid tax, such unpaid amount should be remitted promptly to the collector, and if not paid within the time specified by the applicable provisions of section 406 or section 407, interest will be added as required thereby. (See Art. 83.)

204 It is the purpose of the Commissioner to make these investigations as soon as practicable after the filing of the return. Where the executor files a complete return, and makes written application to the Commissioner for a determination of the tax and discharge from personal liability therefor, the Commissioner will, within one year after receipt of such application, notify the executor of the amount of the tax, and, upon payment thereof, the executor will be discharged from personal liability for any additional estate tax thereafter found to be due. (See Sec. 407.) This provision applies also to cases arising under the Revenue Act of 1918. Attention is here directed to Section 250 (d) of the statute which embodies a provision, "That in the case of income received during the lifetime of a decedent, all taxes due thereon shall be determined and assessed by the Commissioner within one year after written request therefor by the executor, administrator, or other fiduciary representing the estate of such decedent: * * *"

THE RETURN—ESTATES OF NONRESIDENTS.

205 Art. 73. Return of estates of nonresidents.—A return on Form 706 must be filed in duplicate with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C., or with such collector of internal revenue as the Commissioner may designate, within one year after the date of death of ever nonresident decedent, if any part of the gross estate of such decedent was situated in the United States at the time of his death. It is the duty of the duly qualified executor or administrator to file a return for the whole of that part of the gross estate situated in the United States, whatever its value. If the duly qualified executor or administrator is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate, he is required to give all the information available to him as to such part, including a description thereof and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein. If deductions are claimed, see Articles 55, 56 and 57. If no executor or administrator has been appointed, all persons in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent situated in the United States are required to file a return for such portion of the gross estate as had its situs therein. (See Art. 53.)

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

206 Art. 74. Supplemental data.—Pursuant to the provisions of Section 404, with respect to furnishing supplemental data, the duly qualified executor or administrator of a nonresident decedent is required to file with the return:

(1) Certified copy of will, or, if the decedent left several wills, to govern in different jurisdictions, certified copy of each will.

(2) Certified copy of inventory of property filed under a foreign estate, succession or death-duty act; or, if no such inventory was filed, a certified copy of inventory filed with the foreign court of probate jurisdiction.

207 The specified information is required whether or not the executor wishes to claim the deductions authorized in section 403(b).

PRIVILEGED CHARACTER OF RETURNS.

208 Art. 75. Returns confidential.—All estate tax returns and notices are treated as privileged communications and may not be exhibited to any person other than the executor or his duly authorized agent, except as stated in Article 76. This requirement of secrecy will be rigidly enforced, and extends to information of a private nature submitted or obtained in connection with a return or notice. The requirement does not operate to prevent internal revenue officers from disclosing the returned value of any item or the amount of any specific deduction, where such disclosure is necessary in order to arrive at a correct determination of the tax. This right of disclosure, however, does not extend to such information as the amount of the estate, the amount of tax, or other general data. Nor are the records in possession of the Bureau, whether on file with the Commissioner or the collector, open to inspection, except as provided in Article 76.

209 Art. 76. Disclosure to persons having material interest.—Where any person other than the executor has a material interest in ascertaining any fact disclosed by the return, or in obtaining information as to the payment of the tax, he shall make a written application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for such information, setting forth the nature of his interest and the purpose of the application. The Commissioner will review the application, and, if it is approved, the collector will be directed to exhibit the return to the applicant, or give him such information as is specified, or the Commissioner may permit an inspection of the return on file in the Bureau, or furnish such information as he deems advisable. Under no circumstances shall the collector give information to persons other than the executor except upon the written order of the Commissioner, and then only to the extent authorized by such order.

210 Art. 77. Attorneys must have authorization.—In all cases where information is sought regarding an estate, or an interview asked, by an attorney whose name does not appear on Form 706 as the attorney for the estate, or by any agent of the executor or administrator, the information or interview will be denied unless the attorney or agent presents a signed statement from the executor or administrator authorizing him to act in his behalf. Where his name as attorney for the estate appears on Form 706, his identity must be established. If an attorney or other person asks a ruling on a question of law arising in a specific estate, the Commissioner may require satisfactory evidence of the right to obtain such ruling.

211 For regulations governing the recognition of attorneys, agents, and other persons representing claimants and executors before the Treasury Department, reference should be made to Treasury Department Circular No. 230, dated April 25, 1922, copies of which may be obtained on application to the chief clerk of the Treasury Department. [See following Art. 1006, Reg. 62, in The Income Tax Service.]

RETURN BY COLLECTOR.

212 Art. 78. Return by collector or Commissioner.—Where there is no 33 duly qualified executor or administrator, or no return is filed within 8071 one year after the decedent's death, or if a filed return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector may make a return from such information as he possesses or is able to obtain. The Commissioner may also make a return in such cases, or amend any return made by a collector or deputy collector, and any return so made or amended, or made by a collector or deputy collector and approved by the Commissioner, shall be prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes, and the Commissioner will assess the tax in the same manner as though the return had been filed by the person on whom the duty to make the return rested.

PAYMENT OF TAX AND INTEREST.

213 Art. 79. Payment of tax; general.—While no interest may be added
 34 to the tax unless payment thereof has not been made within one year 36 and six months after decedent's death, the tax itself is due and must be paid within one year after the decedent's death unless an extension of time for the payment thereof has been granted by the Commissioner. No discount will be allowed for payment in advance of the due date. The collector will grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which will be sufficient evidence of such payment, and entitle the executor to be credited with the amount by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

214 Payment of the amount of tax shown to be due by a return made in good faith will be considered payment of the tax in full, subject, however, to adjustment resulting from an investigation of the estate. If the return is not made in good faith, the payment of the amount of tax shown to be due thereby will not be deemed to be payment in full of the tax, but interest will attach, and penalties will be imposed, as set forth in articles 83 and 89.

215 Following an investigation of the estate the tax liability will be finally determined by the Commissioner upon the basis of such investigation.
 If at the time the Commissioner's determination is made the tax has been paid upon the basis of the return, an adjustment will be made of the amount of tax. If the amount of tax already paid exceeds the amount of tax as finally determined, the Commissioner will refund such excess. If the amount of tax as finally determined exceeds the amount of tax already paid, the collector will notify the executor of the amount of the unpaid balance of the tax and demand payment thereof. Payment should be made by the executor immediately upon the receipt of such notification. When the investigation of the return shows that no further tax is due, the executor will be notified to that effect. Until the receipt of such notification, he should reserve a sufficient portion of the estate to satisfy any additional tax.

[Payment of tax within one year under Revenue Act of 1918, ¶312.]

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

216 Art. 80. Payment by bonds or uncertified check.—Payment of the estate tax may be made with bonds or notes (including Victory Notes and Treasury Notes) of the United States bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per centum per annum, provided they were owned by the decedent continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death, and constituted a part of his estate at death. Such bonds and notes are receivable at par and interest accrued at the time of the payment. When such bonds or notes are to be tendered in payment of estate taxes, a copy of either Department Circular No. 225 [¶358 herein], as heretofore or hereafter supplemented should be procured and the requirements thereof carefully noted.

217 Collectors may accept uncertified checks in payment of estate taxes, provided such checks are collectible at par, that is, for their full amount, without any deduction for exchange or other charges. The collector will stamp upon the face of each check before deposit thereof the words, "This check is in payment of an obligation to the United States and must be paid at par. No protest," with his name and title. The day on which the collector receives the check will be considered the date of payment so far as the taxpayer is concerned, unless the check is returned dishonored. If the bank on which any such check is drawn should refuse to pay it at par, the check should be returned through the depository bank and be treated in the same manner as a bad check. All expenses incident to the attempt to collect such a check and the return of it through the depository bank must be paid by the drawer of the check to the bank on which it is drawn, since no deduction can be made from amounts received in payments of taxes. See Section 3210 of the Revised Statutes. If any taxpayer whose check has been returned uncollected by the depository bank should fail at once to make the check good, the collector should proceed to collect the tax as though no check had been given. A taxpayer who tenders a certified check in payment of taxes is also not released from his obligation until the check has been paid. See chapter 191 of the Act of March 2, 1911.

218 Treasury Department Circular No. 176, as amended, prescribes detailed regulations governing the deposit and collection of checks. Collectors are referred to paragraphs 13-16 and paragraph 26 thereof as to the deposit of taxpayers' checks and the handling of uncollected or lost items.

219 Art. 81. The executor shall pay the tax.—The statute provides that the executor or administrator shall pay the tax. This duty applies to the entire tax, regardless of the fact that the gross estate consists in part of property which will not come into his possession. Where there is no duly qualified executor or administrator, all persons in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent are liable for and required to pay the tax to the extent of the value of such property. See, also, Article 86. As to the personal liability of the executor, see Article 99.

220 Art. 82. Extension of time for payment.—In any case where the Commissioner finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate, an extension or extensions of time will be granted by him for the payment of the tax for a period not to exceed in all three years from the due date. Extensions of time for tax payment will be granted only in exceptional cases, where it is evident that the payment of the tax within the statutory period would cause the estate serious financial loss. No single extension for more than one year will be granted. Application for extension of time for payment should be filed with the collector, and should contain a full statement of the facts upon which the application is based. The collector will refer the application to the Commissioner, with suitable recommendations.

221 An extension of time to pay the tax does not relieve from the duty of filing the return within one year from the date of death, nor will it operate to prevent interest from accruing as provided in the statute.

222 Art. 83. Interest on tax.—Sections 406 and 407 contain the only provisions relating to interest on estate tax and consequently all questions of this character must be determined in accordance therewith. Section 407 deals with interest upon additional tax, and applies only to cases where the amount of tax shown upon a return made in good faith is fully paid within one year and six months after decedent's death, or time for payment of any portion thereof is extended beyond such period, and where after the lapse of such year and six months, the Commissioner determines that the correct amount of tax is in excess of that indicated by such return. The additional tax so determined, if not paid within one month after notice and demand by the collector, bears interest at the rate of 10 per centum per annum from the expiration of such time until payment is received by the collector.

223 All other cases fall within, and are governed by, the provisions of Section 406. Thus, where any portion of the tax shown upon a return made in good faith is not paid within one year and six months following decedent's death, interest accrues thereon, though an extension of time for payment may have been granted, at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the due date (one year after decedent's death) until payment is received by the collector. Likewise, in the case of a return so made and where no extension of time for payment is granted, so much of the entire tax (that is, the amount of tax as finally determined by the Commissioner, whether determined by him before or after the expiration of such period of one year and six months following the decedent's death, and whether the amount so determined be greater or less than that shown upon the return) as is not paid within such period bears interest at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the due date until payment is received by the collector.

224 Where the return is not made in good faith, Section 407 has no application, even though an extension of time may have been procured, and hence in all such cases any portion of the entire tax not paid within such period of one year and six months following decedent's death bears interest at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the due date of the tax (one year after decedent's death) until payment thereof is received by the collector.

COLLECTION OF TAX.

225 Art. 84. Remedy not exclusive.—The remedy by action, here [¶39] provided, is not exclusive. For other available remedies for the collection of the tax, see Article 102.

REIMBURSEMENT.

226 Art. 85. Right to reimbursement not enforceable by Commissioner.—
40 Where any portion of the tax is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to, or in the possession of, any person other than the duly qualified executor or administrator, such person may be entitled to reimbursement, either out of the undistributed estate or by contribution from other beneficiaries whose shares or interests in the estate would have been reduced had the tax been paid before distribution of the estate, or whose shares or interests are subject either to an equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate. The executor is also entitled to require beneficiaries under insurance policies to bear their proportion of the tax. These provisions, however, are not designed to curtail the right of the Commissioner to collect the tax from any person, or out of any property, liable therefor. The Commissioner can not be required to apportion the tax among the persons liable, nor to enforce any right to reimbursement or contribution. For example, where a transfer has been made in contemplation of death, the Commissioner may hold both the executor and the transferee liable for the tax with respect to the property transferred. In such case, if the tax is paid by the executor, he may not look to the Commissioner for relief by refund of part of the tax.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

LIEN.

227 Art. 86. Property subject to lien.—This lien attaches to every part 38 of the gross estate, whether or not the property comes into the pos-41 session of the duly qualified executor or administrator. It attaches to the extent of the tax shown to be due by the return and of any additional tax found to be due upon investigation.

228 Where the decedent transferred or placed in trust property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth), and where proceeds of insurance on his life passed to a specific beneficiary other than the duly qualified executor or administrator, a lien attaches thereto to the amount of the tax in respect to the particular property or money received by such transferee, trustee, or insurance beneficiary, and such transferee, trustee, or insurance beneficiary is personally liable for such tax. Where the transferee or trustee sells the property to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth the lien upon the property is divested; but there is substituted a like lien upon all the property of such transferee or in case of such transfer by a trustee upon all the assets of the trust estate, except such part as may be sold to a bona fide purchaser for such a consideration.

229 The lien upon the entire property constituting the gross estate continues for a period of 10 years after the decedent's death, except—

(1) Where the tax is paid in full before the expiration of such period;
(2) Such portion of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof;

(3) Such portion of the gross estate as has passed to a bona fide purchaser for value after payment of the full amount of tax determined by the Commissioner pursuant to a request of the executor, as authorized by Section 407, for discharge from personal liability (see Art. 72);

(4) Such property as has been sold by any transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, where such property was received from the decedent as a transfer in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth);

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(5) Where the Commissioner issues his certificate releasing such lien (see Art. 87).

230 Art. 87. Release of lien.—The statute provides that, if the Commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability of an estate has been fully discharged or provided for, he may issue his certificate releasing any or all property of the estate from the lien. The issuance of certificates is a matter resting within the discretion of the Commissioner, and certificates will be issued only in case there is actual need therefor. In most cases the receipts issued by the collector constitute sufficient acquittance.

231 The tax will be considered fully discharged for the purpose of the issuance of a certificate only when investigation has been completed, and payment of the tax, as determined by the Commissioner, has been made. A certificate of release of lien may be issued by the Commissioner under these circumstances as to any or all property of the estate, upon the filing by the executor of an application in duplicate on Form 791. The form must contain all the information called for.

232 Where the tax liability has not been fully discharged, as provided above, no general certificate of release will be granted, but releases of lien upon particular items of property will be issued upon the filing with the Commissioner of such security, if any, as he may require. Where security is required, a corporate indemnity bond must be furnished, or Liberty Bonds, or other bonds or notes of the United States, must be deposited with the collector. In lieu of such security, the Commissioner may in any case issue the release upon payment of the estimated tax upon the transfer of the property released, computed at the highest rate applicable to the estate. If, upon consideration of the application, the Commissioner finds the issuance of the certificate to be warranted, the collector will notify the executor of the amount of the bond, as fixed by the Commissioner.

PENALTIES.

233 Art. 88. Nature of penalties.—Two kinds of penalties are provided for delinquency with respect to the duties imposed by the estate tax law:

(1) A specific penalty, to be recovered by suit, unless paid on demand, or adjusted by an acceptance of an offer in compromise; and

(2) A penalty of a certain percentage of the tax, to be added to the tax and collected in the same manner as the tax.

234 In any case where more than one penalty is provided, the Government may impose any one or more thereof.

235 Art. 89. Penalties for false or fraudulent notice or return.—Where statements in the notice required by Section 404, or in the return, are knowingly and willfully false, the person making them is subject to a penalty not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or both; and, for a false or fraudulent return, 50 per centum may be added to the amount of the tax.

236 Art. 90. Penalty for failure to file notice or return.—For failure to file the notice or the return within the time prescribed, the person in default is subject to a penalty not to exceed $500; and, for the failure to file the return within the time prescribed, 25 per centum may be added to the amount of the tax, unless the failure so to file the return was due to a reasonable cause and not to willful neglect.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

237    Art. 91. Penalty for failure to exhibit records or property.—Where a person in possession or control of any record, file, or paper, supposed to contain information relating to the estate, or having in his possession or control property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same, upon the request of the Commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, in the performance of his duties, he is liable to a penalty not to exceed $500, to be recovered by civil action. He must comply with such a request whether or not he believes that the documents contain information relating to the estate.

CLAIMS FOR ABATEMENT AND REFUND.

238    Art. 92. Kinds of relief.—Two forms of relief are afforded the executor in cases where he believes that an excessive amount of tax or 8023    an illegal penalty has been assessed or paid either upon the basis of 8047    the return or of the investigation conducted by the Bureau. The 8050    two forms of relief are:

- (1) Claim for abatement, where the alleged excessive tax or illegal penalty has been assessed but not paid.
- (2) Claim for refund, where such tax or penalty has been paid.

239    Art. 93. Claim for abatement.—Claims for the abatement of taxes or penalties illegally assessed must be made upon Form 843, and must be sustained by the affidavit of the executor or other parties cognizant of the facts. When a tax or penalty has been assessed, the presumption is that the assessment is correct; and the burden of showing that it was improperly or illegally assessed rests upon the applicant for abatement. The affidavit must therefore contain a full and explicit statement of all the material facts relating to the claim in support of which it is offered in order that the claim may receive proper consideration. Nothing should be left to inference, but all the facts relied upon should appear in the papers themselves. The filing of a claim for the abatement of a tax or penalty alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed does not necessarily operate as a suspension of the collection thereof. The collector may proceed to collect if he thinks it necessary, and leave the taxpayer to his remedy by a claim for refund.

240    Art. 94. Accrual of interest as affected by abatement claim.—Where a claim for abatement is rejected, the making of the application does not affect the running of interest. The allowance of the claim, however, in whole or part, discharges all liability for interest upon the portion of the claim allowed. The same rules apply where, upon the request of the executor, a reinvestigation is made.

241    Art. 95. Limitation of time to file claim for abatement of additional tax.—If it is desired to file claim for abatement of the additional amount of tax disclosed upon an investigation, such claim must be filed with the collector within one month after receipt by the executor of the Commissioner's letter of notification. After that period the claim will not be considered, but the tax must be paid, and adjustment sought by claim for refund.

242    Art. 96. Claim for refund.—Claims for the refunding of estate taxes imposed by any of the several Revenue Acts, and of penalties in respect thereto, which are alleged to have been collected without legal authority, must be presented to the Commissioner within four years next after payment thereof. Such claims must be made on Form 843. As in the case of claims for abatement, the burden of proof rests upon the claimant. All the facts relied upon in support of the claim should be clearly set forth under oath. With the claim should be presented, in addition to the evidence:

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(1) Where the claim is made by an executor or administrator, a certificate of the court showing that the appointment remains in full force and effect.

(2) Where the executor or administrator has been discharged and no administrator de bonis non has been appointed and qualified, there should be submitted, in lieu of the certificate above mentioned, (a) a certified copy of the court order granting the discharge, and, (b) a certified copy of the order of distribution, or, if such order does not fully disclose the identity of the person or persons entitled to receive any amount that may be refunded and the percentage or proportion thereof to which each, if more than one, is entitled, there should be submitted a certified copy of the decedent's will, if any, and such further proof as may be requisite to establish both the identity of such person or persons and the percentage or proportion of the amount sought to be refunded to which each, where there are more than one, is entitled.

(3) Where a claim is filed after the administration of the estate has been closed, and is signed by one only, or by less than all, of a number of beneficiaries entitled to share in the refund, or is signed by a person acting as attorney or agent for the interested parties, there must accompany the claim, in addition to the proof required in paragraph (2) above, a power of attorney, duly executed by all beneficiaries entitled to any portion of the repayment, authorizing the claimant or claimants to present the matter before the Bureau.

243 Art. 97. Payment of claims and interest.—Warrants in payment of claims allowed will be drawn to the order of the person or persons entitled to the proceeds, and will be forwarded directly to such person or persons by the Treasurer of the United States, except where delivery to an attorney or agent has been authorized in accordance with the regulations contained in Treasury Department Circular No. 230 [see following Art. 1006, Reg. 62, in The Income Tax Service], dated April 25, 1922, as heretofore or hereafter amended or supplemented. If the claimants are indebted to the United States for taxes, such taxes must be paid before the warrants are delivered. (Act of Mar. 3, 1875 (18 Stats. 481).)

244 On the allowance of a claim for refund of taxes paid Section 1324 of the statute provides for the payment of interest upon the total amount of such refund at the rate of one-half of 1 per centum per month to the date of such allowance, as follows: (1) If such amount was paid under a specific protest setting forth in detail the basis of and reasons for such protest, from the time when such tax was paid, or (2) if such amount was not paid under protest but pursuant to an additional assessment, from the time such additional assessment was paid, or (3) if no protest was made and the tax was not paid pursuant to an additional assessment, from six months after the date of filing of such claim for refund.

POWER TO COMPROMISE OR REMIT PENALTIES.

Revised Statutes, Sec. 3229 (Comp. Sts., 1916, Sec. 5952). The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, may compromise any civil or criminal case arising under the internal-revenue laws instead of commencing suit thereon; and, with the advice and consent of the said Secretary and the recommendation of the Attorney General, he may compromise any such case after a suit thereon has been commenced. Whenever a compromise is made in any case there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner the opinion of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, or of the officer acting as such, with his reasons therefor, with a statement of the amount of tax assessed, the amount of additional tax or penalty imposed by law in consequence of the neglect or delinquency of the person against whom the tax is assessed, and the amount actually paid in accordance with the terms of the compromise.

Copyright 1928, by The Corporation Trust Company.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Revised Statutes, Sec. 5292 (Comp. Sts., 1916, Sec. 10,130). Whenever any person who shall have incurred any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, or disability * * * shall refer his petition to the judge of the district in which such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, or disability has accrued, truly and particularly setting forth the circumstances of his case, and shall pray that the same may be mitigated or remitted, the judge shall inquire, in a summary manner, into the circumstances of the case; first causing reasonable notice to be given to the person claiming such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and to the attorney of the United States for such district, that each may have an opportunity of showing cause against the mitigation or remission thereof; and shall cause the facts appearing upon such inquiry to be stated and annexed to the petition, and direct their transmission to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary shall thereupon have power to mitigate or remit such fine, forfeiture, or penalty, or remove such disability, or any part thereof, if, in his opinion, the same was incurred without willful negligence, or any intention of fraud in the person incurring the same; and to direct the prosecution if any has been instituted for the recovery thereof, to cease and be discontinued, upon such terms or conditions as he may deem reasonable and just.

Revised Statutes, Sec. 5293 (Comp. Sts., 1916, Sec. 10,131). The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe such rules and modes of proceeding to ascertain the facts upon which an application for remission of a fine, penalty, or forfeiture, is founded, as he deems proper, and, upon ascertaining them, to remit the fine, penalty, or forfeiture, if in his opinion it was incurred without willful negligence or fraud, in either of the following cases:

First. If the fine, penalty, or forfeiture was imposed under authority of any revenue law, and the amount does not exceed $1,000. * * *

245 Art. 98. Power to compromise or remit.—The Commissioner, with 8059 the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, may compromise any civil or criminal case arising under the internal-revenue laws instead of commencing suit thereon, and with the advice and consent of the Secretary, and upon the recommendation of the Attorney-General, may compromise any such case after suit thereon has been commenced by the United States. Accordingly, the power to compromise extends to (a) both civil and criminal cases; (b) cases whether before or after suit; and (c) both taxes and penalties, except that taxes legally due from a solvent taxpayer may not be compromised. Refunds can not be made of accepted offers in compromise in cases where it is subsequently ascertained that no violation of law was involved. Where a fine, penalty, or forfeiture, not exceeding $1,000, is incurred without willful negligence or fraud, it may be remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury; and he may mitigate or remit other fines, penalties, forfeitures, and disabilities where the court has inquired into the matter and made findings.

PERSONAL LIABILITY OF EXECUTOR.

Revised Statutes, Sec. 3467 (Comp. Sts., 1916, Sec. 6373). Every executor, administrator, or assignee, or other person, who pays any debts due by the person or estate from [for] whom or for which he acts, before he satisfies and pays the debts due to the United States from such person or estate, shall become answerable in his own person and estate for the debts so due to the United States, or for so much thereof as may remain due and unpaid.

ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

246 Art. 99. Extent of liability.—The executor is personally liable for 34 the payment of the estate tax to the amount of the full value of the assets of the estate which have at any time come into his hands.
 Where no executor or administrator has been appointed, every person in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent is liable for the tax as an executor to the value of such property, except as limited by Article 87 in the case of transferees, trustees and insurance beneficiaries.

EXAMINATION OF RECORDS AND TAKING OF TESTIMONY.

247 Art. 100. Securing evidence—Taking testimony.—In order to ascer-8002 tain the correctness of a return, or to make a return where none 8003 has been made, the Commissioner has power to require the attendance, and to take the testimony, of the person rendering the return, or any officer or employee of such person, or any other person having knowledge in the premises. Such persons may be required to produce any relevant book, paper, or other record. This power may be exercised by any revenue agent or inspector designated for the purpose.

248 Art. 101. Power to compel compliance.—Where any person is summoned to appear and testify, or to produce books, papers, or other data, the District Court of the United States for the district in which such person resides has power to compel the giving of the testimony, or the production of the books, papers, or data, and to issue any appropriate process, writ, or order.

REMEDIES FOR COLLECTION.

249 Art. 102. Remedies for collection of tax.—The provisions of the 8000 statute quoted above apply to the estate tax law; and three remedies 8001 are thus provided for the collection of the tax:

(1) Collection by distraint.—The collector may issue warrant of distraint authorizing the seizure and sale of any or all of the assets of the estate. (See R. S., Secs. 3187 et seq.; Comp. Sts., 1916, Sec. 5909 et seq.)

(2) Collection by suit to subject the property to sale.—The collector may commence in any court of the United States appropriate proceedings, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to sale under the judgment or decree of the court.

(3) Collection by suit for personal liability.—The personal liability of the executor, of the transferee or trustee of property transferred in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after decedent's death, and of the beneficiary of life insurance, may be enforced by any appropriate action.

250 Art. 103. Executor's duty to keep records.—It is the duty of the executor to keep such records as the Commissioner may require.
 Executors are required to keep such complete and detailed records of the affairs of the estate as will enable the Commissioner to determine accurately the amount of the tax liability.

251 Art. 104. Executor's duty to render statements.—It is the duty of the executor not only to make the formal return, but also to render any other sworn statement which the Commissioner may require for the purpose of determining whether a tax liability exists.

SCOPE OF REPEAL.

253 Art. 105. Scope of repeal.—The Revenue Act of 1921 retains in force the provisions of Title IV of the Revenue Act of 1918 for the assessment and collection of all taxes accruing thereunder, and for the imposition and collection of all penalties which have accrued or may accrue in relation to any such taxes.

254 Art. 106. Promulgation of regulations.—In pursuance of the statute, the foregoing regulations are hereby made and promulgated, and all rulings inconsistent herewith are hereby revoked. These regulations apply to all pending estate tax cases except where a particular question is governed by a specific provision of the earlier statutes differing from the Revenue Act of 1921, in which cases the provisions of the applicable statute control and Regulations 37 (revised January, 1921) remain in full force and effect, subject to the following changes:

Article 47 is amended to read as follows:

The unpaid principal of mortgages on property of the decedent, whether the property be situated within or without the United States, including interest accrued to the date of death, is deductible.

Articles 29, 71, and 76-A are revoked.

REGULATIONS 63.

256 Household effects and like personalty used by husband and wife

96 in the marriage relation are presumed to be the property of the husband, and, in the absence of sufficient evidence to rebut this presumption must be returned as a portion of his gross estate.—In reviewing returns on Form 706 in this office, it is found that oftentimes there are reported no household goods or other miscellaneous personalty of that character. This fact is brought to the attention of the examining officer, and in most cases results in the discovery of the existence of such property belonging to the estate of the decedent. In other cases the examining officers have been reporting the substance of the following: "Widow of deceased claims the household effects, etc., as her own separate property."

257 Statements to the above effect, unexplained, are not sufficient to relieve the estate from returning and paying tax upon the household furniture used by the decedent in the household occupied by himself and wife. Upon the decease of a husband the household goods and other chattels used by husband and wife in the marriage relation are presumed to be the property of the husband. If the wife claims the same as her separate property, she has the burden of establishing that claim.

258 There are certain situations where the widow's claim will not be questioned and will consequently relieve the estate from returning the household goods as part of the gross estate of the deceased husband. All that is required in such cases is sufficient evidence of the existence of the facts in question. Such situations are as follows: (1) Where the articles of household furniture were owned by the wife prior to marriage; (2) where the wife has purchased the household effects during coverture with her separate funds; (3) where the household effects represent gifts from a third person to the wife individually during coverture.

259 It is not at all uncommon, however, that the household effects have been purchased by the husband since the marriage and at his death the wife claims that the decedent made her a gift of the various articles during the marriage, although the articles have never left the possession of the husband—i. e., they remain in the household occupied by the husband and wife and are used by them jointly. Such property is presumed to be owned by the husband, and if the wife, or any other person for that matter, claims the household effects as a gift from the deceased the burden of proving the gift rests upon the person asserting it. A gift from husband to wife must be clearly established. There must be clear and incontrovertible evidence of the delivery of the property by the husband with the intention of divesting himself of all dominion and control and of vesting title in the wife. The requirements necessary to a valid executed gift must be present. If the gift be in contemplation of death, of course another question would arise.

there must be an absolute transfer of the property from donor to donee, taking effect immediately, and fully executed by a delivery of the property by the donor, and the acceptance thereof by the donee. It is essential that the transaction should be fully executed by the delivery of the property to the donee, or to some person for him. In several States statutes have been enacted providing that no gift, except by deed or will, shall be valid unless actual possession shall come to and remain with the donee or his agent, and if the donor and donee reside together at the time of the gift, possession by the donee at their place of residence is not a sufficient possession within the meaning of the statute.

261 The foregoing should be carefully considered when examining officers are investigating the completeness and accuracy of estate tax returns. (T. D. 2529, Oct. 4, 1917.)

262 Bequest or devise in lieu of dower: Decision of Court: Act of September 8, 1916.—Constitutionality of Act: Title II, Act of September 8, 1916, imposing an estate tax, is constitutional. Decision of the United States Supreme Court in New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, 41 Sup. Ct. 506 [¶397], held controlling. Deduction; State Transfer Tax Not Deductible as a Charge Against the Estate: The New York State Transfer Tax is not a charge that affects "the estate as a whole." It diminishes each legacy bequeathed by decedent, and is therefore not "a charge against the estate" and may not be deducted from the gross estate under the provisions of Section 203 of the Revenue Act of 1916. Decision of the United States Supreme Court in New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, 41 Sup. Ct. 506 [¶397], held controlling.

Gross Estate; Bequest or Devise in Lieu of Dower: If a widow accepts a provision made in lieu of dower, the value of the property thus bequeathed or devised must be included in the gross estate, as defined in Section 203 of the Revenue Act of 1916, and the amount so included may not be diminished by deducting the value of the widow's dower in decedent's realty.

enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913, and applies under estate tax acts prior to the Revenue Act of 1918. [Captions to T. D. 3138, ¶265, below.]

265 There is given below in full for your information and guidance an opinion rendered by the Attorney General under date of February 26, 1921, dealing with the right of husband and wife domiciled in certain states having so-called "community property" laws to divide certain of their income for the purpose of the income tax, and as to the inclusion of community property in the gross estate of a deceased spouse. See, in this connection, Treasury Decision No. 3071 [see ¶286]. (T. D. 3138, signed by Commissioner Wm. M. Williams, and dated March 3, 1921.)

266 Dear Mr. Secretary: My opinion has been requested upon the following questions:

268 2. In which of the states in which the community property system exists should there be included in gross estate, in computing the estate tax of the estate of a deceased spouse, one-half and only one-half of the community property of husband and wife domiciled therein? [See answer at ¶295.]

269 3. If your answers to questions 1 and 2, as to any state are based upon a statute enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913, please give the rule as to such state existing from March 1, 1913 to the passage of such statute, for my guidance in allowing claims for refund. [See answer at ¶296.]

270 4. Do your answers to questions 1 and 2 apply under income and estate tax acts prior to the Revenue Act of 1918? [See answer at ¶297.]

271 The community property system prevails in Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas and Washington. The application of the income tax act to the income from community property belonging to husband and wife domiciled in Texas was disposed of in my opinion of September 10, 1920. [See ¶286].

272 While the statutes of California are in some respects similar to the community property laws of the other community property states, the rule established by the highest courts of that state is that during coverture the wife has no vested interest in the community property, her interest therein being a mere expectancy.

273 In Spreckles v. Spreckles, 116 Cal. 339 (1897), the Supreme Court of that state held that prior to the amendment of 1891 to Sec. 172 of the Civil Code, forbidding the husband to give away community property without consent of the wife in writing, the code vested in the husband all the elements of absolute ownership of the community property; that the wife's interest was a mere expectancy, and as to all the world except the wife, there was, prior to that amendment, no distinction between the community estate and the separate estate of the husband; and that the amendment could not be construed retroactively so as to deprive the husband of his vested right to dispose by gift of community property acquired prior to the amendment, without the consent of the wife.

274 In 1905 California passed an inheritance tax law, and subsequently the question was raised whether a widow should be compelled to pay such tax on that one-half of the community property that she took on the death of her husband. In the Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359 (1908), the Supreme Court of California held that she did, since she had no vested interest in the community estate and took her one-half on the death of her husband as his heir.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

275 This case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States (Moffitt v. Kelly, 218 U. S. 400) where the judgment of the lower court was affirmed, the court laying down the rule that the nature and character of the right of the wife in community property for the purpose of taxation is a peculiarly local question, and the determination of the state court in regard thereto is not reviewable by the Supreme Court; and, further, that the law of California of 1905, taxing all property passing by will or intestacy, having been construed by the highest court of that state as applying to the wife's share of the community property, such tax is not in conflict with the contract, due process, or equal protection clauses of the Constitution.

276 Subsequently the inheritance tax law of California was amended to provide "that for the purpose of this act" the one-half of the community property which goes to the surviving wife on the death of her husband, under the provisions of Sec. 1402 of the Civil Code "shall not be deemed to pass to her as heir to her husband, but shall, for the purpose of this act, be deemed to go, pass, or be transferred, to her for valuable and adequate consideration."

277 It is obvious that this language does not change the rule of community property in the state nor vest in the wife any interest thereto prior to the dissolution of the community; rather it emphasizes the existing rule that the wife has no vested interest in community property.

278 As to the effect of Sec. 172a of the Civil Code, enacted in 1917, it is not to be presumed that the legislature intended, by the enactment of same to make so revolutionary a change in the existing rule of property in California as to divest the husband of his ownership in the community property. As was said in Spreckles v. Spreckles, supra, "If a husband cannot make a valid transfer of the property for the purpose of depriving his wife of it, that does not show a vested right in her;" and giving the fullest possible effect to the language, unless the wife had a vested interest by virtue of the law as it theretofore existed, which it must be conceded she did not, the operation of the amendment would necessarily be confined to community property acquired after May 23, 1917.

SUMMARY.

279 Summarizing, it appears that in all of the community property states except California their own courts have held that the wife has, during the existence of the marriage relation, a vested interest in one-half of the community property. Her rights in the property of the community are perhaps most fully recognized in the state of Washington, where both spouses have testamentary disposition over one-half of the community property, and where in the absence of such disposition it descends to their issue, or, in the absence of issue, to the survivor; while the husband is manager of the community estate in Washington he may not sell, convey, or encumber real estate unless the wife join with him in the conveyance; and as was held in Huyvaerts v. Roedtz, ante, and Schramm v. Steele, ante, the separate debt of the husband cannot be satisfied out of community property where it is not incurred in connection with the community business, nor for the benefit of the community.

280 In Idaho it is seen that the limitation upon the alienation of the community real property is the same as in Washington. But while the wife's earnings and the rents and profits of her separate estate are community property she is given the management and control of same. The Idaho rule governing the disposition of community property on the death of either spouse is, with minor variations, the same as that of Washington. In neither state is an inheritance tax payable on the one-half of the community that goes to the one spouse on the death of the other.

281 In Arizona the husband only may dispose of community personal property, but the wife must join him in deeds or mortgages affecting real estate, except unpatented mining claims. One-half of the community property is subject to the testamentary disposition of either spouse, and in absence of such disposition goes to his or her descendants; where there is neither testamentary disposition nor descendants, it is subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband. On decree of divorce the Court may divide the property as he sees fit, but in the absence of provision for the community property the parties from the date of the decree holds as tenants in common. The courts of Arizona hold that the wife is equal owner with her husband.

282 In Nevada the husband has the entire management and control of the community property, except that the wife has entire control of her earnings when living separate from her husband. Upon her death the husband takes the whole community estate, except that where he has abandoned her without good cause she may by will dispose of half and in absence of such disposition it goes to her heirs, exclusive of her husband. On the death of the husband the wife takes half and the husband may dispose of the other half by will, or it goes to his surviving children; if there is no will and no children survive, the whole goes to the wife without administration, subject to certain provisos. On dissolution of community by divorce for any other ground than adultery or extreme cruelty, the community property must be equally divided between the parties. The wife pays no inheritance tax under the inheritance tax law of Nevada on her interest in community property the courts holding that she takes not as heir but by a right vested in her at all times during marriage. It is to be noted that the Constitution of Nevada recognizes the wife's interest in community property.

283 In New Mexico while the husband is manager of the community estate, he may not transfer real property without a valuable consideration without the written consent of his wife; and under certain circumstances the wife may be substituted as manager; prior to 1915 he could not transfer community personal property except for a valuable consideration without her written consent; on dissolution of the community by the death of the wife the husband takes all except such portion as may have been set aside to the wife by judicial decree, which portion goes to her heirs unless she has disposed of same by will; on death of the husband one-half goes to the wife and the other half is subject to testamentary disposition by the husband. If he makes no will one-fourth of his one-half goes to the wife and the remainder to the children. On separation either may petition for division of community property and after divorce continue to hold as tenants in common where no disposition has been made in the divorce decree. New Mexico has no state inheritance-tax act.

284 In Louisiana the community property comprehends all property acquired during the marriage by either husband or wife except that acquired with separate funds or by inheritance or particular donation, and excepting the earnings of the wife when she is living separate from her husband; the husband is manager of the community but he may not convey community immovables by gratuitous title, and cannot dispose of moveables in fraud of the wife; either spouse may dispose of one-half the community property by will and the laws governing the descent of such property in the absence of testamentary disposition apply equally to both spouses, the survivor taking the deceased spouse's half by inheritance when there is no will, and neither father, mother or descendants. As heretofore stated the survivor pays no inheritance tax on his or her one-half of the community property but does pay on that part inherited from the deceased spouse.

285 In California the wife has no power of testamentary disposition of community property except of such as may have been set aside to her by judicial decree; she takes one-half as heir on the death of the husband; but on the death of the wife the entire community property belongs to the husband without administration. The California courts have held that under the law as it stood prior to 1917 the wife had no vested interest in community property prior to the dissolution of the marriage; the amendment to the inheritance tax act being limited to the purposes of that act could not have had the effect of vesting an interest in her, and had the addition of Sec. 172a had that effect any amendment of the inheritance tax act would have been unnecessary to exempt her one-half from taxation thereunder. In the case of Blum v. Wardell, now pending before the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit, on appeal from the District Court of the Northern District of California, the application of the Federal estate tax act of 1916 is under consideration.

286 As appears from my opinion of September 10, 1920, in Texas the control of community property is divided between the husband and wife; in that state on the death of either spouse without issue the survivor takes the whole and where there is issue, takes one-half, the other half going to said issue or their descendants. Under the state inheritance tax law the wife pays no tax on her half of the community property.

287 In Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 496, the principle was enunciated that where state decisions have interpreted state laws governing property or controlling relations that are essentially of a domestic and state nature the United States Supreme Court will follow the state decisions if possible to do so, in the discharge of its duties. Also in De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566, 570, it was held that to the law of the state in which property is situated we must look for the rules which govern its descent, alienation and transfer, and for the effect and construction of wills and other conveyances. In United States v. Crosby, 7 Cranch 115, it was held that the title to land can be acquired and lost only in the manner prescribed by the law of the place where same is situated.

288 In arriving at an answer to the questions propounded by you we are called upon to determine the rules of property in the community property states; we have, therefore, pursuant to the rules of the above cases, adopted the rules laid down by the highest courts of the various states. There remains to be determined the application thereto, of the income and estate tax provisions of Federal statutes. In my previous opinion it was stated that since in Texas the ownership in one-half of all community property vests in each spouse, whatever is income to the community is income to both.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

This conclusion applies, therefore, to all states in which community property is held to be vested equally in both spouses.

289 Section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1916 and Sec. 401 of that of 1918 impose a tax "upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent" dying after the passage thereof, to be determined as is set forth in the sections following, which are:

Revenue Act of 1918.

Sec. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent.

291 While the community estate of husband and wife has not in the strictest sense all the incidents of a joint estate or an estate in the entirety as they were known at common law, I am convinced that the community estate is for all practical purposes within the language of subdivision (d) of Sec. 402, there being deductible therefrom, in arriving at the net estate of decedent, the one-half interest of the surviving spouse, which may be shown to have originally belonged to such person, and never to have belonged to the decedent.

292 And even though it should be held that the community estate is not a "joint estate" or an "estate in the entirety" within the meaning of the revenue acts, the one-half interest of the deceased spouse in community property would still be subject to tax under the language of subdivision (a) above.

293 My answers to your questions are therefore:

294 (1) That in Washington, Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Louisiana and Nevada the husband and wife domiciled therein, in rendering separate income tax returns, may each report as gross income, one-half of the income which under the laws of the respective states becomes, simultaneously with its receipt, community property.

295 (2) In the states mentioned in answer to question one there should be included in gross estate, in computing the estate tax of a deceased spouse, one-half only of the community property of husband and wife domiciled therein.

296 (3) Neither of the above answers is based upon a statute enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913.

297 (4) My answers to these questions apply under income and estate tax acts prior to the Revenue Act of 1918.

(Decision.)

Revenue Act of 1918.—Equally applicable to the 1921 Act.

June 20, 1922.

For the purposes of the deduction on account of charitable bequests, the amount of "bequests to charity" out of the residuary estate, is the amount of the residuary estate after state transfer or succession taxes have been paid therefrom by the terms of the will, without further reduction by the amount of the Federal Estate Tax on the net estate though such tax in fact does reduce by its amount the residuary estate passing to charity.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT:

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

JOSEPH FERMAIN SLOCUM, HERBERT JERMAIN SLOCUM, STEPHEN L'HOMMEDIU SLOCUM, ROBERT W. DEFOREST and HENRY W. DEFOREST, as executors of the Last Will and Testament of MARGARET OLIVIA SAGE, against

Plaintiffs,

WILLIAM H. EDWARDS, formerly Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District of New York,

167 recover federal estate taxes alleged to have been erroneously assessed and collected. The gross estate amounted to . . . $49,129,256.99

The funeral and administration expenses and debts amounted to . . . $3,789,321.74

The bequests for charitable, religious, public and similar purposes, without any deduction for State taxes or estate succession taxes payable under Clause 6 of the will out of the residuary estate on bequests to individuals. . . . 36,721,855.70

This left a net estate of . . . $8,568,079.55 according to the return made by the estate upon which would be a total tax of $1,406,977.50.

299 The Commissioner of Internal Revenue revised this tax by deducting from the bequests for charitable purposes the amount of State transfer taxes, viz.: $5,741.83 payable under Clause 6 of the will from the residuary estate which went to charity. He also deducted from the residuary estate going to charity the federal estate tax. This lessened the amount of the charitable bequests which are made deductible in computing the net estate subject to the estate tax and increased the tax accordingly. The sum of $413,629.62 and interest is the amount of overpayment now sought to be recovered.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.*

300 Section 203 of the Revenue Act of 1916 provides that for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined by deducting from the value of the gross estate funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate and "such other charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction whether within or without the United States under which the estate is administered."

301 Section 403 (a) (3) of the Revenue Act of 1918 allows as a further deduction:

"(3) The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises or gifts to or for the use of the United States, any state, territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes or to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any individual, or to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes. This deduction shall be made in the case of all decedents who have died since December 31, 1917."

302 The question for consideration is the meaning to be attached to the words: "The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises or gifts" when applied to a residuary gift to charity. This amount whatever it may be is what is to be deducted in finding the net estate upon which the tax is to be calculated. The charitable recipients of the testator's bounty ultimately receive only a balance constituted after the Government has taken out the estate tax levied as an excise tax upon the privilege granted to the testator of transmitting his property at death. In the case of an estate bequeathed to a single individual the estate tax might have been computed upon what he would receive after the estate had suffered diminution by the tax itself but such has never been the practice, and the uniform theory has been that the estate passing was to be treated without regard to the incidence of the tax itself. I see no reason why a different rule should be adopted in dealing with the words "The amount of all bequests, legacies, devises or gifts" even when applied to a residue to charity. In the first case if the taxes had been computed upon the amount actually passing after deducting the tax millions of dollars would have been saved to taxpayers. It does not seem consistent to look at the matter in a different way in dealing with the present case, particularly in view of the liberal legislation enacted in aid of charitable gifts.

303 The State legacy tax amounting to $5,741.83 payable out of the general estate under Clause 6 of the will would not, under the New York decisions be deductible from the residuary estate in appraising the value of that estate for the purpose of transfer taxes. Matter of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77.

304 The Government in this case wishes to increase the net taxable estate by reducing the deductible residuary bequests to charity which have to pay this $5,741.83 to the extent of that sum. In my opinion the decision of the New York Courts in construing the Transfer Tax Act should not control the present situation. If the New York Courts had reached any other decision than the one they did and had held that a direction to pay a tax upon a legacy to A out of the general estate lessened the general estate for purposes of taxation by the amount of the tax on A's legacy, the effect would have been to free the estate from any tax on the amount saved to A by the direction that the tax on his legacy should be paid from another fund. Such a result was unreasonable, and the New York Court properly held was not within any justifiable construction of the statute.

305 In the present case, however, there is a direction under Clause 6 of the will that taxes on legacies to certain individuals should be paid out of the general estate. It may well be that this direction should not affect the amount or method of ascertaining any legacy tax, but where the deduction allowed for charitable bequests in computing the net taxable estate is limited to the amount of such bequests a specific charge by the terms of the will upon a portion of the estate bequeathed to charity alters the plain testamentary disposition of the testator's property to that extent and limits the amount of the charitable bequests pro tanto. It will be said that if the subtraction of the amount of all bequests to charity is to take into account legacy taxes payable out of such bequest by the terms of the will, it should take into account the Federal estate tax which is a legal charge upon the estate. I do not think the cases are parallel. The testator by her own direction limited the amount which the residuary legatees would receive by the legacy taxes. On the other hand, the uniform practice has been to disregard the Federal estate tax itself in determining the net estate. It is reasonable to apply the same rule in determining what is the residue which the testatrix gave to charity for the purpose of claiming the statutory deduction. Judge Rose in Dugan v. Miles, 276 Fed. 401, followed this rule.

306 The motion for judgment dismissing the amended complaint is denied, and judgment is directed for the plaintiffs, with interest, except as to the tax on the sum of $5,741.83, which sum should be deducted from the residue passing to charity and thus added to the net estate for purposes of taxation.

307 The value of United States Bonds may not be excluded from the Gross or Net Estate in determining Estate Tax due.—The following opinion of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, rendered February 13, 1917, is published for the information of all concerned:

Sir:

Answering the question presented by ——— under date of the 10th instant, relative to the liability of estates to taxation under the recent Federal Estate Tax Act, it is manifest from the following decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court that U. S. Government bonds must be added to the value of estates for the purpose of taxation under said Act.

The U. S. Supreme Court in Plummer v. Coler, (178 U. S. 134), considering the question whether, under the inheritance tax laws of a state, a tax might be validly imposed upon a legacy consisting of United States bonds issued under a statute declaring them exempt from state taxation in any form, said:

"We think the conclusion, fairly to be drawn from the state and Federal cases, is, that the right to take property by will or descent is derived from and regulated by municipal law; that, in assessing a tax upon such right or privilege, the State may lawfully measure or fix the amount of the tax by referring to the value of the property passing; and that the incidental fact that such property is composed wholly or in part of Federal securities, does not invalidate the tax or the law under which it is imposed."

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

And dealing directly with the power of the Federal Government under the Inheritance Tax Act of 1898, to impose legacy taxes upon the transmission of an estate consisting of "free-tax" Government bonds, the Court in Murdock v. Ward, (178 U. S. 147), referring to the discussion and decision in the Plummer case, held:

"If a state inheritance law can validly impose a tax measured by the amount or value of the legacy, even if that amount includes United States bonds, the reasoning that justifies such a conclusion must, when applied to the case of a Federal inheritance law taxing the very same legacy, bring us to the same conclusion. We must therefore, hold that if, as held in Knowlton v. Moore, the tax imposed under the Act of June 13, 1898, is not invalid as a direct unapportioned tax, nor for want of uniformity, nor as an infringement upon the laws of the states regulating wills and descents, then the tax upon legacies or bequests, descendible under and regulated by state laws, is valid even if such legacies incidentally are composed of Federal bonds."

And further, in Sherman v. United States (178 U. S. 151), the Court said:

The proposition that bonds of the United States and the income therefrom are not lawfully taxable under an inheritance tax law of the United States, because exempted by contract from such tax has just been decided not to be well founded."

This is clearly conclusive of the whole question. (T. D. 2449, Feb. 13, 1917.) [For exception see ¶308 below.]

308 U. S. Bonds owned by non-resident alien decedent.—Please wire our expense whether United States bonds held in trust for non-resident alien individual but situated in United States are included in gross estate for purposes of estate tax. Has ruling published Corporation Trust Company War Tax Service nineteen twenty paragraph one-seventy-three, denying exemption, been modified? (Answer.) United States bonds situated in the United States owned by non-resident alien decedent form no part of gross estate of such decedent situated in the United States for purposes of federal estate tax. (Telegram of inquiry from Herrick, Smith, Donald & Farley, Boston, Mass., and the answer thereto signed by Deputy Commissioner James Hagerman, Jr., and dated Aug. 6, 1920.)

309 [Letter supplementing the telegram above.] Referring to your letter dated May 26, 1920, relative to the taxability of bonds, notes and certificates of indebtedness of the United States and bonds of the War Finance Corporation owned by or held in trust for a nonresident alien at the time of his death, you are advised that bonds of the United States, beneficially owned by a nonresident alien, should not be included as a part of the gross estate in the United States for the purpose of the estate tax (Revenue Act of 1916, Sec. 202 (a); Revenue Act of 1918, Sec. 402 (a); Victory Liberty Loan Act, Act of March 3, 1919, Sec. 4 [¶310] amending Fourth Liberty Bond Act, Act of July 9, 1918, Sec. 3). This ruling is not in conflict with Treasury Decision No. 2530, and applies only to bonds enumerated in the above-mentioned Acts. (Letter to Herrick, Smith, Donald & Farley, Boston, Mass., signed by Deputy Commissioner James Hagerman, Jr., and dated August 21, 1920.)

310 Sec. 4 [of the Victory Liberty Loan Act].—That section 3 of the Fourth Liberty Bond Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

“Section 3. That, notwithstanding the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act or of the War Finance Corporation Act or of any other Act, bonds, notes, and certificates of indebtedness of the United States and bonds of the War Finance Corporation shall, while beneficially owned by a non-resident alien individual, or a foreign corporation, partnership, or association, not engaged in business in the United States, be exempt both as to principal and interest from any and all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States or by any local taxing authority.” (Section 4 of “An Act to amend the Liberty Bond Acts and the War Finance Corporation Act, and for other purposes,” known as the “Victory Liberty Loan Act,” approved by the President, March 3, 1919.)

311 Notice by others than duly qualified executor or administrator.—

714 The subjoined extract from an opinion of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue dated September 23, 1916, is published for the information of those concerned.

“The said law, the Revenue Act of September 8, 1916, section 200, defines the term ‘executor’ as meaning, ‘the executor or administrator, of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator any person who takes possession of any property of the decedent.’

“Section 205 requires ‘that the executor, within 30 days after qualifying as such, or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector;’ and that ‘the executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by the regulations made under this title, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth the value of the gross estate,’ etc.

“Manifestly the purpose of the law is to secure such information and returns as will enable the Government to properly execute the law and collect such taxes as may be thereby imposed.

“In view of this uniform interpretation as to the requirement of notice and returns in all matters of revenue taxation, as well as the specific language of the law, I am of the opinion that you are justified in the preparation of regulations requiring persons who come into possession of the property of a decedent, or any part thereof, prior to the appointment of executors or administrators, to give due notice to the Collector of that fact. When executors or administrators are appointed, they, of course, supersede all other persons in the control of the property whether such persons are in possession or not, and the duty of giving notice and making returns for the entire estate immediately devolves upon such executors or administrators.” (T. D. 2372, Sept. 25, 1916.)

312 Tax payment under 1918 Act may be enforced any time after expiration of one year period, in absence of extension, without regard to 180 day interest provision.—Reference is made to the memorandum dated June 19, 1920, transmitted by your Mr. Akers, who has requested to be advised whether the Bureau of Internal Revenue intends to require payment of Federal estate taxes within one year after the date of death of decedents whose estates are liable for the payment of such taxes.

313 You are advised that the Bureau of Internal Revenue has ruled in specific cases, and it is its present ruling, that Federal estate taxes are due and payable one year after the death of a decedent whose estate is liable for the payment of such taxes. Section 406 of the Revenue Act of 1918 contemplates that the Federal estate tax shall be paid one year after decedent's death in every case except where the Commissioner of Internal Revenue finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate and for that reason has granted an extension of time for the payment thereof. Article 90 of Regulations 37, Revised, 1919, relating to estate tax, requires payment of the tax at the expiration of one year from the date of the decedent's death.

314 There is nothing contained in Section 408 of the Revenue Act of 1918 which fixes a different due date for the payment of the tax than that specifically set forth in Section 406 thereof, nor is there anything contained therein which prohibits the collection of the tax at any time after it is due. There is a provision in Section 408, which will not permit a collector in any case to withhold proceedings for the collection of the tax longer than one hundred and eighty days after it is due unless there be reasonable cause for the delay.

315 In view of the foregoing, you are advised that payment of Federal estate taxes at the expiration of one year after the death of a decedent may be required in all cases except where the Commissioner finds that payment thereof within one year after decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate. Payment of estate taxes, therefore, may not be withheld for a period of one year and one hundred and eighty days after decedent's death by those liable therefor. In all cases, however, no interest may be added to the tax unless one year and one hundred and eighty days have expired without payment having been made, except in a case where one year and ninety days since decedent's death had expired prior to February 25, 1919, and payment had not been made.

316 There is returned herewith the memorandum which you transmitted to the Bureau. (Letter to The Corporation Trust Company, signed by Deputy Commissioner James Hagerman, Jr., and dated June 24, 1920.)

(281 Fed. 67.—T. D. 3325.)

The tax being due and payable one year after decedent's death, injunctive relief against its collection by distraint within the 180 day period thereafter will not be granted, there being ample remedy at law to redress any alleged injury consequent on enforced payment prior to the expiration of one year and 180 days.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT.

MALCOLM E. NICHOLS, INDIVIDUALLY AND AS COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE
DEFENDANT, APPELLANT,

v.

WILLIAM A. GASTON ET AL., EXECUTORS,
PLAINTIFFS, APPELLEES.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

213 Court for Massachusetts in a suit in equity brought by Gaston and Falvey, executors of the estate of James M. Prendergast, against Nichols individually and as Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Massachusetts, restraining the latter from collecting a tax assessed against the estate.

318 The complainants and the defendant are citizens of Massachusetts. Prendergast died November 29, 1920. The complainants duly filed their return, setting forth the value of the estate, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue assessed thereon a tax of $83,900.36, under Title IV of the Revenue Act of February 24, 1919 (40 Stat. at Large, p. 1096). The jurisdiction of the District Court, as a Federal court, is invoked on the ground that the suit is one arising under the internal revenue laws of the United States.

319 It is conceded that the tax of $83,900.36 assessed against the estate is legal and proper. The contention of the complainants is that, under Section 408 of the Act of 1919, they are given a year and 180 days after their testator's death in which to pay the tax, even though the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had not extended the time of payment under Section 406 for 180 days after its due-date, and that the defendant was not authorized to enforce its collection by distraint or otherwise until after the expiration of the 180 days; that, in violation of this right, the defendant, pretending to act in his capacity as collector, on the 4th of January, 1922, and before the 180 days had expired, notified the complainants that, unless the tax was paid within ten days, he should proceed to collect the same, with costs, by seizure and sale of property; that, under Section 408 of the Act of 1919 the collector is prevented from collecting the tax by distraint or otherwise within the 180 days; and that the threatened seizure, if carried out, would have been unauthorized and an act not done by him in his official capacity or with color of law. They further contend and allege in their bill that, if to avoid such threatened distraint, they at this time paid the tax, they would be remediless in law, as they had the privilege, under Section 406, of paying the tax at any time down to May 28, 1922, without interest. It was also alleged in the bill that the payment of the tax at the time of the commencement of the suit, rather than on May 28, 1922, would subject the estate to a loss of interest on the money during the interim of about three thousand dollars and would subject the estate to the difficulty of converting the assets into cash for the immediate payment of a large sum of money. But it appears in the final decree that it was stipulated in open court that the complainants had, at the time of the commencement of the suit and at the time of entering the decree, assets in their hands sufficient to meet the tax, and that the loss which they would have sustained by the payment would have been the interest on the tax, unless they were able to recover it back from the United States.

320 The basis of the decree was that the payment of the tax was "not required by law or compellable by distraint until one year and 180 days after the death of" the decedent; that payment of the tax at the time of the filing of the bill instead of in May, 1922, "would have subjected the estate . . . to loss of interest on the money so paid during the interim, amounting to the sum of approximately $3,000;" and that if, to avoid the threatened distraint, the complainants should "pay such tax prior to May 28, 1922, they would be remediless in the law."

321 The questions sought to be raised are (1) whether, on the facts herein stated, the complainants are entitled to injunctive relief; and (2) whether, in view of Section 3224 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court," this proceeding can be maintained.

322 We think that there can be no doubt but that the District Court as a Federal court, had jurisdiction authorizing it to entertain the proceeding, as it involves a controversy arising under the laws of the United States; and that the broad questions are whether, on the admitted and agreed facts, that court, as a court of equity, was warranted in granting the injunction, especially in view of the provisions of Section 3224.

323 It is a well recognized rule that a court of equity will not grant injunctive relief to complainants who have a remedy at law in the absence of a showing that the legal remedy is inadequate. If on the facts in this case the complainants would have had a remedy at law to redress their alleged injury, it cannot be contended that it would have been inadequate for the reason that the damages suffered would have been irreparable, as it appears that the only loss they would have sustained, had they paid the tax when demanded, would have been the loss of the use of the money during the balance of the 180 days, or in the vicinity of three thousand dollars.

324 The question therefore is, so far as equity jurisdiction is concerned, whether the complainants would have been without a legal remedy provided they had paid the tax under protest at the time of its demand.

325 Under Title XIII of the Revenue Law of 1919,—General Administrative Provisions—Section 1316 (a), it is provided:—

"Sec. 1316 (a) That Section 3220 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

Copyright 1928, by The Corporation Trust Company.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

“Sec. 3220. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to remit, refund, and pay back all taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, all penalties collected without authority, and all taxes that appear to be unjustly assessed or excessive in amount, or in any manner wrongfully collected; also to repay to any collector or deputy collector the full amount of such sums of money as may be recovered against him in any court, for any internal revenue taxes collected by him, with the cost and expenses of suit; also all damages and costs recovered against any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, agent, or inspector, in any suit brought against him by reason of any thing done in the due performance of his official duty, and shall make report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session of Congress of all transactions under this section.”

Large, p. 111), and as above set forth is, so far as concerns the question here considered, the same as when first enacted. It thus appears from the language of the act that had the complainants paid the tax under protest at the time it was demanded, they could have recovered judgment against the collector for all damages they sustained, if the collection was premature and they were thereby damaged. City of Philadelphia v. Collector, 5 Wall. 720, 731 (decided Dec. 1866); Moore v. Miller, 5 Court of App. Dist. Col. 413, 429. And the following decisions disclose that they would have been entitled to interest on the damages sustained down to the entry of final judgment (Schell v. Cochran, 107 U. S. 625; Kinney v. Conant, 166 Fed. 720), and that, upon a certificate of probable cause by the court, under Section 989 of the Revised Statutes, the liability of the Government to pay the judgment would attach. United States v. Sherman, 98 U. S. 565; Erschine v. Van Arsdale, 15 Wall. 75; National Volunteer Home v. Parrish, 229 U. S. 494, 496; Sage v. United States, 250 U. S. 33, 37; Smietanka v. Indiana Steel Co. (decided October 24, 1921)—U. S.—. The fact that interest on the judgment, after it becomes final, as defined in Schell v. Cochran, supra, does not run against the Government (it being presumed that the Government is always ready and able to pay), has never been regarded as rendering the remedy at law inadequate.

327 We are therefore of the opinion that the complainants have failed to show that they would have had no remedy at law. On the contrary, it would seem that they would have had a legal remedy by which they might have been reimbursed for all damages sustained, in case it should be found that the defendant was not authorized to demand and enforce the collection of the tax within the 180 days after it became due, and that the court below was without authority to grant the injunction, irrespective of the inhibition contained in Section 3224 of the Revised Statutes.

328 In view of the conclusion reached, we do not feel called upon to decide whether Section 3224 imposes upon a court of equity any greater restraint as to enjoining the assessment and collection of a tax than it would properly be called upon to exercise had the statute not been enacted. The remedy at law is regarded as exclusive and, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances such as would warrant the interposition of a court of equity, has always been held to be exclusive.

329 In United States v. Pacific R. R., 4 Dill. 66, 70, Mr. Justice Miller, sitting as Circuit Justice for the Eastern District of Missouri, in speaking of the legal remedy afforded by Section 3220 of the Revised Statutes, said:

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

"And we have said over and over again in our courts that that was a complete and exclusive system of correctional justice in regard to the collection of taxes unjustly assessed; that it was the only system, and by that ruling we abide. There can be no such thing as obstructing and objecting to the payment, as in the case of adjusting the accounts of individuals."

330 It would seem, however, that the inhibition of Section 3224 applies to all assessments or collections of internal revenue taxes made or attempted to be made under color of office by internal revenue officers charged with general jurisdiction over the assessment and collection of such taxes, and that, if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in assessing a tax, or the collector, in collecting it, acts under color of his office, Section 3224 applies, and that no suit to restrain the assessment or collection of the tax can be maintained.

331 In Dodge v. Osborn, 240 U. S. 118, Chief Justice White, in speaking of Sections 3220 and 3224, said:

"The plain purpose and scope of the sections are thus stated in Snyder v. Marks, 109 U. S. 189, 193-194, a suit brought to enjoin the collection of a revenue tax on tobacco:

"The inhibition of Rev. Stat., s. 3224, applies to all assessments of taxes, made under color of their offices, by internal revenue officers charged with general jurisdiction of the subject of assessing taxes against tobacco manufacturers. The remedy of a suit to recover back the tax after it is paid is provided by statute, and a suit to restrain its collection is forbidden. The remedy so given is exclusive, and no other remedy can be substituted for it. . . . Cheatham v. United States, 92 U. S. 85, 88; and again in State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 613, it was said by this court, that the system prescribed by the United States in regard to both customs duties and internal revenue taxes, of stringent measures, not judicial, to collect them, with appeals to specified tribunals, and suits to recover back moneys illegally exacted was a system of corrective justice intended to be complete, and enacted under the right belonging to the Government to prescribe the conditions on which it would subject itself to the judgment of the courts in the collection of its revenues. In the exercise of that right, it declares, by s. 3224, that its officers shall not be enjoined from collecting a tax claimed to have been unjustly assessed, when those officers, in the course of general jurisdiction over the subject-matter in question, have made the assignment (assessment) and claim that it is valid."

332 In Dodge v. Osborn, it was held that it was "no longer open to question that a suit may not be brought to enjoin the assessment or collection of a tax because of the alleged unconstitutionality of the statute imposing it;" that averments that unless the tax were enjoined many suits by other persons would be brought for recovery of the taxes paid by them and that the taxes assessed would be a lien upon the plaintiff's property constituting a cloud thereon, were wholly inadequate to sustain jurisdiction; and that the statute plainly forbids the enjoining of a tax "unless by some extraordinary and entirely exceptional circumstance its provisions are not applicable."

333 No question is raised in this case as to the authority of the Commissioner to assess the tax or as to the legality of the tax which he assessed. It is claimed, however, that the defendant, in undertaking to collect the tax, was acting without color of authority; that his acts were purely ministerial and in no way involved the exercise of discretion.

334 By Section 1305, Title XIII of the Act of 1919, it is provided:

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

"Sec. 1305. That all administrative, special or stamp provisions of law, including the law relating to the assessment of taxes, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to and made a part of this Act, and every person liable to any tax imposed by this Act, or for the collection thereof, shall keep such records and render, under oath, such statements and returns, and shall comply with such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe."

335 By Section 404—Title IV of the Act of 1919—it is provided:

"Sec. 404. . . . The Commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative, special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes."

336 By Section 3182 of the Revised Statutes it is provided:

"Sec. 3182. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and required to make the inquiries, determinations, and assessments of all taxes and penalties imposed by this Title, or accruing under any former internal-revenue act, where such taxes have not been duly paid by stamp at the time and in the manner provided by law, and shall certify a list of such assessments when made to the proper collectors respectively, who shall proceed to collect and account for the taxes and penalties so certified, etc."

337 And Sections 3183, 3184 and 3187 provide:

"Sec. 3183. It shall be the duty of the collectors, or their deputies, in their respective districts, and they are authorized to collect all the taxes imposed by law, however the same may be designated, etc."

"Sec. 3184. Where it is not otherwise provided, the collector shall in person or by deputy, within ten days after receiving any list of taxes from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, give notice to each person liable to pay any taxes stated therein, to be left at his dwelling or usual place of business, or to be sent by mail, stating the amount of such taxes and demanding payment thereof. If such person does not pay the taxes, within ten days after the service or the sending by mail of such notice, it shall be the duty of the collector or his deputy to collect the said taxes with a penalty of five per centum additional upon the amount of taxes, and interest at the rate of one per centum a month."

"Sec. 3187. If any person liable to pay any taxes neglects or refuses to pay the same within ten days after notice and demand, it shall be lawful for the collector or his deputy to collect the said taxes, with five per centum additional thereto, and interest as aforesaid, by distraint and sale, in the manner hereafter provided, of the goods, chattels, or effects, including stocks, securities, and evidences of debt, of the person delinquent as aforesaid, etc."

338 By Section 1307,—Title XIII of the Act of 1919—it is provided:

"Sec. 1307. That in all cases where the method of collecting the tax imposed by this Act is not specifically provided in this Act, the tax shall be collected in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, etc."

339 See Art. 116 of the Regulations for remedies prescribed for collection of tax.

340 These provisions of law vested the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with authority to assess the tax in question and to certify the same in his list to the defendant for collection, whose duty it was to proceed and collect the tax in accordance with his precept. The Commissioner in issuing his list to the defendant for the collection of the tax necessarily determined that the tax was due and payable, that no postponement of the time of payment had been granted, and that the defendant should proceed forthwith to collect it. It appears by Article 90 of the Rules and Regulations issued by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, construing Section 406, that the estate tax is due and payable one year from the date of death, and by Article 93 that the time of payment is to be extended only in case the Commissioner finds that payment of the tax one year from the date of death would impose undue hardship upon the estate. It cannot therefore be well claimed that the defendant, in proceeding under his precept and demanding payment of the tax, was not acting under color of authority or of his office, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue having, in the exercise of his general jurisdiction and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, determined that the tax was due and payable at the end of one year from the death of the decedent and issued his list or precept for its collection. Moore v. Miller, supra, 430.

341 If, under Section 406 and the Regulations, the tax is due and payable at the expiration of a year from death, where no postponement has been granted, then the provisions of Sections 406 and 408 are entirely consistent with one another and there is nothing in either section incompatible with action by the collector, upon receipt of the list, in forthwith demanding payment of the tax under Section 3184, and, if it is not paid, issuing a distraint warrant and enforcing collection by distraint under Section 3187.

342 Indeed it is quite probable that the correct interpretation of Section 406 is that the tax is due and collectible one year after decedent's death, in the absence of a postponement of the time of collection for cause shown; that if no postponement from the due-date is procured, payment is demandable forthwith, with the right to invoke the usual remedies for its collection; that if a postponement is obtained for 180 days and the tax is paid on or before the expiration of that time, no interest charge is to be made; that, if the tax is not paid on or before the expiration of the postponed period of 180 days, then interest for the 180 days is to be added to the tax, and, under Section 408, the collector is thereupon to proceed to collect the tax and avail himself of the usual remedies, unless the time of payment is further delayed or extended by the Commissioner; that Section 408 by requiring the collector, if the tax has not been paid within the 180 days after it is due, to then proceed to collect it under the provisions of general law, etc., unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, recognizes there has been a previous delay in its collection and that it was for cause, the cause provided for in Section 406; and that Section 408 is not in conflict with Section 406 as to time of collection but supplementary thereto and in harmony therewith. We do not, however, find it necessary to construe the law.

343 The only case called to our attention in which a court has granted an injunction restraining federal officials in the collection of a tax, since Section 3224 was enacted in 1867, is Frayser & Co. v. Russell, 3 Hughes, 227. But an examination of that case discloses that what the collector was asserting to be a tax was not a tax; that the collector had attempted to assess the tax himself, whereas, under Section 3371 of the Revised Statutes it was made the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make the assessment and certify the same to the collector. As the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had not assessed the tax and certified it to the collector, the latter had neither a tax to collect nor color of authority for its collection.

344 The decree of the District Court is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with directions to enter a decree of dismissal, with costs in this court and the court below to the appellant.

(Decision.)

(281 Fed. 74.—T. D. 3348.)

The tax being due and payable one year after decedent's death, injunctive relief against its collection by distraint within the 180 day period thereafter will not be granted, there being ample remedy at law to redress any alleged injury consequent on enforced payment prior to the expiration of one year and 180 days.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT.

Frank A. Page, Individually and as Collector of Internal Revenue,
Defendant, Appellant,

v.

Frank L. Polk Et Al., Executors,
Plaintiffs, Appellees.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Rhode Island.

213 Court for Rhode Island in a suit in equity brought by Frank L. Polk and the United States Trust Company of New York, Executors of the Estate of Josephine Brooks, against Frank A. Page individually and as Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Rhode Island, restraining the latter from collecting a tax assessed against the estate.

346 The complainants are citizens of New York and the defendant is a citizen of Rhode Island. Josephine Brooks died August 17, 1920. The complainants duly filed their return setting forth the value of the estate, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue assessed thereon a tax of $245,787.67, under Title IV of the Revenue Act of February 24, 1919 (Stat. at Large, p. 1096). The jurisdiction of the District Court, as a federal court, is involved on the ground of diverse citizenship and that the amount involved exceeds five thousand dollars exclusive of interest and costs; also on the ground that the suit is one arising under the internal revenue laws of the United States.

347 There is no controversy as to the legality or amount of the tax assessed against the estate. The complainants contend that under Section 408 of the Act of 1919, they are given a year and 180 days after their testatrix's death in which to pay the tax, even though the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had not extended the time of payment under Section 406 for 180 days after its due date, and that the defendant was not authorized to enforce its collection by distraint or otherwise until after the expiration of 180 days; that in violation of this right, the defendant, pretending to act in his capacity as collector, on the 28th day of September, 1921, and before the 180 days had expired, notified the complainants that, unless the tax was paid within ten days, he should proceed to collect the same, with costs, by seizure and sale of property; that under Section 408 of the Act of 1919 the collector is prevented from collecting the tax by distraint or otherwise within 180 days; and that the threatened seizure, if carried out, would have been unauthorized and an act not done by him in his official capacity or with color of law. They further contend and allege in their bill that if, to avoid such threatened distraint, they at this time paid the tax, they would be remediless in law, as they had the privilege, under Section 406, of paying the tax at any time down to February 13, 1922, without interest. It was also alleged in the bill that the payment of the tax at the time of the commencement of the suit rather than on February 13, 1922, would subject the estate to loss of interest on the money during the interim in excess of five thousand dollars, and would subject the estate to the difficulty of converting the assets into cash for immediate payment of a large sum of money. But it appears in the final decree that it was stipulated in open court that the complainants had, at the time of the commencement of the suit and at the time of entering the decree, assets in their hands sufficient to meet the tax, and that the loss which they would have sustained by the payment would have been the interest on the tax, unless they were able to recover it back from the United States.

348 It was decreed that the payment of the tax was "not required by law or compellable by distraint until one year and 180 days after the death of Josephine Brooks, which occurred on the seventeenth day of August, 1920"; that payment of the tax "at the time of the filing of the original bill herein, instead of in February, 1922 . . ., would have subjected the estate . . . to loss of interest on the money so paid during the interim amounting to a sum in excess of $5,000; and that if, to avoid the threatened distraint, the plaintiffs should themselves pay such tax prior to February 13, 1922, they would be remediless in the law." It was further decreed that the defendant, his agents and servants, be permanently restrained "from making or attempting to make any seizure, distress or distraint of the property of the complainants . . . until the expiration of the thirteenth day of February, 1922 (but no longer)," and "that the complainants recover of the defendant, Frank A. Page individually, the sum of $46.54, their costs and disbursements herein duly taxed."

349 The bill of complaint was filed October 4, 1921. The final decree was entered December 27, 1921. A petition for appeal and assignment of errors was filed January 27, 1922, and on that day the appeal was allowed and citation issued returnable to this court February 24, 1922, the service of which was accepted January 27, 1922. The record was filed in this court February 9, 1922.

When the case came on for hearing in this court the appellees (complainants) moved to affirm the decree or dismiss the appeal on the ground that, the tax having been paid, the questions presented by the appeal were academic. The appellant objected and now contends that the case should be considered on its merits and the decree reversed on the authority of our decision of March 21, 1922, in Nichols v. Gaston et al., Executors [¶317, herein]; that no other course can properly be taken as costs were awarded against him in the court below, which he has paid.

351 Costs having been decreed against the appellant from which he would be relieved if the decree should be reversed, we think the case must be considered on its merits. Matter of Application of Martin v. W. J. Johnston Co., 128 N. Y. 605.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

352 The facts in this case, so far as they relate to the right of the appellees to restrain the appellant from collecting the tax, differ in no respect from those considered by us in Nichols v. Gaston et al., Executors, supra, in which it was held that the injunction was improperly issued. We see no occasion for receding from the views there expressed and are of the opinion that the appellees' motion should be denied, the decree of the District Court reversed, and costs awarded the appellant in this court and in the court below.

The decree of the District Court is reversed and the case is remanded to that court with directions to enter a decree dismissing the bill, with costs to the appellant in this court and in the District Court.

353 United States bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than four per centum to be accepted at par and accrued interest in payment of estate tax.—Section 14 [6] of the Act of April 4, 1918 (Public—No. 120—65th Congress), provided in part:

"That any bonds of the United States bearing interest at a higher rate than four per centum (whether issued under section one of this Act or upon conversion of bonds issued under this Act or under said Act approved April twenty-fourth, nineteen hundred and seventeen), which have been owned by any person continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death, and which upon such date constitute part of his estate, shall, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be receivable by the United States at par and accrued interest in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States, under or by virtue of any present or future law upon such estate or the inheritance thereof."

354 Bonds of the United States falling within the classification specified will be accepted in payment of estate tax at par and accrued interest.

Bonds so receivable must (1) bear a higher rate of interest than four per centum per annum, and (2) have been owned by the decedent continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death, and upon such date constitute a part of the estate of the decedent. The reckoning of the required period of ownership may begin on the date when the decedent acquired bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than four per centum, by purchase, by conversion of other bonds, or otherwise.

355 The entire estate tax may be paid in bonds, or the tax may be paid partially in bonds and partially by cash or check. Collectors may not, however, accept bonds the par value and accrued interest on which aggregate a greater amount than the tax. (T. D. 2705, April 23, 1918.)

Receipt of Converted Liberty Bonds for Estate Taxes.

356 1. Four per cent bonds converted—Computation of time.—Where a decedent converted second Liberty 4% Bonds into third Liberty 4½% Bonds three weeks prior to his death, the latter bonds are not receivable for estate or inheritance taxes under the provisions of Section 14, Act of April 4, 1918 [¶353 herein] (40 Stat. 503, 505), as they were not held by him for at least six months prior to his death, and as the time that the four per cent bonds were held can not be tacked onto the period of holding the  $4\frac{1}{4}\%$  bonds.

357 2. Constitutionality of Act.—Section 14, so construed, does not work such unwarranted discrimination against that class of holders whose death occurred within the six months' period after the issue of the bonds, as to render unconstitutional so much of Section 14 as makes possible such result, as the classification is reasonable and proper, and treats all persons alike.

RECEIPT OF LIBERTY BONDS AND VICTORY NOTES FOR ESTATE OR INHERITANCE TAXES.

Department Circular No. 225.

358 1. The following regulations are prescribed pursuant to section 14 of the Second Liberty Bond Act, approved September 24, 1917, as amended by Third Liberty Bond Act, approved April 4, 1918, which section is as follows:

Sec. 14. That any bonds of the United States bearing interest at a higher rate than four per centum per annum (whether issued under section one of this Act or upon conversion of bonds issued under this Act or under said Act approved April twenty-fourth, nineteen hundred and seventeen), which have been owned by any person continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death, and which upon such date constitute part of his estate, shall, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be receivable by the United States at par and accrued interest in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States, under or by virtue of any present or future law upon such estate or the inheritance thereof.

Pursuant to section 18(d) of the Second Liberty Bond Act, approved September 24, 1917, as amended by the Victory Liberty Loan Act, approved March 3, 1919, the word "bonds" where it appears in the above section shall be deemed to include notes issued under said section 18. This circular supercedes Treasury Department Circulars No. 132, dated January 30, 1919, and No. 151, dated June 24, 1919.

359 2. The bonds and notes coming within the provisions of said section at present issued and outstanding are—

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

360 The words "bonds or notes" where they appear in this circular shall be deemed to refer, respectively, to the six issues of Liberty bonds and Victory notes above described. The First Liberty Loan  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds of 1932-1947, the First Liberty Loan Converted 4 per cent bonds of 1932-1947, the Second Liberty Loan 4 per cent bonds of 1927-1942, and the  $3\frac{3}{4}$  per cent Victory Liberty Loan notes of 1922-23 are not acceptable in payment of Federal estate or inheritance taxes and are not "bonds or notes" within the meaning of these regulations.

General Provisions.

361 3. Bonds or notes of the issues above specified are receivable for such taxes only in case such bonds or notes have been owned by the decedent continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death and upon such date constitute part of his estate. The reckoning of the required period of ownership will begin on the date when the decedent acquired such bonds or notes by original subscription, by purchase, by conversion of bonds or notes of other issues, or otherwise. For the purpose of reckoning the required period of ownership a fraction of a day shall be considered a whole day. In the case of acquisition of bonds or notes by original subscription, the date of original subscription, or the date of issue of the bonds or notes, whichever shall be later in time, shall be deemed to be the date of acquisition, provided that payment in full on the subscription shall have been completed and the bonds or notes delivered thereon. In the case of acquisition of bonds or notes by purchase, if registered bonds or notes of one of the issues above enumerated as acceptable in payment of Federal estate or inheritance taxes have been duly assigned in blank or for exchange or transfer, and delivered to the decedent assignee pursuant to such assignment, the date of such delivery will be deemed the date of acquisition, although such bonds or notes may not have been presented to the Treasury Department or to a Federal Reserve bank for transfer or exchange until a later date. In the case of acquisition of bonds or notes by conversion of bonds or notes of other issues previously owned, the date of presentation for conversion to the Treasury Department or a Federal Reserve bank will be deemed the date of acquisition: Provided, however, That (a)  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds of the First Liberty Loan Converted and of the Second Liberty Loan Converted issued on conversion of 4 per cent bonds presented after July 1, 1918, and on or before November 9, 1918, pursuant to the provisions of Treasury Department Circular No. 114, dated May 9, 1918, shall, for the purpose of reckoning the required period of ownership, be deemed to have been acquired on June 15, 1918, in the case of bonds of the First Liberty Loan Converted, and on May 15, 1918, in the case of bonds of the Second Liberty Loan Converted; and (b) 4 per cent bonds of the First Liberty Loan Converted and of the Second Liberty Loan presented for conversion into  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds on or after March 7, 1919, pursuant to the extension of the conversion privilege under Treasury Department Circular No. 137, as amended and supplemented, shall be deemed to be converted as of the interest payment date next succeeding the date of presentation for conversion, and such next succeeding interest payment date, and not the date of presentation for conversion, will be deemed to be the date of acquisition of such bonds for the purpose of reckoning the required period of ownership. Exchange of coupon for registered bonds or notes, or of registered for coupon bonds or notes, or of bonds or notes of one denomination for bonds or notes of other denominations of the same issue, or of temporary coupon bonds for permanent bonds, whether before or after the death of the decedent, will not prevent the receipt of the bonds or notes issued upon such exchange for estate or inheritance taxes, provided that no change of ownership takes place.

362 4. Bonds or notes tendered in payment of taxes pursuant to these regulations must be accompanied by an affidavit of one or more of the legal representatives of the estate on Form 760 Revised (Exhibit A), hereto attached, and the collector is authorized to require such further evidence as may be necessary to enable him to determine that the bonds or notes are properly receivable in payment of estate or inheritance taxes pursuant to law and these regulations. The term "legal representative" where it appears in this circular means the executor or administrator of the decedent's estate or, if there be no executor or administrator, such other person or persons as may be recognized as such under the Estate Tax Law and regulations and entitled to assign any registered bonds or notes owned by the decedent under the regulations of the Treasury Department with regard to United States bonds and notes.

363 5. On receipt of such bonds or notes, and on making such determination, and provided that the bonds or notes tendered conform to the other provisions of these regulations, the collector shall stamp or plainly write upon the face of each bond or note, over his signature, the following legend in indelible ink:

.....This bond/note has this day been received in payment of estate (or inheritance) taxes on the estate of.....
(Name of decedent.)
under authority of law, and will not be redeemed by the United States except for credit of the undersigned. ....,
Collector of Internal Revenue for the..... District of.....

364 Coupons, if any, attached to each bond or note, shall be indelibly stamped or marked "canceled" on the face of each coupon in letters of sufficient size to be plainly legible.

365 6. Where bonds or notes are owned by a partnership of which the decedent was a member for the six months prior to his death, and have been continuously so owned for at least the six months prior to his death, a fractional part of such bonds or notes proportionate to the deceased partner's share in the capital of the partnership will, for the purposes of these regulations, be deemed to have been owned by him to the extent that such fractional part is actually distributed to his estate upon liquidation: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to make bonds or notes acceptable in amounts less than some authorized denomination thereof. In addition to the affidavit on Form 760 Revised, proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury must be presented as to the ownership of the bonds or notes by the partnership and the decedent's interest in the partnership; such proof in general should include affidavits of the surviving partners and of the legal representative of the decedent's estate showing (1) the character and extent of the interest of the decedent in the capital of the partnership, (2) any special interest of the decedent in the bonds or notes, (3) the period of ownership of the bonds or notes by the partnership and the period of the decedent's membership in the partnership, and (4) the distribution of the bonds or notes to the decedent's estate on account of his distributive share in the partnership.

366 7. Where bonds or notes are held in trust for or otherwise beneficially owned by any person on terms which entitle him unconditionally to demand and receive the legal title or a divided share thereof at any time, he will, for the purposes of these regulations, be deemed the owner of such bonds or notes or such divided share thereof: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to make bonds or notes acceptable in amounts less than some authorized denomination thereof. In addition to the affidavit on Form 760 Revised, proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury must be presented as to the ownership of the bonds or notes by the trust and the decedent's interest therein; such proof in general should include affidavits by the trustee and the legal representative of the decedent's estate showing (1) the creation of the trust, the terms and duration thereof, and the interest of the decedent therein; (2) the property included under the trust, and particularly the period of ownership of the bonds or notes by the trust; and (3) the distribution of the bonds or notes to the decedent's estate on account of his share in the trust estate, and the liability to Federal estate (or inheritance) tax in respect to such bonds or notes.

367 8. The entire tax may be paid in bonds or notes, or the tax may be paid partly in bonds or notes and partly by any other form of payment permitted by law or regulations duly in force. Collectors may not, however, receive bonds or notes the par value and accrued interest of which, computed in accordance with these regulations, aggregate a greater amount than the tax in payment of which the bonds or notes are tendered. After bonds or notes, or cash, have been tendered and duly received in payment of the tax, an election as to the method of payment will be deemed to have been made by the taxpayer, and thereafter requests for the return of such bonds or notes, or cash, and the acceptance of payment in the alternative form will be refused.

368 9. Coupon bonds or notes received for estate (or inheritance) taxes must be delivered to the collector with all unmatured coupons attached and with all matured coupons detached. Detached matured coupons will not be receivable in payment of such taxes. The portion of the face amount of the current coupon which represents accrued interest to date of receipt for taxes will be determined in the manner prescribed by the interest tables (Exhibits B and C) hereto attached, and such accrued interest will be receivable for estate or inheritance taxes.

369 10. Temporary coupon bonds, all coupons originally attached to which have matured and been detached, will not be accepted in payment of estate or inheritance taxes pursuant to the provisions of this circular, but must first be exchanged for permanent bonds, pursuant to the provisions of Treasury Department Circular No. 164, dated December 15, 1919, as amended and supplemented: Provided, however, That Fourth Liberty Loan  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds of 1933-1938, in temporary form, will be acceptable until April 15, 1921, and First Liberty Loan Second Converted  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds of 1932-1947, in temporary form, will be acceptable until June 15, 1921, in payment of such taxes, accrued interest on such bonds to date of receipt of taxes being covered for the current interest period by the temporary coupon bond; but after such dates, respectively, such temporary bonds must be exchanged for permanent bonds before presentation.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

370 11. Coupon bonds or notes, after being received, and reception indorsed on the bonds or notes as above required, will be deposited by the collector in the Federal Reserve Bank of the district in which his office is located (or Federal Reserve branch bank, as hereinafter provided) as a deposit of the par value with accrued interest, determined as above required. Such bonds or notes, unless delivered direct to the Federal Reserve bank or branch when located in the same city, must be transmitted by registered mail but will not be insured. The collector will transmit with the bonds or notes an accurate schedule on Form 761 Revised (Exhibit D) hereto attached, showing the serial number and denomination of each bond or note transmitted, the issue, the date of receipt for taxes, the amount of accrued interest, and the amount for which credited against estate or inheritance taxes. Such schedule shall be made in quadruplicate, the original to accompany the bonds or notes deposited with the Federal Reserve bank, the duplicate to be transmitted to such Federal Reserve bank under separate cover, the triplicate to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington, and the remaining copy to be retained by the collector. Collectors located in Federal Reserve bank branch cities will deposit coupon bonds or notes received by them hereunder with such branches in accordance with the provisions hereof, and the term "Federal Reserve bank," where it appears herein, includes such branches unless otherwise indicated by the context.

371 12. The Federal Reserve bank on receipt and examination of such bonds or notes will charge the Treasurer's account with par and accrued interest to date of receipt for taxes as reported by the collector, give credit in the Treasurer's account to the collector for like amount, and issue a certificate of deposit in triplicate on National Bank Form 15, transmitting the original to the Secretary of the Treasury through the Treasurer of the United States with its transcript, and the duplicate and triplicate to the collector, who will forward the duplicate to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Such Federal Reserve bank will then physically cancel the bonds or notes and coupons attached, and transmit the same to the Treasurer of the United States with the original or duplicate of the collector's schedule (Form 761 Revised), to which shall be added the Federal Reserve bank's certificate as shown thereon.

372 13. In the event that bonds or notes in coupon form are tendered to a collector of internal revenue in payment of Federal estate or inheritance taxes hereunder, and after having been received by the collector and stamped or otherwise indorsed by him as provided herein, are found to be not acceptable in payment of such taxes, Federal Reserve banks will issue clean bonds or notes in exchange for such erroneously stamped or indorsed coupon bonds or notes through the denominational exchange account: Provided, however, That the bonds or notes erroneously stamped or indorsed and presented for such exchange must be accompanied by an official certificate on Form 834 (Exhibit E) attached hereto, signed by the collector of internal revenue concerned, to the effect that the stamp or indorsement was affixed in error and that the bonds or notes (which must be specifically described) were not in fact accepted in payment of estate or inheritance taxes. Such exchanges need not be reported specifically to the Department, but the bonds or notes so stamped or indorsed and replaced must be accompanied by the certificate above described when forwarded by the Federal Reserve bank to the Department for credit. In case any such bonds or notes have been deposited with a Federal Reserve bank and charged to the Treasurer's account and credit therein given to the collector therefor, pursuant to paragraph 12 hereof, the Federal Reserve bank will issue new bonds or notes therefor as herein provided through its denominational exchange account, taking the receipt of the collector for such bonds or notes on Form N-2 (Exhibit G) attached hereto, and charging the collector in the Treasurer's account with the amount previously credited therein on account of such bonds or notes, supporting the entry with the receipt on Form N-2.

Registered Bonds or Notes.

373 14. Registered bonds or notes are also receivable for estate or inheritance taxes in accordance with these regulations. In addition to requiring the affidavit (Form 760 Revised) the collector shall determine that the registered owner whose name is inscribed on the bond or note is the decedent whose estate is liable to estate (or inheritance) taxes and that the bond or note is presented from the custody or control of the legal representative or representatives of such estate. Such bond or note shall be assigned to "the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption in payment of estate (or inheritance) taxes" by the authorized legal representative or representatives of the deceased registered owner. If an executor or administrator of the decedent's estate has been appointed, such representative or representatives must furnish to the collector a certificate under the seal of the court in which the estate is being administered or a duly certified copy of the letters testamentary or of administration, showing the appointment of such representative or representatives, the date thereof, and that the appointment is still in force. Such certificate or certification of the copy must be dated not more than thirty days prior to its presentation to the collector. All such documents of authority will be attached to the bond or note and forwarded therewith by the collector as hereinafter provided. where there are two or more legal representatives, all must unite in the assignment, unless by decree of court or testamentary provision some one or more of them is designated or empowered to dispose of the bonds or notes. If no executor or administrator has been appointed, the assignment must be made by the person or persons entitled to assign the bonds or notes under the regulations of the Treasury Department as to transfers without administration, and the bonds or notes will be accepted subject to submission to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, for specific approval of the transfer. The form printed on the back of the bond or note must be used for assignment, and the assignment must be dated and properly acknowledged as prescribed in the note printed on the back of the bond or note. Officers authorized to take acknowledgements of assignments of registered bonds or notes in addition to those mentioned on the back of the bond are designated in paragraph 16 of Treasury Department Circular No. 141, dated September 15, 1919, and in the general regulations of the Treasury Department with regard to United States bonds and notes. The collector will satisfy himself that the above-mentioned documents of authority and the requisite signatures and acknowledgments are in hand before noting on the bond or note its reception for taxes, as provided in paragraph 5 hereof, but the final determination of the correctness or validity of the assignment will be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, at Washington, on receipt of all such bonds or notes and documents, when transmitted as hereinafter provided.

374 15. By reason of the periodical closing of the transfer books of the Treasury Department for the payment of interest on registered bonds and notes, and the impossibility of stopping payment of interest to the registered holder during the period of such closing, registered bonds and notes will not be receivable in payment of estate or inheritance taxes during the period of closing of the books of the issue in question unless an adjustment of interest is made with the collector as prescribed by paragraph 17 hereof. The books are closed with respect to each issue for one month prior to each interest date. The closed periods with respect to each bond or note may therefore be determined by inspection of the bond or note itself, being one month prior to each interest payment date named thereon, and until the day following such interest payment date. The closed periods for each issue of bonds or notes receivable for estate or inheritance taxes are also stated in the table (Exhibit H [¶386]) hereto attached.

375 16. Collectors will examine each registered bond or note tendered for estate or inheritance taxes to determine whether the transfer books of the issue in question are then opened or closed. If the books are then open but are due to close on a date too early to permit the bond or note to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, and to be received by such division prior to the closing date, the collector will advise the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, by telegraph at the time of receipt of the bond or note, using form (Exhibit I) hereto attached, and will immediately confirm the same by mail. The Division of Loans and Currency will thereupon stop interest payment on such bond or note. The Secretary reserves the right to require an adjustment of the interest on any registered bond or note tendered to the collector during an open period but received at the Division of Loans and Currency during a closed period of the transfer books of the issue in question. Executors and other legal representatives are urged to tender registered bonds or notes at a time when the transfer books of such bonds or notes are open, or to exchange such bonds or notes for coupon bonds or notes before the transfer books of such bonds or notes close in order to avoid the necessity for interest adjustments.

376 17. Registered bonds or notes tendered pursuant to these regulations will be received at par and accrued interest computed in accordance with tables (Exhibits B and C), hereto attached. If such bonds or notes are tendered while the transfer books are open, the interest will be computed from the last preceding interest date as shown thereon to the date of receipt. If they are tendered while the transfer books are closed, since it is impossible to stop the mailing of the next interest check, they may be received at par, with a deduction for the interest from the date of receipt to such next following interest date, computed in accordance with said tables.

377 18. Registered bonds or notes received pursuant to these regulations, and bearing the stamp or writing required by paragraph 5 hereof, will be transmitted with all accompanying documents of authority to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington, by registered mail, but not insured. The collector will make an accurate schedule on Form 762 Revised (Exhibit J), hereto attached, in triplicate, showing the date of death of the decedent, the serial number and denomination of each bond or note, the issue, accrued interest, the date of receipt for taxes, and the amount for which credited against estate or inheritance taxes. The original of this schedule must accompany the bonds or notes sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency; the duplicate shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, under separate cover; and the triplicate shall be retained by the collector.

378 19. On receipt of such bonds or notes, the Division of Loans and Currency will determine whether the assignment is sufficient and has been properly executed, whether the bonds or notes are of an issue receivable for estate or inheritance taxes hereunder, whether the Department's record of registration is consistent with the affidavit of ownership (Form 760 Revised), and the amount at which such bonds or notes are receivable for estate or inheritance taxes, and will, if it finds the bonds or notes in order, transmit them with its advice on Form L. & C. 122 (Exhibit K), hereto attached, to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption. The Treasurer will thereupon cancel the bonds or notes and issue a certificate of deposit in the name of the collector, in triplicate, and will forward the original to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, and transmit the duplicate and triplicate of such certificate to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Accounts Division, who will forward the triplicate to the collector.

379 20. In the event that bonds or notes in registered form are tendered to a collector of internal revenue in payment of Federal estate or inheritance taxes, pursuant hereto, and after having been assigned to the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption in payment of such taxes and received and stamped or otherwise indorsed by the collector as provided herein, are found to be not acceptable in payment of such taxes, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Federal Reserve banks, will either (1) accept such registered bonds or notes for exchange for new registered bonds or notes registered in the same name, or (2) accept such registered bonds or notes, notwithstanding the assignment to the Secretary of the Treasury and the collector's stamp or indorsement thereon, for transfer or exchange pursuant to such subsequent assignments as may appear on such bonds or notes: Provided, however, in either case, that such registered bonds or notes are accompanied by an official certificate on Form 835 (Exhibit F), attached hereto, signed by the collector of internal revenue concerned, to the same effect as the certificate prescribed in paragraph 13 hereof, with reference to coupon bonds or notes. Registered bonds or notes so tendered in payment of Federal estate or inheritance taxes and erroneously assigned and stamped or indorsed must be forwarded by the Federal Reserve bank to the Treasury Department, Division of Loans and Currency, in regular course, and when forwarded must be accompanied by the official certificate of the collector.

General.

380 21. Until certificates of deposit are received by the collector, the amounts of bonds or notes deposited must be carried as "Cash on hand," and not credited as "Collections," as the dates of the certificates of deposit determine the dates of collections.

381 22. The Secretary of the Treasury may amend or withdraw the foregoing regulations in whole or in part at any time. (Department Circular No. 225, signed by D. F. Houston, Secretary of the Treasury, and dated January 31, 1921.)

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

*Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.Example.384 \$10,850 Third 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ s tendered in payment of estate taxes January 5, 1921.Interest payment dates on Third 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ s are shown on the face thereof to be March 15 and September 15 in each year.

Current half year interest period therefore ends March 15, 1921.

The year 1921 being a "regular" (not a "leap") year, find "March" in the list at head of table under "Regular years." This list shows that the half year ending March 15 in a regular year has 181 days.

Compute number of days since the beginning of such half year that have expired to date of tender of bonds, thus:

1920.	Days.
Sept. 15 to Sept. 30.....	15
October.....	31
November.....	30
December.....	31
1921.
January.....	5
Total.....	112

Enter table headed "Half year of 181 days" (second column) and seek in that column the amount of interest on $100 for 112 days. This will be found opposite the figure "112" (days) in first column, and proves to be $1.31491713, which is the decimal for $100 for 112 days.

The amount of bonds presented being \$10,850, the decimal above stated must be multiplied by 108.5; the result is \$142.6685, which is the amount of accrued interest due on January 5, 1921, on \$10,850 Third 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ s; accordingly the bonds are worth for estate taxes \$10,992.67.Fractions of cents if less than  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent, will be disregarded; if  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent or more, will be counted as 1 cent.Exhibit C.*385*VICTORY LIBERTY LOAN*Form L. & C. 226.Interest Table for 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ % Per Cent Victory Notes Received for Estate or Inheritance Taxes.(Prepared by Government actuary)*Note.—Interest on Victory notes is computed on actual day's basis within the interest period. For any given interest computation, the appropriate column to be used may be determined from the following.Number of Days in Each Half Year*Half year ending the 15th day of.....

Interest payment dates on Victory notes are shown on the face thereof to be June 15 and December 15 in each year, and at maturity.

Current half-year interest period therefore ends June 15, 1921.

The year 1921 being a regular year, find "June" in the list at head of table under "Regular year." This list shows that the half year ending June 15, in a regular year, has 182 days.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

Forward references to which are embodied in the foregoing Regulations 63.

Compute number of days since the beginning of such half year that have expired to date of tender of note, thus:

	Days.
1920.
December 15 to December 31.....	16
1921.
January.....	5
Total.....	21

Enter table headed "Half year of 182 days" (second column) and seek in that column the amount of interest on $100 for 21 days. This will be found opposite the figure "21" (days) in the first column, and proves to be $0.2740385, which is the decimal for $100 for 21 days.

The amount of notes presented being \$11,350, the decimal above stated must be multiplied by 113.5; the result is \$31.1034, which is the amount of accrued interest due on January 5, 1921, on \$11,350 Victory 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ s—accordingly, the notes are worth for estate taxes, \$11,381.10.

Fractions of cents, if less than  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent, will be disregarded; if  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent or more, will be counted as 1 cent.

INDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(T. D. 3144.)

387 Receipt of Liberty bonds or Victory notes for estate and inheritance taxes.—The appended [foregoing] Department circular No. 225 [beginning at ¶356], issued under date of January 31, 1921, with reference to receipt of Liberty bonds and Victory notes in payment of estate and inheritance taxes, is published for the information of internal-revenue officers and others concerned. This circular supersedes Department circulars No. 132, dated January 30, 1919 (T. D. 2802), and No. 151, dated June 24, 1919 (T. D. 2905). (T. D. 3144, signed by Acting Commissioner Paul F. Myers, and dated March 3, 1921.)

388 Receipt of Liberty Bonds, Victory Notes, and Treasury Notes for 216 Estate or Inheritance Taxes.—The appended [¶389] department circular, issued under date of June 30, 1922, with reference to receipt of Treasury notes of the United States in payment of Federal estate and inheritance taxes, is published for the information of internal-revenue officers and others concerned. This circular supplements Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921 (T. D. 3144) [¶387]. (T. D. 3383, signed by Commissioner D. H. Blair, and dated August 9, 1922.)

389 1. The provisions of Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921, prescribing regulations governing the receipt of Liberty bonds and Victory notes for Federal estate or inheritance taxes are hereby extended and made applicable to Treasury notes of the United States now or hereafter issued under authority of Section 18 of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended and supplemented, bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per centum per annum, and any such Treasury notes shall accordingly be receivable by the United States at par and accrued interest in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States, under or by virtue of any present or future law, upon the same terms and conditions as provided in said Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921, with respect to the acceptance of Liberty bonds and Victory notes bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per centum per annum.

390 2. The issues of Treasury notes at this date outstanding, bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per centum per annum, are:

Description	Date of Issue	Short Title
(a) 5½ per cent notes, payable June 15, 1924.....	June 15, 1921	Series A-1924
(b) 5½ per cent notes, payable Sept. 15, 1924.....	Sept. 15, 1921	Series B-1924
(c) 4¾ per cent notes, payable Mar. 15, 1925.....	Feb. 1, 1922	Series A-1925
(d) 4¾ per cent notes, payable Mar. 15, 1926.....	Mar. 15, 1922	Series A-1926
(e) 4¾ per cent notes, payable Dec. 15, 1925.....	June 15, 1922	Series B-1925

391 3. For the calculation of accrued interest on the current coupons of Treasury notes tendered in payment of estate or inheritance taxes under this circular, the method outlined in Exhibit B [¶383-384] to Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921, should be followed. Interest tables at the various rates borne by Treasury notes may be obtained from the Treasury Department, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington. The interest tables appropriate for use in connection with the issues of Treasury notes at present outstanding are as follows:

Form General 1017, for Series A-1924 (interest dates June 15 and December 15).

Form General 1016, for Series B-1924 (interest dates March 15 and September 15).

Form L. & C. 369, for Series A-1925 prior to September 15, 1922 (interest during this period is on annual 365-day basis).

Form L. & C. 435, for Series A-1925 subsequent to September 15, 1922 (interest dates March 15 and September 15).

Form L. & C. 435, for Series A-1926 (interest dates March 15 and September 15).

392 Interest tables or decimals for computing interest as may be required for other or future issues may be obtained from the Treasury Department, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington, upon request. (Extension of Department Circular No. 225, signed by Secretary A. W. Mellon, dated June 30, 1922 and appended to T. D. 3383.)

393 Transfer of stock: lien on stock and release of lien.—Reference 230 is made to your letter of June 16. You are advised that in all cases where the estate of a deceased person is liable for the payment of Federal estate tax under the Revenue Act of 1918, the entire gross estate, as that term is defined in Section 402 of the said Act, is impressed with a lien to the extent of the tax liability of the said estate for a period of ten years from the date of the decedent's death, except as provided in Section 409. It is the ruling of this Bureau that under Section 409 only the following parts of a decedent's gross estate are divested of the lien. Such part of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration, allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof; and the value of any property included in the gross estate which was transferred, or with respect to which a trust was created by the decedent, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except where the making of such transfer or the creating of such trust by the decedent constituted a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth), where the transferee or trustee has sold such property to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. No other part of the gross estate is divested of the lien by virtue of Section 409 of the said Act, nor may it be divested of such lien except by discharge of the tax liability of the estate or by a certificate issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue releasing it from the lien.

394 It will be seen from the foregoing, therefore, that any stock of a corporation which was owned by a decedent on the date of his death is not divested of the lien by virtue of anything contained in Section 409 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

395 This Bureau is at all times willing in any proper case to issue a release of lien with respect to any part of the gross estate where the tax liability of the estate has been discharged or provided for to the satisfaction of the Commissioner. Any transfer made by an executor of property forming a part of the gross estate of a decedent whose estate is liable for the payment of Federal estate tax, or the transfer by any person having in his possession property forming a part of such gross estate, except as provided in Section 409 aforesaid, will not operate to divest such property of the lien. (Letter to The Corporation Trust Company, signed by Deputy Commissioner James Hagerman, Jr., and dated June 26, 1920.)

396 No certificate releasing lien (waiver) required before transfer of 230 stock of a foreign corporation standing in the name of a nonresident decedent.—Referring to 60-day notice, on Form 705, filed for the estate of _____, deceased September 29, 1921, by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, you are advised that the stock of the British American Tobacco Company may be transferred without a waiver from this office, as this is not stock of a corporation organized within the United States, and such stock is not taxable as a part of the decedent's gross estate in the United States. (Letter to Solomon Hanford, New York, N. Y., signed by Deputy Commissioner McKenzie Moss, and dated September 11, 1922.)

Revenue Act of 1916.

Inheritance, legacy, succession, or transfer taxes are not deductible in the determination of the net estate subject to the Federal estate tax.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

New York Trust Company and Albert W. Pross, as Executors of the Will of J. Harsen Purdy, Plaintiffs in Error,  vs.  Mark Eisner.	}	In Error to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.
--	---	---

Mr. Justice HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

397 This is a suit brought by the executors of one Purdy to recover an 156 estate tax levied under the Act of Congress of September 8, 1916, c. 463, Title II, § 201, 39 Stat. 736, 777, and paid under duress on December 14, 1917. According to the complaint Purdy died leaving a will and codicil directing that all succession, inheritance and transfer taxes should be paid out of the residuary estate, which was bequeathed to the descendants of his brother. The value of the residuary estate was $427,414.96, subject to some administration expenses. The executors had been required to pay and had paid inheritance and succession taxes to New York ($32,988.97) and other States ($4,780.91) amounting in all to $37,-$69.88. The gross estate as defined in § 202 of the Act of Congress was 7769,799.39; funeral expenses and expenses of administration, except the above taxes, $61,322.08; leaving a net value for the payment of legacies, except as reduced by the taxes of the United States, of $670,707.43. The plaintiffs were compelled to pay $23,910.77 to the United States, no deduction of any part of the above mentioned $37,769.88 being allowed. They allege that the Act of Congress is unconstitutional, and also that it was misconstrued in not allowing a deduction of state inheritance and succession taxes as charges within the meaning of § 203. On demurrer the District Court dismissed the suit.

398 By § 201 of the Act, "a tax * * * equal to the following percentage of the value of the net estate, to be determined as provided in section two hundred and three, is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this Act." * * * with percentages rising from one per centum of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000 to ten per centum of the amount in excess of $5,000,-000. Section 202 gives the mode of determining the value of the gross estate. Then, by § 203 it is enacted "That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, and such other charges against the estate, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered; and (2) an exemption of $50,000." The tax is to be due in one year after the decedent's death. § 204. Within thirty days after qualifying the executor is to give written notice to the collector and later to make return of the gross estate, deductions allowed, net estate and the tax payable thereon. § 205. The executor is to pay the tax. § 207. The tax is a lien for two years on the gross estate except such part as is paid out for allowed charges, § 209, and if not paid within sixty days after it is due is to be collected by a suit to subject the decedent's property to be sold. § 208. In case of collection from some person other than the executor, the same section provides for contribution from or marshalling of persons subject to equal or prior liability "it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution." These provisions are assailed by the plaintiffs in error as an unconstitutional interference with the rights of the States to regulate descent and distribution, as unequal and as a direct tax not apportioned as the Constitution requires.

399 The statement of the constitutional objections urged imports on its face a distinction that, if correct, evidently hitherto has escaped this Court. See United States v. Field, [¶403 herein]. It is admitted, as since Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, it has to be, that the United States has power to tax legacies, but it is said that this tax is cast upon a transfer while it is being effectuated by the State itself and therefore is an intrusion upon its processes, whereas a legacy tax is not imposed until the process is complete. An analogy is sought in the difference between the attempt of a State to tax commerce among the States and its right after the goods have become mingled with the general stock in the State. A consideration of the parallel is enough to detect the fallacy. A tax that was directed solely against goods imported into the State and that was determined by the fact of importation would be no better after the goods were at rest in the State than before. It would be as much an interference with commerce in one case as in the other. I. M. Darnell & Son Co. v. Memphis, 208 U. S. 113. Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275. Conversely if a tax on the property distributed by the laws of a State, determined by the fact that distribution has been accomplished, is valid, a tax determined by the fact that distribution is about to begin is no greater interference and is equally good.

400 Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, dealt, it is true, with a legacy tax.

But the tax was met with the same objection; that it usurped or interfered with the exercise of state powers, and the answer to the objection was based upon general considerations and treated the 'power to transmit or the transmission or receipt of property by death' as all standing on the same footing. 178 U. S. 57, 59. After the elaborate discussion that the subject received in that case we think it unnecessary to dwell upon matters that in principle were disposed of there. The same may be said of the argument that the tax is direct and therefore is void for want of apportionment. It is argued that when the tax is on the privilege of receiving, the tax is indirect because it may be avoided, whereas here the tax is inevitable and therefore direct. But that matter also is disposed of by Knowlton v. Moore, not by an attempt to make some scientific distinction, which would be at least difficult, but on an interpretation of language by its traditional use—on the practical and historical ground that this kind of tax always has been regarded as the antithesis of a direct tax; 'has ever been treated as a duty or excise, because of the particular occasion which gives rise to its levy.. 178 U. S. 81-83. Upon this point a page of history is worth a volume of logic,

401 The inequalities charged upon the statute, if there is an intestacy' are all inequalities in the amounts that beneficiaries might receive in case of estates of different values, of different proportions between real and personal estate, and of different numbers of recipients; or if there is a will affect legatees. As to the inequalities in case of a will they must be taken to be contemplated by the testator. He knows the law and the consequences of the disposition that he makes. As to intestate successors the tax is not imposed upon them but precedes them and the fact that they may receive less or different sums because of the statute does not concern the United States.

402 There remains only the construction of the Act. The argument against its constitutionality is based upon a premise that is unfavorable to the contention of the plaintiffs in error upon this point. For if the tax attaches to the estate before distribution—if it is a tax on the right to transmit, or on the transmission at its beginning, obviously it attaches to the whole estate except so far as the statute sets a limit. 'Charges against the estate' as pointed out by the Court below are only charges that affect the estate as a whole, and therefore do not include taxes on the right of individual beneficiaries. This reasoning excludes not only the New York succession tax but those paid to other States, which can stand no better than that paid in New York. What amount New York may take as the basis of taxation and questions of priority between the United States and the State are not open in this case.

[T. D. 3150.]

Gross estate does not include an interest passing under testamentary execution of a general power of appointment.

(Act of Sept. 8, 1916, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1917.)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The United States, Appellant,

vs.

Stanley Field, as Executor of the Estate of Kate Field, deceased.

} Appeal from the Court of Claims.

Mr. Justice PITNEY delivered the opinion of the Court.

403 This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Claims sustaining 132 a claim for refund of an estate tax exacted under Title II of the Revenue Act of September 8, 1916, as amended by Act of March 3, 1917 (Ch. 463, 39 Stat. 756, 777; Ch. 159, 39 Stat. 1000, 1002). It presents the question whether the Act taxed a certain interest that passed under testamentary execution of a general power of appointment created prior but executed subsequent to its passage.

404 The facts are as follows: Joseph N. Field, a citizen and resident of Illinois, died April 29, 1914, leaving a will which was duly admitted to probate in that State, and by which he gave the residue of his estate, after payment of certain legacies, to trustees, with provision that one-third of it should be set apart and held as a separate trust fund for the benefit of his wife, Kate Field, the net income to be paid to her during life, and from and after her death the net income of one-half of said share of the trust estate to be paid to such persons and in such shares as she should appoint by last will and testament. The trust was to continue until the death of the last surviving grandchild of the testator who was living at the time of his death, and at its termination the undistributed estate was to be divided among named beneficiaries or their issue, per stirpes, in proportions specified. Kate Field died April 29, 1917, a resident of Illinois, leaving a will which was duly pro-bated in that State, by which she executed the power of appointment, directing that the income to which the power related should be paid in equal shares to her children surviving at the date of the respective payments, the issue of any deceased child to stand in the place of such deceased child. The collector of internal revenue, assuming to act under the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended, and Regulations issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, included as a part of the gross estate of Kate Field the appointed estate passing under her execution of the power; and proceeded to assess and collect an estate tax based upon the net value thereof, and amounting to $121,059.60.
Her executor, having paid the tax under protest, and having made a claim for refund which was considered and rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, brought this suit and recovered judgment, from which the United States appeals.

405 The Revenue Act of 1916, in sec. 201 (39 Stat. 777) imposes a tax equal to specified percentages of the value of the net estate "upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this Act." By sec. 203 (p. 778) the value of the net estate is to be determined by subtracting from the value of the gross estate certain specified deductions. The gross estate is to be valued as follows:

"Sec. 202. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated:

"(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate.

"(b) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title; . . . ."

407 The provision quoted from sec. 202 was construed by the Treasury Department, in U. S. Internal Revenue Regulations No. 37, relating to Estate Taxes, revised May, 1917, Art. XI, as follows: "Property passing under a general power of appointment is to be included as a portion of the gross estate of a decedent appointor."

408 No question being suggested as to the power of Congress to impose a tax upon the passing of property under testamentary execution of a power of appointment created before but executed after the passage of the taxing act (See Chandler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 473, 478-479; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 56-61), the case involves merely a question of the construction of the Act. Applying the accepted canon that the provisions of such acts are not to be extended by implication (Gould v. Gould, 245 U. S. 151, 153), we are constrained to the view—notwithstanding the administrative construction adopted by the Treasury Department—that the Revenue Act of 1916 did not impose an estate tax upon property passing under a testamentary execution of a general power of appointment.

409 The Government seeks to sustain the tax under both clauses above quoted from sec. 202.

410 The conditions expressed in clause (a) are to the effect that the taxable estate must be (1) an interest of the decedent at the time of his death, (2) which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration, and (3) is subject to distribution as part of his estate. These conditions are expressed conjunctively; and it would be inadmissible, in construing a taxing act, to read them as if prescribed disjunctively. Hence, unless the appointed interest fulfilled all three conditions, it was not taxable under this clause.

411 The chief reliance of the Government is upon the rule, well established in England and followed generally, but not universally, in this country, that where one has a general power of appointment either by deed or by will, and executes the power, equity will regard the property appointed as part of his assets for the payment of his creditors in preference to the claims of his voluntary appointees. See Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 344, 352.

412 The English cases are fully reviewed by the House of Lords in O'Grady v. Wilmot (1916) 2 A. C. 231, 246, et seq. Illustrative cases in the American courts are Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 307; Rogers v. Hinton, 62 N. C. 101, 105; Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200, 202; Knowles v. Dodge, 1 Mack. (D. C.) 66, 72; Freeman v. Butters, 94 Va. 406, 411; Tallmadge v. Sill, 21 Barb. 34, 51, et seq.; contra per Gibson, C. J., in Commonwealth v. Duffield, 12 Pa. 277, 279-281; Pearce v. Lederer, 262 Fed. Rep. 993; affirmed, Lederer v. Pearce, 266 Fed. Rep. 497.

413 It is tacitly admitted that the rule obtains in Illinois, and we shall so assume.

414 But the existence of the power does not of itself vest any estate in the donee. Collins v. Wickwire, 162 Mass. 143, 144; Keays v. Blinn, 234 Ill. 121, 124; Walker v. Treasurer, 221 Mass. 600, 602-603; Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 451. See Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 93.

415 Where the donee dies indebted, having executed the power in favor of volunteers, the appointed property is treated as equitable, not legal, assets of his estate; Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200, 203; Patterson Co. v. Lawrence, 83 Ga. 703, 707; and (in the absence of statute), if it passes to the executor at all, it does so not by virtue of his office but as a matter of convenience and because he represents the rights of creditors. O'Grady v. Wilmot (1916) 2 A. C. 231, 248-257; Smith v. Garey, 2 Dev. & Bat. Eq. (N.C.) 42, 49; Olney v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318, 322; Emmons v. Shaw, 171 Mass. 410, 411; Hill v. Treasurer, 229 Mass. 474, 477.

416 Where the power is executed, creditors of the donee can lay claim to the appointed estate only to the extent that the donee's own estate is insufficient to satisfy their demands. Patterson Co. v. Lawrence, 83 Ga. 703, 708; Walker v. Treasurer, 221 Mass. 600, 602-603; Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 452.

417 It is settled that (in the absence of statute) creditors have no redress in case of a failure to execute the power. Holmes v. Coghill, 7 Ves; 499, 507, affirmed, 12 Ves. 206, 214-215; Gilman v. Bell, 99 Ill. 144, 150. Duncanson v. Manson, 3 App. D. C. 260, 273.

418 And, whether the power be or be not exercised, the property that was subject to appointment is not subject to distribution as part of the estate of the donee. If there be no appointment, it goes according to the disposition of the donor. If there be an appointment to volunteers, then, subject to whatever charge creditors may have against it, it goes not to the next of kin or the legatees of the donee, but to his appointees under the power.

419 It follows that the interest in question, not having been property of Mrs. Field at the time of her death, nor subject to distribution as part of her estate, was not taxable under clause (a).

420 We deem it equally clear that it was not within clause (b). That clause is the complement of (a), and is aptly descriptive of a transfer of an interest in decedent's own property in his life time, intended to take effect at or after his death. It cannot, without undue laxity of construction, be made to cover a transfer resulting from a testamentary execution by decedent of a power of appointment over property not his own.

421 It would have been easy for Congress to express a purpose to tax property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by a decedent had such a purpose existed; and none was expressed in the Act under consideration. In that of February 24, 1919, which took its place, the section providing how the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined contains a clause precisely to the point (sec. 402 (e), 40 Stat. 1097); "To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except", etc. Its insertion indicates that Congress at least was doubtful whether the previous Act included property passing by appointment. See Matter of Miller, 110 N. Y. 216, 222; Matter of Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 211, 217-218; United States v. Bashaw, 50 Fed. Rep. 749, 754. The Government contends that the amendment was made for the purpose of clarifying rather than extending the law as it stood, and cites a statement to that effect in the Report of the House Committee on Ways and Means (House Doc. No. 1267, p. 101, 65th Cong. 2d Sess.). It is evident, however, that this statement was based upon the interpretation of the Act of 1916 adopted by the Treasury Department; the same report proceeded to declare (p. 102) that "The absence of a provision including property transferred by power of appointment makes it possible, by resorting to the creation of such a power, to effect two transfers of an estate with the payment of only one tax;" and this, together with the fact that the committee proposed that the law be amended, shows that the Treasury construction was not treated as a safe reliance.

422 The tax in question being unsupported by the taxing act, the Court of Claims was right in awarding reimbursement.

State and municipal bonds held by decedent to be included in determining value of gross estate for purposes of the tax.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mary Louise Greiner, Executrix, etc., Plaintiff in Error, vs. C. G. Lewellyn, Collector of Internal Revenue.	}	In Error to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania. [April 10, 1922.]
--	---	--

Mr. Justice BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

423 This action was brought in the federal court for Western Penn-76 sylvania against the Collector of Internal Revenue to recover part of an amount assessed as estate tax under the Act of September 8, 1916, c. 463, Title II, 39 Stat. 756, 777, and paid by the plaintiff as executrix of the estate of Kate B. Kingsley. In determining the net value of the estate upon the transfer of which the tax was imposed, the Collector had included bonds issued by political subdivisions of the State of Pennsylvania.
The executrix claimed that to include these municipal bonds was in effect to tax them—which the Federal Government is under the Constitution without power to do. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 583, 654; 158 U. S. 601, 618, 693. The District Court overruled this claim and entered judgment for defendant. The case comes here on writ of error under Section 238 of the Judicial Code. Whether Congress has power to require that state and municipal bonds held by a decedent be included for the purpose of determining the net value on which the estate tax is imposed is the sole question presented for decision.

424 That the Federal Government has power to tax the transmission of legacies was settled by Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41; and that it has the power to tax the transfer of the net assets of a decedent's estate was settled by New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, 256 U. S. 345 [¶397]. The latter case has established also that the estate tax imposed by the Act of 1916, like the earlier legacy or succession tax, is a duty or excise, and not a direct tax like that on income from municipal bonds. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., supra. A State may impose a legacy tax on a bequest to the United States, United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, or on a bequest which consists wholly of United States bonds, Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S.
115; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278 [see ¶307]. Likewise the Federal Government may impose a succession tax upon a bequest to a municipal corporation of a State, Snyder v. Bettman, 190 U. S. 249, or may, in determining the amount for which the estate tax is assessable, under the Act of 1916, include sums required to be paid to a State as inheritance tax, for the estate tax is the antithesis of a direct tax, New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, supra. Municipal bonds of a State stand in this respect in no different position from money payable to it. The transfer upon death is taxable, whatsoever the character of the property transferred and to whomsoever the transfer is made. It follows that in determining the amount of decedent's net estate municipal bonds were properly included.

Affirmed.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Victor E. Shwab, Executor of the last will and testament of Augusta J.
Dickel, Deceased, Plaintiff in Error,

vs.

Emanuel J. Doyle, United States Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth Collection District of Michigan.

In Error to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

REVENUE ACT OF 1916 [May 1, 1922.]

Mr. Justice McKENNA delivered the opinion of the Court.

425 Augusta Dickel by a deed dated April 21, 1915, assigned and delivered 118 to the Detroit Trust Company, stocks, bonds or securities of the 120 declared value of $1,000,000—with all their unmatured coupons, and the proceeds to be derived therefrom, both principal and income, in trust to invest and reinvest and to pay the net income for life to Victor E. Shwab or on his written order. After his death the net income was directed to be paid to six beneficiaries, his children. A power of delegating and selling or exchanging all securities was given to Shwab, and of reinvestment. During the life of Shwab the net income was to be paid to him or his order. After his death the trust was to continue during the lives of the beneficiaries and the net income was to be paid to them during their respective lives in equal shares.

426 There were other rights and powers given to plaintiff and the beneficiaries not necessary to mention.

427 The trust deed was accepted by the Detroit Trust Company on or before June 3, 1915.

428 Augusta Dickel died September 16, 1916, possessed of an estate of $800,000. Seven days before her death Congress passed an act entitled, "Estate Tax Act," 39 Stat. 777-780. The Act provided that according to certain percentages of the value of the net estate, a tax was to be imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of the Act, "to the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title."

429 Under the assumption that the Act was applicable to the deed made by Augusta Dickel to the Detroit Trust Company a tax was assessed and exacted from plaintiff in error (here called plaintiff) in the sum of $56,548.41. Plaintiff paid it under protest and then to recover it brought this action in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan, Southern Division.

430 A jury being impaneled to try the case, the plaintiff presented his contentions in requests for charges. These were, (1) to find for plaintiff. (2) Upon refusal of the court to so charge but not otherwise, that the deed of Mrs. Dickel to the Detroit Trust Company took effect more than a year before the enactment of the Act of September 8, 1916, that is, took effect immediately, not in possession or enjoyment at or after the death of Mrs. Dickel. (3) The words "in contemplation of death" do not refer to that general expectation of death which every mortal entertains, but rather the apprehension which arises from some existing condition of body or some impending peril. (4) If Mrs. Dickel when she made the trust deed was not in that apprehension arising from that condition of body or of an impending peril, it was not made within the meaning of the Act of Congress. (5) Mrs. Dickel having made the deed before the Act of Congress was passed, her purpose was not to defeat or evade the Federal Revenue Law.

431 There were other requests for instructions to the jury not material to be considered except that the Act of Congress was not retrospective in character and, therefore, did not impose a tax on the deed from Mrs. Dickel to the Trust Company. And that if it could be considered to have that character and effect, it would be unconstitutional and void as a denial of due process of law, and the taking of private property for public use without just compensation, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

432 The court ruled against all of the requests so far as the court considered them as presenting questions of law, but considered that whether the trust deed was made in contemplation of death was a question for the jury and submitted it to them, with aiding and defining explanations, and concluded by declaring, "the whole question is the question whether the transfer was made in contemplation of death; that is all there is to it."

433 The verdict of the jury was in favor of the defendant, upon which judgment was duly entered. It was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals (269 Fed. 321), to the action of which this writ of error is directed.

434 Plaintiff urges against the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals all of the contentions presented in his requests made to the District Court for instructions to the jury, but so diverse and extensive consideration is only necessary if the Act of Congress be of retrospective operation. To that proposition we shall, therefore, address our attention.

435 The initial admonition is that laws are not to be considered as applying to cases which arose before their passage unless that intention be clearly declared. 1 Kent. 455; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578; White v. United States, 191 U. S. 545; Gould v. Gould, 245 U. S. 151; Story, Const., Sec. 1398. The comment of Story is, "retrospective laws are, indeed, generally unjust; and, as has been forcibly said, neither accord with sound legislation nor with the fundamental principles of the social compact."

436 There is absolute prohibition against them when their purpose is punitive; they then being denominated ex post facto laws. It is the sense of the situation that that which impels prohibition in such case exacts clearness of declaration when burdens are imposed upon completed and remote transactions, or consequences given to them of which there could have been no foresight or contemplation when they were designed and consummated.

Copyright 1923, by The Corporation Trust Company.

438 There is certainly in it no declaration of retroactivity, "clear, strong and imperative," which is the condition expressed in United States v. Heth, 3 Cranch 398, 413; also United States v. Burr, 159 U. S. 78, 82-83.

439 If the absence of such determining declaration leaves to the statute a double sense, it is the command of the cases, that that which rejects retroactive operation must be selected.

440 The circumstances of this case impel to such selection. If retroactivity be accepted, what shall mark its limit? The Circuit Court of Appeals found the interrogation not troublesome. It said, "Congress would, we think, scarcely be impressed with a practical likelihood that a transfer made many years before a grantor's death (say twenty-five years, to use plaintiff's suggestion) would be judicially found to be made in contemplation of death under the legal definition applicable thereto, and without the aid of the two years prima facie provision." In other words, the sense of courts and juries, good or otherwise, might, against the words of the statute, and against what might be the evidence in the case, unhelpt by the presumption declared, fix the years of its retrospect. This would seem to make the difficulty or ease of proof a substitute for the condition which the statute makes necessary to the imposition of the tax, that is, the disposition with which the transfer is made; and certainly whether that disposition exist at an instant before death or years before death, it is a condition of the tax.

441 The construction of the Government is more tenable though more unrestrained. It accepted in bold consistency, at the oral argument, the challenge of twenty-five years, and a ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in bolder confidence, extends the statute to "transfers of any kind made in contemplation of death at any time whatsoever (italics ours) prior to September 8, 1916." The sole test in the opinion of that officer is "the date of the death of the decedent." He fixes no period to the retrospect he declares, but reserves, if he be taken at his word, the transfers of all times to the demands of revenue. In this there is much to allure an administrative officer. Indeed, its simplicity attracts anyone. It removes puzzle from construction and perplexity and pertinence on account of the distance of death from the transfer, risking no chances of courts or juries, in repugnance or revolt, taking liberties with the Act to relieve from its exactions to the demands of revenue.

442 If Congress, however, had the purpose assigned by the Commissioner it should have declared it; when it had that purpose it did declare it. In the Revenue Act of 1918 it reenacted Section 202 of the Act of September 8, 1916, and provided that the transfer or trust should be taxed whether "made or created before or after the passage of" the Act. And we cannot accept the explanation that this was an elucidation of the Act of 1916, and not an addition to it, as averred by defendant, but regard the Act of 1918 rather as a declaration of a new purpose; not the explanation of an old one. But granting the contention of the defendant has plausibility, it is to be remembered that we are dealing with a tax measure and whatever doubts exist must be resolved against it.

443 This we have seen is the declaration of the cases and this the basis of our decision, that is, has determined our judgment against the retroactive operation of the statute. There are adverse considerations and the Government has urged them all. To enter into a detail of them or of the cases cited to sustain them and of those cited to oppose them, either directly or in tendency, and the examples of the States for and against them, would extend this opinion to repellent length. We need only say that we have given careful consideration to the opposing argument and cases, and a careful study of the text of the Act of Congress, and have resolved that it should be not construed to apply to transactions completed when the Act became a law. And this, we repeat, is in accord with principle and authority. It is the proclamation of both that a statute should not be given a retrospective operation unless its words make that imperative and this cannot be said of the words of the Act of September 8, 1916.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Union Trust Company of San Francisco and Albert Lachman, as Executors of the last will and testament of Henriette S. Lach-man, deceased, Plaintiffs in Error,

vs.

Justus S. Wardell, United States Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of California, and John L. Flynn, United States Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of California.

In Error to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California.

Mr. Justice McKENNA delivered the opinion of the Court.

444 This case was argued at the same time and submitted with No. 200, 118 Shwab v. Doyle, just decided [¶425]. It involves, as that case did, 122 the Estate Tax Act of September 8, 1916, and its different facts illustrate and aid the principle upon which that case was decided.

445 Plaintiffs in error are executors of the last will and testament of Henriette S. Lachman, deceased. They were also parties to a trust deed made by her during her lifetime. They sued defendant in error Wardell, he then being United States Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of California to recover the sum of $4,545.50 that being the amount of a tax assessed against the estate of Henriette S. Lachman, upon the value of 4,985 shares of stock transferred in trust by Henriette S. Lachman to trustees upon the assumption that the Act of Congress of September 8, 1916 was applicable to the trust.

446 The following is a summary of the facts stated narratively. On May 31, 1901, Henriette S. Lachman was the owner of 7,475 shares of capital stock of the S. & H. Lachman Estate, a corporation. On that date she executed and delivered to Albert Lachman and Henry Lachman, her sons, the following instrument:

"Almeda, Cal., May 31, 1901.

"To Albert Lachman and Henry Lachman, my sons:

"This is to certify that I have delivered to you seven thousand four hundred and seventy-five (7,475) shares of the capital stock of the S. & H.
Lachman Estate, represented by certificates, numbers eleven (11), twelve (12) and thirteen (13) respectively, however, upon the following trust:

"To pay to me during my lifetime, all the income earned and derived therefrom, and, upon my death, to deliver two thousand four hundred and ninety (2,490) shares, respectively by certificates number eleven (11) unto Henry Lachman, thenceforth for his absolute property; two thousand four hundred and ninety-five (2,495) shares, represented by certificate number thirteen (13) unto Albert Lachman, thenceforth for his absolute property; and yourselves, to-wit, Albert and Henry Lachman, to hold two thousand four hundred and ninety (2,490) shares, represented by certificate number twelve (12) upon my death, in trust paying the income derived therefrom unto my daughter, Rebecca, wife of Leo Metzger, and upon the death of my said daughter, the income and earnings derived from said two thousand four hundred and ninety (2,490) shares shall be held, or expended, by you, according to your judgment, for the benefit of my grandchildren, the children of my said daughter, Rebecca Metzger, and upon the youngest of said children attaining the age of majority, all the then surviving children of my said daughter, Rebecca Metzger, shall be immediately entitled to said two thousand four hundred and ninety (2,490) shares in equal proportions.

Henriette Lachman."

447 The requirements of the deed were performed upon the contingencies occurring for which it provided.

448 On November 14, 1916, Henriette S. Lachman died, being then a resident of Alameda County, California, leaving an estate of the value of $302,963.64, which included 2,490 shares of the stock that passed to her upon the death of her husband and 25 shares of stock in a business that had been conducted by her husband but did not include the transfer of the 4,985 shares included in the trust deed.

449 The will was duly probated and the tax under the Act of September 8, 1916, was paid on the property which passed under her will, but no tax was paid on the 4,985 shares transferred 15 years before by the trust deed.

450 The Commissioner having ruled that those shares were subject to a tax, assessed against them the sum of $4,545.50. It was paid under protest and this action was brought for its recovery.

451 Wardell demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against him. The demurrer was sustained and judgment entered dismissing the complaint.

452 Stating the contention of the plaintiffs, the court said it was that "the act should not be construed as to include transfers made prior to its passage, and that if it be so construed the act is unconstitutional." The court observed that "both of these questions were determined adversely to the plaintiffs by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in Shwab, Executor v. Doyle, not yet reported." And said further, "In that case the transfer was made in contemplation of death, whereas in the present case the transfer was intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after death, but manifestly the same rule of construction will apply to both provisions, and the same rule of constitutional validity."

453 The court, while apparently relying on Shwab v. Doyle, declared that it entertained "no doubt that the act was intended to operate retrospectively, and a contrary construction could only be justified on the principle that such a construction would render the act unconstitutional."

454 The same contentions are made against and for the ruling of the court as were made in Shwab v. Doyle. It is not necessary to repeat them. They are, with but verbal variations, the same as in Shwab v. Doyle, and the Commissioner so considering, submits this case upon his brief in that.

455 We have there stated them and passed judgment upon that which we think determines the case, that is, the retroactivity of the Act of September 8, 1916. The facts in this case fortify the reasoning in that. In this case the Act is given operation against an instrument executed 15 years before the passage of the Act.

456 The record exhibits proceedings that should be noticed. The demurrer of Wardell was sustained to the complaint, and a judgment of dismissal entered January 13, 1921.

457 On February 2, 1921, plaintiffs gave notice of a motion to substitute John S. Flynn as defendant in the place and stead of Wardell in so far as the action was against Wardell in his official capacity, and to permit it to be continued and prosecuted against him so far as it was against him personally.

458 The grounds of the motion were stated to be that he had resigned and Flynn had been appointed his successor and was then the acting Collector.

459 On February 7, 1921, the motion was granted. The order of the court recited the resignation of Wardell and the succession of Flynn. And it being uncertain as to whether this was a proper case for the substitution of Flynn or was one which should proceed against Wardell, and it appearing to the court on motion of plaintiffs that it was necessary for the survivor to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, it was ordered that so far as the action was against Wardell in his official capacity, it might be sustained against Flynn as his successor, and that so far as it was against Wardell personally, it should be continued against him. And it was ordered that the action should thereafter proceed against Flynn and Wardell without further pleadings or process.

460 On February 9, 1921, Flynn filed an appearance by attorneys which recited that he had been substituted in the place of Wardell in so far as the action was against Wardell in his official capacity, and thereby appeared in the action as such defendant.

461 It will be observed that there was no resistance to the motion of substitution of Flynn nor exception by him, and that he almost immediately appeared in the action in compliance with the order of the court. The subsequent proceedings were directed as much against him as against Wardell, the bond upon the writ of error running to both.

462 However, this Court decided in Smietanka, Collector v. Indiana Steel Company, October 24th of this term, that a suit may not be brought against a Collector of Internal Revenue for the recovery of a tax, in the collection and disbursement of which, such officer had no agency. We think the bringing of Flynn into the case was error. Therefore, upon the return of the case to the District Court, he shall be permitted to set up the defense of non-liability, if he be so advised, and, if he set up the defense, it shall be ruled as sufficient for the reasons we have given.

(Decision.)

(Revenue Act of 1916.)

The text of the 1916 Act is not to be construed as applying to transfers in contemplation of death, etc., completed before the passage of the Act.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Harriet L. Levy, Pauline Jacobs and Adeline Salinger, Plaintiffs in Error,

vs.

Justus S. Wardell, United States Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of California, and John L. Flynn, United States
Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of California.

In Error to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California.

[May 1, 1922.]

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the Court.

463 The case was determined in the court below upon demurrer to the 118 complaint. The complaint alleged that on the 19th day of December, 122 1902, and for sometime prior thereto, Henriette Levy was the owner of 22,014 shares of the capital stock of the Levy Estate Company, a corporation. On that date she conveyed to the plaintiffs Harriet L. Levy, Pauline Jacobs and Adeline Salinger, each 5,000 shares of that stock. On the 14th day of January, 1903, she conveyed to these plaintiffs 2,660 shares each.

464 On the 17th day of January, 1907, she and the plaintiffs entered into an agreement, which recited errors made in the issue of the stock, and agreed that the number of shares to which each was entitled was as follows: to Henriette Levy 10 shares, to Harriet L. Levy 7,328 shares, to Pauline Jacobs 7,338 shares, to Adeline Salinger 7,337 shares and to Ruth Salinger 1 share.

465 On the same date the agreement was carried out by the board of directors of the company, and on that date Henriette Levy conveyed her 10 shares to Harriet L. Levy.

466 The transfers of the stock to plaintiffs were complete and there were no agreements or stipulations by which Henriette Levy would be entitled to a return of the stock except that the plaintiffs promised and agreed to pay to her the dividends accruing thereon during her lifetime, she, however, retaining no testamentary disposition or any legal right whatsoever over the stock or any of it, or any right of revocation.

467 Henriette Levy at the time of the transfers was in good health and made them to get rid of the care and worry of business and to vest in plaintiffs definite and irrevocable present rights of ownership in the stock, and the transfers were not in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after her death.

468 She died on the 15th day of December, 1916, being at that time, and at the time of the transfers, a resident of Alameda County, California.
Plaintiffs are her surviving children and were at such time, and are now, residents of the State.

469 She left no property or estate or assets whatever, and consequently, there was no estate to administer, nor any estate upon which any tax could be levied. Notwithstanding the facts, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, assuming to act under the provisions of the Act of September 8, 1916, attempted to levy and assess a tax in the sum of $12,460.84, and demanded and threatened to enforce payment of the same. In consequence thereof the plaintiffs paid the tax. Subsequently they demanded a refund of the tax which demand was refused.

470 At the time of the transfers there was no law of the State of California imposing any transfer or inheritance tax, nor was there a law of the United States to that effect, and all of the transfers were intended to take effect in possession and enjoyment upon their date. The Act of Congress, therefore, should not be construed to be retroactive, and if so construed, was in violation of the Constitution of the United States in that it would take the property of plaintiffs without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment, and would not be, besides, a transfer tax or an indirect tax but would be a direct tax thereon in violation of Article 1, Section 9, subdivision 4 of the Constitution of the United States because not laid in proper relation to census or enumeration as therein provided.

472 Wardell filed a demurrer to the complaint which was sustained, and the action dismissed. To that judgment this writ of error is directed. For the reasons stated in Shwab v. Doyle [¶425], we think the judgment was erroneous.

473 There was a proceeding in the case to which we must give attention. The judgment of dismissal was entered January 20, 1921. On February 14, 1921, an order of the court was made and entered which recited the resignation of Wardell as Collector and the appointment of John L. Flynn as Collector, and as doubts existed as to whether the case was proper for the substitution of Flynn as successor of Wardell, it was ordered that so far as the action was against Wardell in his official capacity, the same might be maintained against Flynn, and that so far as it was against Wardell personally, it might be continued against him personally without further pleadings or process.

474 On February 15, 1921, Flynn entered his appearance which, after reciting the fact of his substitution as defendant in place of Wardell, in so far as the action was against Wardell in his official capacity, declared that he, Flynn, appeared in the "action as such defendant."

475 It will be observed that there was no resistance by Flynn to his substitution and the subsequent proceedings were directed as much against him as against Wardell, the bond upon the writ of error running to both. As we have said, however, in Union Trust Company et al. v. Wardell and Flynn (No. 236) [¶444], this Court decided in Smietanka, Collector v. Indiana Steel Company, October 24th of this term, that an action could not be maintained against a Collector of Internal Revenue for the recovery of a tax in the collection and disbursement of which he had no agency.

476 This was Flynn's situation and bringing him into the case was error. Therefore, upon return of the case to the District Court he shall be permitted to set up the defense of non-liability, if so advised, and, if he set up the defense, it shall be ruled as sufficient for the reasons we have given.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

The text of the 1916 Act is not to be construed as applying to transfers in contemplation of death, etc., completed before the passage of the Act.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

John C. Knox, as surviving executor of the last will and testament of Jonas B. Kissam, deceased, et al., Plaintiffs in Error,

In Error to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

vs.
Richard J. McElligott, as late Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District of New York.

[May 1, 1922.]

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the Court.

477 This case involves the same principles and contentions passed on in 118 Nos. 200 [¶340], 236 [¶444] and 303 [¶463]. It, as they, is an action
122 to recover a tax ($11,819.74) assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as an additional estate tax on the estate of Jonas B. Kissam, deceased, under the Act of September 8, 1916, as amended in 1917. It, the action, was brought in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

478 The complaint was a voluminous paper and contained at least four causes of action. As to the first, consisting of twenty-two paragraphs, Elligott filed a demurrer. Plaintiff made a motion for judgment on the pleadings. The motion was granted and a final judgment was awarded against "defendant on the merits for the relief prayed for in the first cause of action set forth" in the complaint.

479 The judgment was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, 275 Fed. 546.

481 In 1912 the decedent, Jonas B. Kissam, was the owner of certain bonds and mortgages and corporate bonds. In that year he conveyed the property to the plaintiff in error, John C. Knox who, shortly thereafter, reconveyed the same to Kissam and his wife Cornelia B. Kissam, as joint tenants. All of the parties resided in the State of New York.

482 In 1917 Kissam died leaving Mrs. Kissam surviving him. She was made one of the executors of the will as well as sole beneficiary thereunder.

483 On December 7, 1917, she as executrix and Knox as executor, made a return of the Federal Estate Tax on the entire estate of Jonas B. Kissam. They included in the return the value of one-half of the jointly owned property which was owned and enjoyed by decedent, but did not include the value of the one-half of the jointly owned property which had been owned and enjoyed by Mrs. Kissam since the creating of the joint estates in July and August of 1912.

484 A tax of $5,354.14 based upon the return was paid by the plaintiffs in error. On May 9, 1919, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue added to the estate the one-half interest of the value of the estate and assessed as a tax in addition to that which was paid, the sum of $13,668.60. The additional tax was paid under protest and to recover it is the purpose of the action.

485 The Circuit Court of Appeals stating the contention of the executors said, that "they claimed that the assessment was void as to the half of the joint property which vested in Cornelia [Mrs. Kissam] before the passage of the Act of September 8, 1916, as amended, and also that the Act itself was unconstitutional as a direct tax upon property without apportionment among the several States as required by Article 1, Section 9, Subdivision 4, of the Constitution."

486 But this contention was the alternative of the contention which plaintiffs in error also made, that the Act of September 8, 1916, as amended, was not intended to have retrospective operation. And this was the decision of the District Court, the court saying, "It is true section 201 provides that the tax is imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of 'every decedent dying after the passage of this Act'; but the assumption must be that this relates to estates thereafter created and not to then existing property." And the court added "At the time the statute was passed Cornelia Kissam's interest belonged to her." The court further observed, "From the structure of the Act to say that the measure of the tax is the extent of the interest of both joint tenants is, in effect, to say that a tax will be laid on the interest of Cornelia in respect of which Jonas had in his lifetime no longer either title or control." The court rejected that conclusion and denied to the Acts of Congress retroactive operation. To this the Circuit Court of Appeals was opposed and reversed the judgment based upon it.

487 It will be observed, therefore, that this case involves the same question as that decided in Shwab v. Doyle [¶425], and on the authority of that case the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

UNINDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(Decision.)

Revenue Act of 1918.—Equally applicable to the 1921 Act.
January 8, 1923.

For the purposes of the deduction on account of charitable bequests, the amount of "bequests to charity" out of the residuary estate, is the amount of the residuary estate after state transfer or succession taxes have been paid therefrom by the terms of the will, without further reduction by the amount of the Federal Estate Tax on the net estate though such tax in fact does reduce by its amount the residuary estate passing to charity.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

William H. Edwards, formerly Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District of New York,
Plaintiff-in-error,
Defendant below,

vs.

Joseph Jermain Slocum, Herbert Jermain Slocum. Stephen L'Hommedieu Slocum, Robert W. de Forest and Henry W. de Forest, as Executors of the last Will and Testament of Margaret Olivia Sage, deceased,
Defendants-in-error,
Plaintiffs below.

*Writ of error to judgment entered in the District Court for the

488 Action was brought by defendants-in-error as Executors, etc., of 298 Mrs. Sage, to recover part of the estate tax assessed against them as such executors, and paid under protest to the defendant who at the time was a Collector of Internal Revenue.

489 Mrs. Sage died November 4, 1918, a resident of New York, and by her will disposed of her estate in a manner sufficiently set forth as follows:

(1) The usual provision as to payment of debts; (2) certain pecuniary and specific legacies with directions that some should be paid free of all legacy or inheritance taxes; (3) the residue to be divided into a certain number of equal parts, and each part given to a named educational, religious or charitable corporation.

490 This estate was subject to the estate tax established by Revenue Act of 1916 (39 Stat., 756) Sec. 201, reading:

"That a tax * * * equal to the following percentages of the value of the net estate, to be determined as provided in section two hundred and three, is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this Act, whether a resident or non-resident of the United States: * * *."

491 The phrase "gross estate" is defined by Sec. 202 as follows:

"That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated."

UNINDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

492 Sec. 203 treats of "net estate" thus:

"That for the purpose of the tax the net estate shall be determined—

(a) In the case of a resident by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, and such other charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered; and

493 The Revenue Act of 1918 (40 Stat., 1057) added, and made retro-active so as to include this estate a third item of deduction, viz.:

"The amount of all bequests * * * to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable * * * or educational purposes," etc.

494 Disregarding all inheritance, legacy, transfer or estate taxes, the facts about the property passing under this will were as follows:

Debts and expenses.....	$3,789,321.74
Pecuniary legacies for charitable, etc., purposes.....	1,285,000.00
Pecuniary legacies for non-charitable purposes.....	8,618,079.55
Residuary estate, to charitable, etc., purposes.....	35,436,855.70

Gross..... $49,129,256.99

495 The New York Inheritance tax on such legacies as the will declared free of tax, was $5,741.83. Plaintiff executors stated the return for United States estate tax thus:

Gross..... $49,129,256.99

Deductions:

(1) Debts, &c..... $3,789,321.74

(2) Charitable, etc., legacies other than residual..... 1,285,000.00

(3) Residuary for charity, etc..... 35,436,855.70

(4) Specific exemption..... 50,000.00

Net estate..... $8,568,079.55

496 The above shows that what was offered for tax, i. e., the "net estate," is exactly the aggregate of pecuniary bequests to other than charitable, &c., purposes—less the specific statutory exemption. The proper tax on this net figure is admittedly $1,406,977.50.497 To this the Commissioner objected, and restated the return by adopting all the executors' figures except those for the "Residuary for charity, etc." which he reduced to $33,610,506.75, thereby increasing the "Net estate" by the amount of the reduction; and on investigation this difference is found to be exactly the total of the estate tax assessed, viz..... $1,820,607.12

Or..... $1,826,348.95

498 This result, which plainly involves paying an estate tax on the amount of the tax paid, was reached in a manner to be treated in our opinion. The executors sued after protest, and the trial Court gave judgment [¶306] on demurrer for all taxes over what they admitted as per their return, except that on or measured by the $5,741.83 of State tax. The Collector then brought this writ.

Richard S. Holmes, Special Assistant U. S. Attorney, for plaintiff-in-error;
Robert Thorne, for defendants-in-error;
Sullivan & Cromwell by permission filed brief as amici curiae.

499 HOUGH, C. J.—That this is not an inheritance or legacy tax, that it is not payable by legatees or out of legacies as such, and that it is a tax payable out of and on the estate, and by the executors, is agreed (Matter of Hamlin, 226 N. Y., 407), and no complaint is now made as to including in whatever is taxed or measures tax the New York inheritance taxes (New York, etc. Co. vs. Eisner, 256 U. S., 345 [¶397 herein]).

E500 Taxes, however, are not laid on abstractions, names do not change facts, and every tax ultimately falls on some person, unless it be laid upon a thing without an owner, which is rare.

E501 So far as the words of this statute are concerned, the United States does not care who ultimately bears the weight of this tax; it announces the sum and demands payment from the executors; if the legatees and devisees cannot agree as to the burden bearing, the state courts can settle the matter. The New York courts have settled it, so far as this estate is concerned, by the Hamlin case (supra); and this tax is payable out of the whole estate as a paramount charge, which in effect casts it on, or takes it out of the residuary. That the residuary estate is devoted to charity, &c., makes no difference.

E502 We impute no motives, but it seems as if this New York rule were the suggestion for the method of tax laying here insisted on by the Treasury.

E503 The train of reasoning is that there cannot be a residuary estate until paramount charges are paid, therefore the true residuary is approximately what in the absence of any tax would be residuum—less the tax itself; but since such an amount of money cannot be left untaxed, or otherwise at large, it must go somewhere else, and the natural place to go is the net estate. It is urged insistently that since the residuary charities will not get what the United States takes, and would get that much more if the United States took nothing—what they do not get must be taxable, and since that which is taxable or measures tax is called “net estate” by the statute, there it must go.

E504 Assuming this as truth, the tax-layer perceives that the “net estate,” which is practically synonymous with taxable estate, is to receive augmentation by an unknown amount, which renders its own figure unknown; but this baffles arithmetic, so he has recourse to an algebraic formula, which has played an unduly important part in the arguments at bar.

E505 We have treated this formula in a footnote*, it is only legally important in that it has produced the argument that any method of

A=Sum of debts, expenses, non-residuary legacies to charity, etc., and statutory taxation or of working out taxes that requires so much algebra "must be wrong." We need not go so far, but do hold that the presumption is that Congress intended a simpler method—one that a plain man could understand. Algebraic formulae are not lightly to be imputed to legislators.

E506 It is next observable that this using of tax to measure tax will only happen when the residuary estate or some part of it is devoted to charity or other deductible purpose. If this testatrix had made her charitable bequests before inserting a residuary clause, no difficulty would have arisen. It is argued with apparent seriousness that this is "something for which the testatrix is responsible," which is true only if the law laid such a trap as this for charitable residuary legatees as distinguished from equally charitable general legatees—again something not lightly imputable to the lawgiver.

E507 But all states do not treat the incidence of the tax as does New York; and if distributees were ratably assessed by the tribunal of administration to pay the estate tax, or if all estate taxes were treated as "a charge against the estate"—the reasoning by which this tax is supported would fail. The result would be confusion, again something not be imputed to the act if it can be avoided.

E508 If the statutory language is considered with some attention to legal history, the phrase "net estate" is not new but very old. It conveys the plain meaning of what is left as available for instant use, it is the clear or clean estate, a synonym unusually suggestive of the original French word. The net estate resulting from the legal invention of using a tax to measure a tax does not respond to that concept, it is but a fiction, never to be found except in a tax sheet. This is artificial, not real, and is to be avoided if at all possible.

E509 Again, observing the language of the statute, it may be admitted that net estate is used but as a measure for tax, and is not itself taxed; for the impost is said to fall upon the entire property. This is mere matter of words; for practical purposes the net estate is the taxable estate.

E510 It is therefore a fundamental objection not only as to the spirit but the letter of this act, that the taxable estate is augmented by a deliberate and designed encroachment upon charities.

exemption, i. e., $5,124,321.74.

S = Aggregate of all non-residuary legacies, debts, expenses and State Inheritance taxes on "free of tax" legacies; i. e., $13,698,143.12.

K = Total tax on all blocks up the one last used—assumed to be $1,722,000.

B = Total of blocks on which the tax is K; assumed to be $10,000,000.

% = Rate of tax on last block—assumed as 25%.

N = Net estate, R = Residue and T = Estate tax, all three assumed as unknown.

Then  $G = R - S - T$

$T = K - \% (N - B)$

$N = G - (A - R)$

From these three equations, by a cumbrous system of substitutions, is evolved the final formula-equation, viz.:

$$75\% \text{ of } R - G - S - K - \% G - \% A - \% B$$

The assumed unknown R is now expressed in terms of known quantities, and can be translated into figures; and this done, satisfaction of the equations first stated follows:

This sounds impressive, but it all starts from the assumption that B equals $10,000,000; for that implies that N, which of course includes B, is over that sum. But the only possible reason for asserting N to be more than ten millions is to observe that the obvious tax measure i. e., the sum of non-charitable legacies, plus the admitted tax is nearly ten million.

But neither N nor B can possibly be ten million, unless the tax pro tanto measures itself. Thus the mathematician has assumed the whole legal question; has assumed as law that the tax is measured by an entity which includes the tax. The formula is only useful in reaping the fruits of this assumption concerning the law.

Copyright 1923, by The Corporation Trust Company.

E511 It is the intent of the statute that charitable bequests shall not be taxed. By its regulation of the incidence of the tax, New York does in fact diminish in favor of the United States what the charities receive; but it must be wrong for the executive departments of the United States to use the rule of incidence, which is of state creation, to increase its own exactions.

E512 As Holmes, J. remarked in the New York Trust Co. case, supra, "Upon this point a page of history is worth a volume of logic." History, so far as we can discover, shows no other instance of attempting to measure a tax pro tanto by itself. As Hand, J., said in the court below, this theory departs from long established practice and from the usage if not the law of never regarding the incidence of a tax in the levying of a tax.

E513 So far as authority goes, Dugan vs. Miles, 276 Fed., 401, is the only decision suggested on this branch of the statute. The facts in that litigation were legally identical with those at bar; yet it is true that the doctrine here contended for by the Treasury was not alluded to by the experienced and able Judge who wrote opinion, although his result is consistent only with the methods pursued by these defendants-in-error. The inference is that neither the Judge nor counsel on either side thought of such a theory—which does not seem to us surprising.

E514 Being of opinion, therefore, that the scheme of taxation insisted on by plaintiff-in-error is unjust, opposed to long-established practice and the spirit of the statute, that it is not required by the language of the act, and tends to confusion taking the country over—the judgment below [¶306] should be and is affirmed, with costs.

E515 Estate Tax—Reservation of Powers.—Article 21 of Regulations 63, 125 and Article 25 of Regulations 37 [1918 Act], are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Reservation of powers.—Where a transfer by trust or otherwise is subject to revocation by the donor, or the terms thereof may be altered or amended by him, or he reserves to himself the right to take or assume either full or partial control of the transferred property, or to direct or control the management thereof, all facts and circumstances bearing upon the donor's intent are to be considered, and if it appears that he intended the transfer to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, then the value of the transferred property should be included in the gross estate, unless it further appears that the transfer was a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth."  UNINDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

1916-1917 Acts.

July 3, 1923.

Maryland collateral inheritance tax attaches to an estate before distribution and hence the amount thereof was deductible.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS
FOURTH CIRCUIT.

JOSHUA W. MILES, former collector of Internal Revenue for the United States in and for the District of Maryland and Delaware, Plaintiff in Error, versus

JOHN J. CURLEY, JOHN M. DENNIS and WILLIAM A. DIXON, Executors of the last Will and Testament of HELEN M. H. GRAFFLIN, late of Baltimore County, Deceased, Defendants in Error.

In Error to the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland at Baltimore.

Before WOODS and WADDILL, CIRCUIT JUDGES, and McCLINTIC, District Judge

A. W. W. WOODCOCK, U. S. Attorney and H. M. DARLING, Special Attorney, Bureau of Internal Revenue, (NELSON T. HARTSON, Solicitor of Internal Revenue, on brief) for Plaintiff in Error, and J. WALLACE BRYAN (CHARLES McHENRY HOWARD and JOSEPH C. FRANCE on brief) for Defendants in Error.

E516 McCLINTIC, District Judge: The defendants in error, (hereinafter 156 called the plaintiffs) brought an action at law in the District Court of Maryland to recover a certain sum of money paid to the Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Maryland and Delaware, being the amount of certain Federal estate taxes assessed by the collector on the estate of Helen M. H. Grafflin, who died a resident of Maryland, which sum was claimed by the plaintiffs to be in excess of the amount lawfully chargeable thereon. Such sum of money had been paid under protest, and all proper steps had been taken to bring such action for the recovery thereof.

E517 The taxes were assessed and collected by such collector (hereafter called the defendant) under the provisions of the Act of Congress approved September 8, 1916, as amended by the Act approved March 3, 1917.

E518 The executors claimed a deduction from the total taxable estate of $48,759.44 paid to the State of Maryland as an estate tax. The collector claimed that the deduction was not proper because the tax under the laws of Maryland was a legacy tax.

E519 The defendant interposed a demurrer to the declaration which was overruled.

E520 By stipulation, it was agreed that there was no dispute as to the facts alleged in the declaration, and the court being of opinion that the law was with the plaintiffs, a final judgment was entered therein on the 26th day of April, 1922, for the plaintiffs, and against the defendant, for the sum of $3,710.25, and $26.05 costs.

E521 There is but one question in this case, and that is, does the Maryland collateral inheritance tax attach to an estate before distribution? If so, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount above named.

"Lederer vs. Northern Trust Co., 262 Fed. 52; 253 U. S. 487."

E522 If, on the other hand, the Maryland tax is a legacy tax, and not an estate tax, the sum in controversy was properly collected.

"New York Trust Co. vs. Eisner, 256 U. S. 345 [¶397 herein]".

E523 The decision by the highest court of Maryland, directly deciding this question, and construing the statute imposing such collateral inheritance tax, would be binding upon this court. Is there any such decision?

E524 In discussing this question, the learned district judge, in his opinion overruling the demurrer to the declaration herein says:

"In the case at bar, each side has argued that the Court of Appeals of this State has interpreted the act in the sense for which it contends, and each quotes language which, if standing alone, might sustain its position. That each is able to do so is perhaps the best proof that the attention of that high court never had been drawn to the precise point now at issue, in such sense, at least, as to call for its definite determination."

E525 We have examined the cases decided by the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and referred to in the briefs of counsel, and have reached the conclusion that no decision upon this point has been really made.

E526 The Pennsylvania statute upon the subject of collateral inheritance tax, is believed to be the first that was passed by any state in America. This statute was enacted in 1826.

E527 In 1884, the legislature of the State of Maryland, in substance and effect adopted the Pennsylvania statute.

E528 In the case of Jackson vs. Myers, 257 Pa. 104, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania decided that the collateral inheritance tax of Pennsylvania is not levied upon the inheritance or legacy, but upon the estate of the decedent, holding that what passes to the legatee is simply the portion of the estate remaining, after the State has been satisfied by receiving the tax.

E529 An examination of other cases in that State shows, that this case only follows the previous holdings on this subject.

E530 The question presented herein, for decision, was directly presented to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the third circuit, in the case of Lederer vs. Northern Trust Company, supra, and that case held, that under the Pennsylvania statute, and the decisions of the court of last resort in the State of Pennsylvania, such tax was an estate tax, and not a legacy tax, and that the plaintiff therein should recover from the collector, the amount so paid under protest.

E531 Upon the authority of that case, and under all the circumstances and conditions surrounding this case, we hold that the proper construction of the collateral inheritance statute of Maryland, makes such tax an estate tax, and not a legacy tax, and, therefore, the judgment below, is

[The foregoing decision has been published by the Government as T. D. 3514, dated September 7, 1923.—The Corporation Trust Company.]

UNINDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

(T. D. 3513.)

E532 Receipt of Liberty bonds, Treasury bonds and Treasury notes in payment estate taxes.—The appended department circular [¶E533 to 358 E535], issued under date of July 31, 1923, with reference to receipt of Treasury bonds of the United States in payment of Federal estate and inheritance taxes, is published for the information of internal-revenue officers and others concerned. This circular supplements Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921 (T. D. 3144) [¶358], as supplemented by Department Circular dated June 30, 1922, (T. D. 3383) [¶388]. (T. D. 3513, signed by Commissioner D. H. Blair, and dated September 7, 1923.)

Second Supplement to Department Circular No. 225.

E533 1. The provisions of Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921, as supplemented June 30, 1922, prescribing regulations governing the receipt of bonds and notes of the United States for Federal estate or inheritance taxes are hereby extended and made applicable to Treasury bonds of the United States now or hereafter issued under authority of the Act of Congress approved September 24, 1917, as amended, bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per centum per annum, and any such Treasury bonds shall accordingly be receivable by the United States at par and accrued interest in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States, under or by virtue of any present or future law, upon the same terms and conditions as provided in said Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921, with respect to the acceptance of bonds and notes bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per centum per annum.

UNINDEXED SUPPLEMENTARY ESTATE TAX REGULATIONS, ETC.

E535 3. For the calculation of accrued interest on the current coupons of bonds and notes tendered in payment of estate or inheritance taxes under this circular, the method outlined in Exhibit B [¶383] to Department Circular No. 225, dated January 31, 1921, should be followed. Interest tables at the various rates borne by the various issues, or for other or future issues, may be obtained from the Treasury Department, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington, upon request. (Second Supplement to Department Circular No. 225 appended to T. D. 3513, ¶E532, signed by S. P. Gilbert, Jr., Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and dated July 31, 1923.)

E536 California Community Property (1916-1917 Acts).—The California
117 Supreme Court holds, no question of Federal taxation being involved, 127 however, in Roberts vs. Wehmeyer (August 17, 1923), that the 285 husband is the owner of the community property. Judge Lawlor in the course of his opinion states that "we are not unmindful of the two decisions rendered in the case of Blum vs. Wardell, one by the United States District Court, 270 Fed. 309, and the other by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, 276 Fed. 226," holding that the wife's half of the community property should not be included in the decedent husband's gross estate for the purposes of the Federal estate tax (1916 Act). Judge Lawlor, continuing, says: "We agree with the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals in so far as it is based on the interpretation of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1917 (California) to the effect that the part of the community property passing to the wife should not be subject to such tax."—The Corporation Trust Company.

E537 Deductibility of New York State transfer (inheritance) tax as "a 262 charge against the estate;" bequest or devise in lieu of dower: 1916
Act.—[In the United States Supreme Court on October 8, 1923, Title Guarantee and Trust Company vs. Edwards, No. 46, October 1923 Term (below, 290 Fed. 617, ¶262 herein), was dismissed "for want of jurisdiction," citing Farrell vs. O'Brien (199 U. S. 89, 100), Toop vs. Ulysses Land Company (237 U. S. 580), and *Piedmont Power and Light Company vs. Town of

(T. D. 3524.)

E538 Property passing under general power of appointment to be included in gross estate of the one exercising the power; Decision of Court, 1918 Act.—The decision of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in the case of The Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, and Catherine M. Colfelt-Taylor, Executors of the Estate of Rebecca Colfelt, deceased, v. Ephraim Lederer, Collector of Internal Revenue of the First District of Pennsylvania, the syllabus of which appears below [¶E539 to E542] is published not as a ruling of the Treasury Department, but for the information of internal revenue officers and others concerned.

E539 1. Gross Estate—Power of Appointment.—Section 402 (e) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that property passing under a general power of appointment shall be included in the gross estate of a decedent. Under the Law of Pennsylvania the appointee of a power takes under the will of the donor and not under the will of the donee of the power. Where a general power of appointment is exercised by a decedent the value of the appointed property should be included in the decedent's gross estate regardless of the fact that the appointees and their respective interests in the appointed property are the same as would have been the case had the power not been exercised.

E540 2. Estate Tax—Measure—Statutory Construction.—The will of Congress to tax must be found expressed in the language of the Act interpreted in the light of the situation presented to the legislature. The estate tax levied by the Revenue Act of 1918 measures the tax by the gross value of all the property of a decedent which passed by will plus the value of all property which passed in practical effect by the same will, although it passed not by virtue of dominion over property but by virtue of a power of appointment.

E541 3. Estate Tax—Excise Tax.—The estate tax is an excise tax levied upon the privilege enjoyed by one who makes disposition of property to take effect at his death and the measure is wholly within the control of Congress.

E542 4. Constitutionality.—Legislation is not unconstitutional in the legal sense unless the legislation be in conflict with a provision of our written Constitution and Acts of Congress are not unconstitutional merely because unwise or in conflict with sound principles of legislation. Under this rule Section 402 (e) of the Revenue Act of 1918 is constitutional.

(T. D. 3524, signed by Acting Commissioner C. R. Nash, and dated October 8, 1923.)

E543 Estate of decedent dying during 1918 is taxable, and so is taxable 59 under the 1916-1917 Acts.—Court decision.—The decision of the United States District Court for the District of Colorado in the case of Louise B. Page v. Skinner, Collector, August 6, 1923, the syllabus of which appears below [¶E544 and ¶E545] is published not as a ruling of the Treasury Department, but for the information of internal revenue officers and others concerned.

E544 1. Estate Tax—Effect of Repeal.—Where a decedent died on September 4, 1918, the Federal Estate tax should be computed at the rates provided by the Revenue Act of 1916 as amended by the Act of March 3, 1917 and the Revenue Act of 1917.

E545 2. Estate Tax—Effect of Repeal.—Section 1400 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1918 does not repeal the Revenue Act of 1916 as amended by the Act of March 3, 1917, or the Revenue Act of 1917 as to the imposition of an Estate tax on the estates of decedents dying prior to the passage of the Revenue Act of 1918. The Revenue Act of 1916 as amended by the Act of March 3, 1917 and the Revenue Act of 1917 impose a tax which impresses itself on the Estate of a decedent dying prior to the Revenue Act of 1918, and the liability thus imposed is saved by Section 13 of the Revised Statutes [general saving clause]. (T. D. 3529, signed by Acting Commissioner C. R. Nash, and dated November 10, 1923.)

WAR-PROFITS AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXES.

As the occasions will be many during 1923 when the necessity will arise to refer to the exact language of the excess-profits tax provisions of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, and to the official regulations and rulings based specifically thereon, we republish these herein.

The provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918 relating to the excess-profits tax, and the formal regulations bearing thereon, are reproduced on the pages immediately following. The caption to each page shows distinctly that the 1918 Act is involved.

The provisions of the Revenue Act of 1921 relating to the excess-profits tax for 1921 are reproduced beginning on page 401, following the Supplementary Bulletin Rulings. There too will be found the formal regulations relating specifically to the 1921 Act, as well as current Treasury Decisions, etc., etc.

TITLE III.—WAR-PROFITS AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAX REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

PART I.—General Definitions.

500 Sec. 300 [of the Revenue Act of 1918 of which this Title is a 597 part]. That when used in this title the terms [see definitions below] "taxable year," "fiscal year," "personal service corporation," "paid or accrued," and "dividends" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in sections 200 and 201. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the same as the first taxable year for the purposes of the income tax under Title II.

[Definitions of terms, extracted from Titles I and II.]

["Taxable year" and "Fiscal year".]

501 The term "taxable year" means the calendar year, or the fiscal year ending during such calendar year, upon the basis of which the net income is computed under section 212 or section 232. The term "fiscal year" means an accounting period of twelve months ending on the last day of any month other than December. The first taxable year, to be called the taxable year 1918, shall be the calendar year 1918 or any fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1918;

Copyright 1923, by The Corporation Trust Company.

[“Personal Service Corporation.”]

- 502 The term “personal service corporation” means a corporation
656 whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the principal owners or stockholders who are themselves regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and in which capital (whether invested or borrowed) is not a material income-producing factor; but does not include any foreign corporation, nor any corporation 50 per centum or more of whose gross income consists either (1) of gains, profits or income derived from trading as a principal, or (2) of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive;

[“Government Contracts.”]

- 503 The term “Government contract” means (a) a contract
605 made with the United States, or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency, under the United States and acting in its behalf, or with any agency controlled by any of the above if the contract is for the benefit of the United States, or (b) a subcontract made with a contractor performing such a contract if the products or services to be furnished under the subcontract are for the benefit of the United States. The term “Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive” when applied to a contract of the kind referred to in clause (a) of this paragraph, includes all such contracts which, although entered into during such period, were originally not enforceable, but which have been or may become enforceable by reason of subsequent validation in pursuance of law;

[“Paid or incurred” and “Paid or accrued”.]

- 504 The term “paid,” for the purposes of the deductions and credits under this title, means “paid or accrued” or “paid or incurred,” and the terms “paid or incurred” and “paid or accrued” shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under section 212.

[Dividends.]

- 505 Sec. 201. (a) That the term “dividend” when used in this title (except in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 234) means (1) any distribution made by a corporation, other than a personal service corporation, to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property [or in stock of the corporation], out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or (2) any such distribution made by a personal service corporation out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, and prior to January 1, 1918.
- 506 (b) Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or, in the case of a personal service corporation, from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits; but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

(c) [A dividend paid in stock of the corporation shall be considered income to the amount of the earnings or profits distributed.] Amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

(d) If any stock dividend (1) is received by a taxpayer between January 1 and November 1, 1918, both dates inclusive, or (2) is during such period bona fide authorized or declared, and entered on the books of the corporation, and is received by a taxpayer after November 1, 1918, and before the expiration of thirty days after passage of this Act, then such dividend shall, in the manner provided in section 206, be taxed to the recipient at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which the corporation accumulated the earnings or profits from which such dividend was paid, but the dividend shall be deemed to have been paid from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits.]

(e) Any distribution made during the first sixty days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years; but any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits, and if the books of the corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits, the earnings or profits for the accounting period within which the distribution was made shall be paid from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits.

PART II.—Imposition of Tax.

Sec. 301. (a) That in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, but in addition to the other taxes imposed by this Act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1918 upon the net income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following:

First Bracket.

30 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital;

Second Bracket.

65 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital;

Third Bracket.

513 The sum, if any, by which 80 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit (determined under section 311) exceeds the amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets.

514 (b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter
603 there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation (except corporations taxable under subdivision (c) of this section) a tax equal to the sum of the following:

First Bracket.

515 20 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 312) and not in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital;

Second Bracket.

516 40 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital.

517 (c) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter
604 there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of 626 every corporation which derives in such year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, a tax equal to the sum of the following:

518 (1) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) as the part of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income. In computing such tax the excess-profits credit and the war-profits credit applicable to the taxable year shall be used;

519 (2) Such a portion of a tax computed at the rates specified in subdivision (b) as the part of the net income not attributable to such Government contract or contracts bears to the entire net income.

520 For the purpose of determining the part of the net income
607 attributable to such Government contract or contracts, the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to gross income derived from such Government contract or contracts and from other sources, respectively, shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

521 (d) In any case where the full amount of the excess-profit
621 credit is not allowed under the first bracket of subdivision (a) or (b), by reason of the fact that such credit is in excess of 20 per centum of the invested capital, the part not so allowed shall be deducted from the amount in the second bracket.

522 (e) For the purposes of the Act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An Act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an Act in amendment of Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917.

[Maximum Tax Limitation.]

523    Sec. 302. That the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section
639    301 shall in no case be more than 30 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 80 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; the tax imposed by subdivision (b) of section 301 shall in no case be more than 20 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 40 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; and the above limitations shall apply to the taxes computed under subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 301, respectively, when used in subdivision (c) of that section. Nothing in this section shall be construed in such manner as to increase the tax imposed by section 301.

[Partial Personal Service Corporations.]

645    derived (1) from a trade or business (or a branch of a trade or business) in which the employment of capital is necessary, and (2) a part (constituting not less than 30 per centum of its total net income) is derived from a separate trade or business (or a distinctly separate branch of the trade or business) which if constituting the sole trade or business would bring it within the class of "personal service corporations [¶ 502]", then (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) the tax upon the first part of such net income shall be separately computed (allowing in such computation only the same proportionate part of the credits authorized in sections 311 and 312), and the tax upon the second part shall be the same percentage thereof as the tax so computed upon the first part is of such first part: Provided, That the tax upon such second part shall in no case be less than 20 per centum thereof, unless the tax upon the entire net income, if computed without benefit of this section, would constitute less than 20 per centum of such entire net income, in which event the tax shall be determined upon the entire net income, without reference to this section, as other taxes are determined under this title. The total tax computed under this section shall be subject to the limitations provided in section 302.

[Exempt Corporations.]

525    Sec. 304. (a) That the corporations enumerated in section 231
666    [¶667] shall, to the extent that they are exempt from income tax under Title II, be exempt from taxation under this title.

526    (b) Any corporation whose net income for the taxable year is 666    less than $3,000 shall be exempt from taxation under this title.

527    (c) In the case of any corporation engaged in the mining 682    of gold, the portion of the net income derived from the mining of gold shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this title, and the tax on the remaining portion of the net income shall be the proportion of a tax computed without the benefit of this subdivision which such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income.

[Specific Exemption in relation to tax for less than 12 months.]

- 528 Sec. 305. That if a tax is computed under this title for a 634 period of less than twelve months, the specific exemption of 684 $3,000, wherever referred to in this title, shall be reduced to an amount which is the same proportion of $3,000 as the number of months in the period is of twelve months.

PART III.—Credits.

- 529 Sec. 310. That as used in this title the term "prewar period"
685 means the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, or, if a corporation was not in existence during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of which the corporation was in existence.

[The War-Profits Credit.]

- 530 Sec. 311. (a) That the war-profits credit shall consist of the 686 sum of:
531 (1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and
532 (2) An amount equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period, plus or minus, as the case may be, 10 per centum of the difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year. If the tax is computed for a period of less than
634 twelve months such amount shall be reduced to the same proportion thereof as the number of months in the period is of twelve months.

[No income for the prewar period.]

- 533 (b) If the corporation had no net income for the prewar period, 688 or if the amount computed under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) is less than 10 per centum of its invested capital for the taxable year, then the war-profits credit shall be the sum of:
534 (1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and
535 (2) An amount equal to 10 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year.

[Not in existence in Prewar Period.]

- 536 (c) If the corporation was not in existence during the whole 690 of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, then, except as provided in subdivision (d), the war-profits credit shall be the sum of:
537 (1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and
538 (2) An amount equal to the same percentage of the invested
694 capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital, for the prewar period, of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer; but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per centum of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year. Such average percentage shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of data contained in returns made under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, and the average known as the median shall be used. If such average percentage has not been determined and published at least 30 days prior to the time when the return of the taxpayer is due, then for purposes of such return 10 per centum shall be used in lieu thereof; but such average percentage when determined shall be used for the purposes of section 250 [payment of the tax] in determining the correct amount of the tax.

(d) The war-profits credit shall be determined in the manner provided in subdivision (b) instead of in the manner provided in subdivision (c), in the case of any corporation which was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, if (1) a majority of its stock at any time during the taxable year is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a corporation which was in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, or if (2) 50 per centum or more of its gross income (as computed under section 233 for income tax purposes) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

(e) A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to a specific exemption of $3,000. [See Sec. 327, ¶565, and Sec. 328, ¶570, of the law.]

[The Excess-Profits Credit.]

Sec. 312. That the excess-profits credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year.

A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000. [See Sec. 327, ¶565, and Sec. 328, ¶570, of the law.]

PART IV.—Net Income.

Sec. 320. (a) That for the purpose of this title the net income of a corporation shall be ascertained and returned—

(1) For the calendar years 1911 and 1912 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section 38 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, except that taxes imposed by such section and paid by the corporation within the year shall be included;

(2) For the calendar year 1913 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Section II of the Act entitled "An Act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, except that taxes imposed by section 38 of such Act of August 5, 1909, and paid by the corporation within the year shall be included, and except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations subject to the tax imposed by Section II of such Act of October 3, 1913, shall be deducted; and 546 (3) For the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for income tax purposes in Title II of this Act.

547 (b) The average net income for the prewar period shall be 687 determined by dividing the number of years within that period during the whole of which the corporation was in existence into the sum of the net income for such years, even though there may have been no net income for one or more of such years.

PART V.—Invested Capital.

[Definitions.]

548 Sec. 325. (a) That as used in this title—

549 The term “intangible property” means patents, copyrights, 738 secret processes and formulae, good will, trade-marks, trade-brands, franchises, and other like property;

550 The term “tangible property” means stocks, bonds, notes, and 738 other evidences of indebtedness, bills and accounts receivable, leaseholds, and other property other than intangible property;

551 The term “borrowed capital” means money or other property
739 borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, open accounts, or otherwise;

552 The term “inadmissible assets” means stocks, bonds, and other
743 obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income, but where the income derived from such assets consists in part of gain or profit derived from the sale or other disposition thereof, or where all or part of the interest derived from such assets is in effect included in the net income because of the limitation on the deduction of interest under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234, a corresponding part of the capital invested in such assets shall not be deemed to be inadmissible assets;

553 The term “admissible assets” means all assets other than inadmissible assets, valued in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 326, section 330, and section 331.

554 (b) For the purposes of this title, the par value of stock or shares shall, in the case of stock or shares issued at a nominal value or having no par value, be deemed to be the fair market value as of the date or dates of issue of such stock or shares.

[Computing “Invested Capital.”]

555 Sec. 326. (a) That as used in this title the term “invested 751 capital” for any year means (except as provided in subdivisions 820 (b) and (c) of this section):

556 (1) Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares;

557 (2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, 754 bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus: Provided, That the Commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which tangible property is included in invested capital at a value in excess of the stock or shares issued therefor, containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, the value of the tangible property at the time paid in, the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, and the amount included under this paragraph as paid-in surplus. The Commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257;

558 (3) Paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not in-
760 cluding surplus and undivided profits earned during the year;
810

559 (4) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares
804 prior to March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 25 per centum of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding on March 3, 1917, whichever is lowest;

560 (5) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares
804 on or after March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 25 per centum of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year, whichever is lowest: Provided, That in no case shall the total amount included under paragraphs (4) and (5) exceed in the aggregate 25 per centum of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year; but

561 (b) As used in this title the term "invested capital" does not 739 include borrowed capital.

562 (c) There shall be deducted from invested capital as above 805 defined a percentage thereof equal to the percentage which the amount of inadmissible assets is of the amount of admissible and inadmissible assets held during the taxable year.

563 (d) The invested capital for any period shall be the average
634 invested capital for such period, but in the case of a corpora-806 tion making a return for a fractional part of a year, it shall (except for the purpose of paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 311) be the same fractional part of such average invested capital.

564 The average invested capital for the prewar period shall
687 be determined by dividing the number of years within that period during the whole of which the corporation was in existence into the sum of the average invested capital for such years.

[Special cases subject to special tax.]

585 Sec. 327. That in the following cases the tax shall be deter-
831 mined as provided in section 328:

586 (a) Where the Commissioner is unable to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

587 (b) In the case of a foreign corporation [see §§830 and §852];

588 (c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and in-
756 tangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the Commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

589 (d) Where upon application by the corporation the Commis-
831 sioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital, nor (2) in which 50 per centum or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under section 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

832 be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year, as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In the case of a foreign corporation the tax shall be computed without deducting the specific exemption of $3,000 either for the taxpayer or the representative corporations.

571 In computing the tax under this section the Commissioner
832 shall compare the taxpayer only with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326 and which are, as nearly as may be, similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

572 (b) For the purposes of subdivision (a) the ratios between
832 the average tax and the average net income of representative corporations shall be determined by the Commissioner in accordance with regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary.

573 In cases in which the tax is to be computed under this section,
833 if the tax as computed without the benefit of this section is less than 50 per centum of the net income of the taxpayer, the installments shall in the first instance be computed upon the basis of such tax; but if the tax so computed is 50 per centum or more of the net income, the installments shall in the first instance be computed upon the basis of a tax equal to 50 per centum of the net income. In any case, the actual ratio when ascertained shall be used in determining the correct amount of the tax. If the correct amount of the tax when determined exceeds 50 per centum of the net income, any excess of the correct installments over the amounts actually paid shall on notice and demand be paid together with interest at the rate of  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1 per centum per month on such excess from the time the installment was due.

574 (c) The Commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in 832 which the tax is determined in the manner prescribed in subdivision (a), containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, and the amount of invested capital as determined under such subdivision. The Commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257 [contents of returns not to be disclosed].

PART VI.—Reorganizations.

[Reorganizations after January 1, 1911.]

575 Sec. 330. That in the case of the reorganization, consolida-
837 tion, or change of ownership after January 1, 1911, of a trade or business now carried on by a corporation, the corporation shall for the purposes of this title be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of such predecessor trade or business for all or any part of the prewar period prior to the organization of the corporation now carrying on such trade or business shall be deemed to have been the net income and invested capital of such corporation.

576 If such predecessor trade or business was carried on by a
838 partnership or individual the net income for the prewar period shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, be ascertained and returned as nearly as may be upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for corporations in Title II, including a reasonable deduction for salary or compensation to each partner or the individual for personal services actually rendered.

577 In the case of the organization as a corporation before July 1,
839 1919, of any trade or business in which capital is a material income-producing factor and which was previously owned by a partnership or individual, the net income of such trade or business from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may at the option of the individual or partnership be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the net income and invested capital of such trade or business shall be computed as if such corporation had been in existence on and after January 1, 1918, and the undistributed profits or earnings of such trade or business shall not be subject to the surtax imposed in section 211, but amounts distributed on or after January 1, 1918, from the earnings of such trade or business shall be taxed to the recipients as dividends, and all the provisions of Titles II and III relating to corporations shall so far as practicable apply to such trade or business: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any trade or business the net income of which for the taxable year 1918 was less than 20 per centum of its invested capital for such year: Provided further, That any taxpayer who takes advantage of this paragraph shall pay the tax imposed by section 1000 of this Act [§3000] and by the first subdivision of section 407 of the Revenue Act of 1916, as if such taxpayer had been a corporation on and after January 1, 1918, with a capital stock having no par value.

578 If any asset of the trade or business in existence both during the 340 taxable year and any prewar year is included in the invested capital for the taxable year but is not included in the invested capital for such prewar year, or is valued on a different basis in computing the invested capital for the taxable year and such prewar year, respectively, then under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary such readjustments shall be made as are necessary to place the computation of the invested capital for such prewar year on the basis employed in determining the invested capital for the taxable year.

579 Sec. 331. In the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or 841 change of ownership of a trade or business, or change of ownership of property, after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business or property of 50 per centum or more remains in the same persons, or any of them, then no asset transferred or received from the previous owner shall, for the purpose of determining invested capital, be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such previous owner if such asset had not been so transferred or received: Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise on or after March 1, 1918, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation.

PART VII.—Miscellaneous.

[Returns on fiscal year basis.]

580    842    Sec. 335. (a) That if a corporation (other than a personal service corporation) makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the tax for the first taxable year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period.

581    Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the 844 tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax imposed by this title, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

582    (b) If a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning 845 in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax for such fiscal year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under subdivision (b) or (c) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

583    (c) If a partnership or a personal service corporation makes 842 return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, it shall pay the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period.

584    Any tax paid by a partnership or personal service corporation for any period beginning on or after January 1, 1918, shall be immediately refunded to the partnership or corporation as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

[Returns and payment of taxes.]

588    849    Sec. 336. That every corporation, not exempt under section 304, shall make a return for the purposes of this title. Such returns shall be made, and the taxes imposed by this title shall be paid, at the same times and places, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions, as is provided in the case of returns and payment of income tax by corporations for the purposes of Title II, and all the provisions of that title not inapplicable, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the taxes imposed by this title.

[Sale of mines, oil or gas wells.]

586      Sec. 337. That in the case of a bona fide sale of mines, oil or 853      gas wells, or any interest therein, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the tax imposed by this title attributable to such sale shall not exceed 20 per centum of the selling price of such property or interest.

[Consolidated Returns.]

587      Sec. 240 [of Title II of the Revenue Act of 1918, of which
734      the War-Profits and Excess-Profits Tax is Title III]. (a) That corporations which are affiliated within the meaning of this section shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, make a consolidated return of net income and invested capital for the purposes of this title and Title III, and the taxes thereunder shall be computed and determined upon the basis of such return: Provided, That there shall be taken out of such consolidated net income and invested capital, the net income and invested capital of any such affiliated corporation organized after August 1, 1914, and not successor to a then existing business, 50 per centum or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive. In such case the corporation so taken out shall be separately assessed on the basis of its own invested capital and net income and the remainder of such affiliated group shall be assessed on the basis of the remaining consolidated invested capital and net income.

588      In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a 723      consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or, in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income properly assignable to each. There shall be allowed in computing the income tax only one specific credit of $2,000 (as provided in section 236); in computing the war-profits credit (as provided in section 311) only one specific exemption of $3,000; and in computing the excess-profits credit (as provided in section 312) only one specific exemption of $3,000.

589      (b) For the purpose of this section two or more domestic corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated (1) if one corporation owns directly or controls through closely affiliated interests or by a nominee or nominees substantially all the stock of the other or others, or (2) if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests.

590 (c) For the purposes of section 238 a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid (but not including taxes accrued) by such foreign corporation during the taxable year to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States upon income derived from sources without the United States, which the amount of any dividends (not deductible under section 234) received by such domestic corporation from such foreign corporation during the taxable year bears to the total taxable income of such foreign corporation upon or with respect to which such taxes were paid: Provided, That in no such case shall the amount of the credit for such taxes exceed the amount of such dividends (not deductible under section 234) received by such domestic corporation during the taxable year.

596 Important Comment.—Appended to each paragraph or unit of paragraphs in the compilation, beginning at ¶597 below, is a citation showing the official source and date. Without exception the Articles of Regulations 45, Revised, referring specifically to the excess-profits tax law, that is, the 7-hundred (701), the 8-hundred (801) and the 9-hundred (901) series, are printed in regular numerical order. Thus any particular Article may be located without difficulty. The fact that there are missing Article numbers (as Art. 702 to 710) in the 7-, 8-, and 9-hundred series, indicates with certainty that on December 15, 1922, there were no Articles bearing such missing number designations. Attention is called to the purely supplementary Bureau Rulings, reproduced hereinafter in full, as originally issued by the Government, on the pages following immediately after the blue excess-profits tax index opposite page 400. The reader is earnestly cautioned to read the foreword to these Bureau Rulings

GENERAL DEFINITIONS.

597 Art. 701. War Profits and Excess Profits Tax.—The war profits and excess profits tax, like the income tax, is a tax upon net income. It applies only to corporations. See section 301 of the statute and articles 711-720 [¶598]. The terms "taxable year," "fiscal year," "personal service corporation," "paid or accrued," and "dividends," and in general all other terms used in connection with the income tax, have here the same meaning as provided for the purposes of the income tax. See sections 1, 200, and 201 and articles 1501-1510, 1523-1533 and 1541-1549 [for terms, beginning at ¶501, and ¶8099]. For other terms see sections 310 [¶529] and 325 [¶555] and articles 771 [¶685] and 811-818 [beginning at ¶738]. (Art. 701, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

IMPOSITION OF TAX.

598 Art. 711. Imposition of tax.—The tax is imposed upon the net 510 income of every corporation, domestic or foreign, except personal service corporations and certain other classes of corporations. See section 304 of the statute and articles 751-753 [for exempt corporations, ¶666]. Special provisions of the statute deal with corporations deriving net income from Government contracts (see section 1 [¶503 for law and ¶604 for regulations]), transportation corporations (see article 504 [¶599 below]), corporations partly partaking of the nature of personal service corporations (see section 303 [¶524 for law and ¶645 for regulations;]), corporations engaged in the mining of gold (see section 304 [¶527 for law and ¶682 for regulations]), foreign and abnormal corporations (see section 327 [¶565 for law and ¶831 for regulations]), reorganized and consolidated corporations (see sections 330 and 331 [¶575 to ¶579 for law and ¶837 for regulations]), corporations making their returns upon the basis of a fiscal year (see section 335 [¶580 for law and ¶842 for regulations]), and corporations which have sold mines or oil or gas wells (see section 337 [¶586 for law and ¶853 for regulations]). For the requirements as to rendering returns see section 336 [¶585 for law, and ¶849 for regulations]. (Art. 711, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

599 to 601 Blank.

602 Art. 712. Computation of war-profits and excess-profits tax for 1918.

514 —For the taxable year 1918, (a) if the net income, as defined in section 320 (a) (3) of the statute, is not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, as defined in section 326, then under the first bracket the tax is 30 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess profits credit, as defined in section 312, and the second bracket is not applicable. (b) If the net income is in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, then under the first bracket the tax is 30 per cent of the excess of an amount of net income equal to 20 per cent of the invested capital over the excess profits credit, and under the second bracket the tax is 65 per cent of the amount of the remaining net income less any excess profits credit not exhausted under the first bracket. (c) If the tax under (a) or the aggregate tax under (b) equals or exceeds 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war profits credit, as defined in section 311, then the tax under (a) or (b) is the amount of the tax payable. But if such tax is less than such 80 per cent, then the tax payable is 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war profits credit. But see section 302 and articles 731-733 [for maximum limitation of tax beginning at ¶639]. (Art.
 712, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

603 Art. 713. Computation of excess-profits tax for 1919 and thereafter.

510 —For the taxable year 1919 and subsequent years, (a) if the net income, as defined in section 320 (a) (3) [¶546] of the statute, is not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, as defined in section 326 [¶555], then under the first bracket the tax payable is 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess profits credit, as defined in section 312 [¶541], and the second bracket is not applicable. (b) If the net income is in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, then under the first bracket the tax is 20 per cent of the excess of an amount of net income equal to 20 per cent of the invested capital over the excess profits credit, and under the second bracket the tax is 40 per cent of the amount of the remaining net income less any excess profits credit not exhausted under the first bracket. The sum of the taxes computed under the two brackets is the tax payable. But see the following article [for war-profits tax for 1919 and subsequent taxable years in certain instances, ¶604] and section 302 [for maximum limitation of tax: law ¶523 and regulations ¶641]. (Art. 713, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

604 Art. 714. Computation of tax on income from Government contracts.—In the case of a corporation which derives in any taxable year after 1918 a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contracts made after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, the tax shall be such a proportion of a tax computed at the rates for 1918 as the portion of the net income attributable to the Government contracts bears to the entire net income, plus such a proportion of a tax computed at the rates for 1919 as the amount of the remaining net income bears to the entire net income. In computing such taxes, however, the excess profits credit and the war profits credit applicable to the taxable year shall be used. [For example of computation of tax see ¶626.] But see section 302 of the statute [for maximum tax limitation, ¶523; regulations ¶639]. The part of the net income attributable to such Government contracts shall be determined in accordance with the following article. See also section 1 [law ¶503] and article 1510. (Art. 714, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

607 Art. 715. Allocation of Net Income to Particular Source.—When-520 ever it is necessary to determine the portion of the net income derived from or attributable to a particular source, the corporation shall allocate to the gross income derived from such source, and to the gross income derived from each other source, the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly appertaining thereto, and shall apply any general expenses, losses, and deductions (which can not properly be otherwise apportioned) ratably to the gross income from all sources. The gross income derived from a particular source, less the deductions properly appertaining thereto and less its proportion of any general deductions, shall be the net income derived from such source. The corporation shall submit with its return a statement fully explaining the manner in which such expenses, losses, and deductions were allocated or distributed. (Art. 715, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

609 (1) For 1918 the excess profits credit is a specific exemption of $3,000, plus 8 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 8 per cent of $100,000) or $8,000, making a total of $11,000. See section 312 of the statute and article 791 [for excess profits credit, ¶724]. The war profits credit is a specific exemption of $3,000, plus the average prewar net income or $10,000, plus or minus 10 per cent of the difference between the average prewar invested capital and the invested capital for 1918. In this case it is plus, because the invested capital for 1918 is greater than the average prewar invested capital. The amount added is 10 per cent of the difference between $100,000 and $50,000, i. e., 10 per cent of $50,000, or $5,000, making a total war profits credit of $18,000. See section 311 and article 781 [for war profits credit, ¶686].

610 First bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($40,000) in excess of the excess profits credit ($11,000) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $100,000) or $20,000 is $9,000. The tax computed under this bracket is 30 per cent of this amount (i. e., 30 per cent of $9,000) or $2,700.

611 Second bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($40,000) in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $100,000) or $20,000 is $20,000. The tax computed under this bracket is 65 per cent of this amount (i. e., 65 per cent of $20,000) or $13,000.

612 Third bracket.—Eighty per cent of the amount or portion of the net income in excess of the war profits credit (i. e., 80 per cent of the amount by which $40,000 exceeds $18,000, or $22,000) is $17,600. The amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets ($2,700 plus $13,000) is $15,700. The tax computed under this bracket is the amount by which $17,600 exceeds $15,700, or $1,900.

613 Total tax.—The total tax for 1918 is the sum of the taxes computed under the three brackets (i. e., $2,700 plus $13,000 plus $1,900) or $17,600.

614 (2) For 1919 the excess profits credit is a specific exemption of $3,000 plus 8 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 8 per cent of $110,000) or $8,800, a total of $11,800. See section 312 and article 791 [for excess profits credit, ¶724].

615 First bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($50,000) in excess of the excess profits credit ($11,800) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $110,000) or $22,000 is $10,200. The tax computed under this bracket is 20 per cent of this amount (i. e., 20 per cent of $10,200) or $2,040.

616 Second bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($50,000) in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $110,000) or $22,000 is $28,000. The tax computed under this bracket is 40 per cent of this amount (i. e., 40 per cent of $28,000) or $11,200.

617 Total tax.—The total tax for 1919 is the sum of the taxes computed under the two brackets (i. e., $2,040 plus $11,200) or $13,240. (Art. 716, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

618 Art. 717. Illustration of computation where no tax under third bracket.—If the corporation used as an illustration in Article 716 [¶608] had an average prewar net income of $20,000 instead of $10,000, the excess profits credit and the tax for 1918 computed under the first and second brackets would be the same, but the war profits credit and the tax computed under the third bracket would not be the same. The war profits credit would be a specific exemption of $3,000 plus the average prewar net income, or $20,000, plus 10 per cent of $50,000 (the difference in invested capital) or $5,000, making a total war profits credit of $28,000.

619 Third bracket.—Eighty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war profits credit (i. e., 80 per cent of the amount by which $40,000 exceeds $28,000 or 80 per cent of $12,000) is $9,600. The amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets ($2,700 plus $13,000) is $15,700. There is accordingly no tax under the third bracket, as $9,600 does not exceed $15,700.

620 Total tax.—The total tax for 1918 is the sum of the taxes computed under the three brackets (i. e., $2,700 plus $13,000 plus nothing) or $15,700. The total tax for 1919 would, of course, be the same as in article 716 [¶608]. (Art. 717, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

621 Art. 718. Illustration of Computation where Excess Profits Credit not Exhausted under First Bracket.—A corporation has an average prewar invested capital of $20,000, an average prewar net income of $7,000, and invested capital and net income for 1918 of the same amounts, respectively. The excess profits credit is a specific exemption of $3,000 plus 8 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 8 per cent of $20,000) or $1,600, a total of $4,600. The war profits credit is a specific exemption of $3,000 plus the average prewar net income of $7,000, a total of $10,000. There is nothing further to be added or deducted in this case, as there is no difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year.

622 First bracket.—The excess profits credit ($4,600) exceeds 20 per cent of the invested capital (20 per cent of $20,000) or $4,000, and there is no amount taxable under this bracket.

623 Second bracket.—The portion of the net income ($7,000) in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (20 per cent of $20,000) or $4,000 is $3,000. In this case, however, the full amount of the excess profits credit could not be allowed under the first bracket, so that the $3,000 which would ordinarily be taxable under this bracket is reduced by the amount of the excess profits credit not allowed under the first bracket ($600), leaving only $2,400 taxable under this bracket. The tax computed under this bracket is 65 per cent of this amount (i. e., 65 per cent of $2,400) or $1,560.

624 Third bracket.—The war profits credit ($10,000) exceeds the net income ($7,000), so that there is no tax under this bracket.

625 Total tax.—The total tax for 1918 would be the sum of the taxes computed under the three brackets (i. e., nothing plus $1,560 plus nothing) or $1,560, were it not that section 302 [¶523] provides that the maximum tax shall not in this case exceed $1,200. See articles 731-733 [for maximum tax limitation, ¶639]. The total tax for 1918 is therefore $1,200. (Art. 718, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

517 from Government Contract.—If in the case of the corporation used as an illustration in article 716 [¶608] the $50,000 net income for 1919 includes $20,000 of net income from Government contracts, the tax for that year would be the sum of the amounts computed under clauses (1) and (2) of section 301 (c) of the statute [¶517].

627 (1) Under clause (1) the excess profits credit is $11,800, the same as under clause (2). The war profits credit is a specific exemption of $3,000, plus the average prewar net income, or $10,000, plus 10 per cent of $60,000 (the difference in invested capital) or $6,000, making a total war profits credit of $19,000.

628 First bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($50,000) in excess of the excess profits credit ($11,800) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $110,000), or $22,000, is $10,200. The tax computed under this bracket is 30 per cent of this amount (i. e., 30 per cent of $10,200) or $3,060.

629 Second bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($50,000) in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $110,000) or $22,000, is $28,000. The tax computed under this bracket is 65 per cent of this amount (65 per cent of $28,000) or $18,200.

630 Third bracket.—Eighty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war profits credit (i. e., 80 per cent of the amount by which $50,000 exceeds $19,000, or $31,000) is $24,800. The amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets ($3,060 plus $18,200) is $21,260. The tax computed under this bracket is the amount by which $24,800 exceeds $21,260, or $3,540.

631 The portion of the tax computed under clause (1) is the same proportion of the total amount computed under the above brackets at the rates for 1918 (i. e., \$3,060 plus \$18,200 plus \$3,540) or \$24,800, as the part of the net income attributable to Government contracts (\$20,000) is of the entire net income (\$50,000). This portion of the tax is therefore  $\frac{2}{5}$  of \$24,800, or \$9,920.

632 (2) The portion of the tax computed under clause (2) is the same proportion of the total amount computed at the rates for 1919 or \$13,240 (for the details see illustration for 1919 under article 716) as the part of the net income not attributable to Government contracts (\$30,000) is of the entire net income (\$50,000). This portion of the tax is therefore  $\frac{3}{5}$  of \$13,240 or \$7,944.

633 (3) The total tax for the year 1919 is the sum of the amounts computed under paragraphs (1) and (2) above ($9,920 plus $7,944) or $17,864. (Art. 719, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

634 Art. 720. Illustration of computation where return for period of less than 12 months.—A corporation which has reported on the basis of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1918, later changes to a calendar year basis and files a return covering the 9 months from April 1, 1918, to December 31, 1918. It had an average prewar capital of $50,000, an average prewar net income of $3,500, an invested capital for the 9 months ending December 31, 1918, of $120,000, and a net income for such period of $50,000. It should be noted that this is a somewhat different method of arriving at the same result which would be reached under a literal application of sections 305, 311 (a) (2) and 326 (d) of the statute. The excess profits credit is computed by adding the specific exemption of $3,000 to 8 per cent of the full invested capital of $120,000, or $9,600, a total of $12,600, and taking 9/12 of this result, or $9,450, as the excess profits credit. The war profits credit is computed by adding the specific exemption of $3,000 to 10 per cent of the full invested capital of $120,000, or $12,000, a total of $15,000, and taking 9/12 of this result, or $11,250, as the war profits credit. The war profits credit is computed in this case under section 311 (b), because the amount computed under section 311 (a) (2) is less than 10 per cent of the invested capital. The amount computed under section 311 (a) (2) would be the sum of the average prewar net income, or $3,500, plus 10 per cent of the amount by which the full invested capital of $120,000 actually used during the taxable period exceeds the average prewar invested capital of $50,000 (i.e., 10 per cent of $70,000), or $7,000, a total of $10,500. This amount is less than 10 per cent of the full invested capital for the taxable year as computed under section 311 (b).

635 First bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($50,000) in excess of the excess profits credit ($9,450) and not in excess of 9/12 of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 9/12 of 20 per cent of $120,000), or $18,000, is $8,550. The tax computed under this bracket is 30 per cent of this amount (i. e., 30 per cent of $8,550), or $2,565.

636 Second bracket.—The amount or portion of the net income ($50,000) in excess of 9/12 of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 9/12 of 20 per cent of $120,000), or $18,000, is $32,000. The tax computed under this bracket is 65 per cent of this amount (i. e., 65 per cent of $32,000), or $20,800.

637 Third bracket.—80 per cent of the amount or portion of the net income in excess of the war profits credit (i. e., 80 per cent of the amount by which $50,000 exceeds $11,250, or $38,750), is $31,000. The amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets ($2,565 plus $20,800) is $23,365. The tax computed under this bracket is the amount by which $31,000 exceeds $23,365, or $7,635.

638 Total tax.—The total tax will be the sum of the taxes computed under the three brackets (i.e., $2,565 plus $20,800 plus $7,635) or $31,000. (Art. 720, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

LIMITATION OF TAX. §302

639 Art. 731. Short Form of Computation of Limitation.—In any case
523 where the net income is at least $20,000 the computation under section 302 of the statute [¶523] may be shortened as follows:

640 (1) The tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301 shall not exceed $5,100, plus 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; and

641 (2) The tax imposed by subdivision (b) of section 301 shall not exceed $3,400, plus 40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000.

642 Where the net income is less than $20,000 the tax shall not exceed 30 per cent or 20 per cent, as the case may be, of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000. (Art. 731, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

643 Art. 732. Limitation when return for fractional part of year.—When a return is rendered for a fractional part of a year the limitation shall be computed in the same manner as if the period covered by the return were a full taxable year. (Art. 732, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921, as amended by T. D. 3245, Nov. 14, 1921.)

644 Art. 733. Illustration of computation of limitation of tax.—If in the illustration used in Article 720 the invested capital had been $100,000 and the net income $80,000, the tax computed under Section 301 (a) of the statute would be $56,200. Section 302 provides, however, that the tax under Section 301 (a) shall not be more than 30 per cent of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000 plus 80 per cent of the net income in excess of $20,000. The tax at the 30 per cent rate will be $5,100 (Art. 731) and the balance of the tax will be 80 per cent of $60,000 (the net income in excess of $20,000), or $48,000. The total tax will therefore be $5,100 plus $48,000 or $53,100. The tax under Section 301 (a), amounting to $56,200, will accordingly be reduced to $53,100. (Art. 733, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921, as amended by T. D. 3245, Nov. 14, 1921.)

TAX WHEN PARTLY PERSONAL SERVICE BUSINESS. §303

645 Art. 741. Apportionment of Invested Capital and Net Income.—

524 For the purpose of determining whether or not a corporation partly partaking of the nature of a personal service corporation is within the scope of section 303 [¶524] of the statute and also for the purpose of establishing the basis for the computation of the tax, the corporation shall apportion or allocate its invested capital between each trade or business or branch thereof as nearly as may be in accordance with the actual facts, and shall submit with its return an explanatory statement setting forth the manner in which the apportionment of the invested capital employed in the production of each part of its net income has been determined. There must be assigned to any personal service trade or business or branch thereof an amount of invested capital at least as great as that which would ordinarily be employed by a personal service corporation of similar size and standing for the payment of salaries and office expenses, maintenance of library and equipment, credit advances to clients, etc. For the method of determining the portion of the net income derived from each trade or business or branch thereof see article 715 [¶607]. For the definition of "personal service corporation" see [law ¶502 and] articles 1523-1532. (Art. 741, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

646 Art. 742. Computation of tax upon net income when partly personal service corporation.—(1) The tax upon the non-personal service part of the net income is computed upon the basis of (a) such part of the entire average net income for the prewar period as was derived from the same trade or business or branch thereof; (b) such part of the entire average invested capital for the prewar period as was employed in the production of the part of the net income for that period determined under (a); (c) such part of the entire invested capital for the taxable year as has been employed in the production of the net income upon which the tax is being computed; and (d) the same proportion of the specific exemption as the proportion which the part of the net income upon which the tax is being computed is of the entire net income. If the corporation was in existence during the prewar period, but did not conduct this trade or business or branch thereof during that period, the war profits credit shall be computed as provided in section 311 (b) of the statute [¶533].

647 (2) The tax upon the personal service part of the net income is the same percentage thereof as the tax computed under (1) is of the non-personal service part of the net income. The tax under this paragraph shall in no case be less than 20 per cent of the personal service part of the entire net income, unless the tax upon the entire net income if computed in the ordinary way would be less than 20 per cent of such entire net income. In that event, and in any case in which the amount of the total tax as computed under this article is the same as or greater than the tax as computed in the ordinary way, the tax shall be computed under section 301 [¶510] of the statute. See section 302 [law ¶523] and articles 711-720 [for discussion on the imposition of the tax, beginning at ¶598] and 731-733 [for maximum limitation of the tax, ¶639]. (Art. 742, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

648 Art. 743. Illustration of Computation of Tax Where Partly Personal Service Business.—A corporation is engaged in contracting and construction work (a non-personal service business in which the employment of capital is necessary) and also renders consulting engineering service (a personal service business which if constituting its sole business would bring it within the class of personal service corporations). It has an average prewar invested capital of $50,000 (of which $38,000 was used in contracting work and $12,000 in engineering); an average prewar net income of $52,000 (of which $12,000 was derived from contracting and $40,000 from engineering); an invested capital for 1918 of $100,000 (of which $81,000 is used in contracting and $19,000 in engineering); and a net income for 1918 of $90,000 (of which $30,000 is derived from contracting and $60,000 from engineering).

649 (1) In computing the tax upon the first or non-personal service part of the net income (i. e., $30,000 derived from contracting) the specific exemption is $1,000 (i. e., the same proportion of $3,000 which $30,000 is of the entire net income of $90,000). The excess profits credit is a specific exemption of $1,000, plus 8 per cent of the invested capital used in contracting (i. e., 8 per cent of $81,000) or $6,480, a total of $7,480. The war profits credit is a specific exemption of $1,000, plus the average prewar net income derived from contracting or $12,000, plus 10 per cent of $43,000 (the difference in invested capital used in contracting) or $4,300, making a total of $17,300.

650 First bracket.—The amount of the net income derived from contracting ($30,000) in excess of the excess profits credit ($7,480) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital (i. e., 20 per cent of $81,000) or $16,200 is $8,720. The tax under this bracket is 30 per cent of this amount (i. e., 30 per cent of $8,720) or $2,616.

651 Second bracket.—The amount of the net income derived from contracting ($30,000) in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital used in contracting (i. e., 20 per cent of $81,000) or $16,200 is $13,800. The tax computed under this bracket is 65 per cent of this amount (65 per cent of $13,800) or $8,970.

652 Third bracket.—Eighty per cent of the amount of the net income derived from contracting in excess of the war profits credit (i. e., 80 per cent of the amount by which $30,000 exceeds $17,300 or 80 per cent of $12,700) is $10,160. The amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets ($2,616 plus $8,970) is $11,586. There is no tax under this bracket, as $10,160 does not exceed $11,586.

653 Tax.—The tax upon the first portion of the net income (i. e., $30,000 derived from contracting) is the sum of the taxes computed under the three brackets (i. e., $2,616 plus $8,970 plus nothing) or $11,586. This is 38.62 per cent of $30,000 of the net income from contracting.

654 (2) The tax upon the second or personal service part of the net income (i. e., $60,000 derived from engineering) is the same percentage of such part of the net income (i. e., 38.62 per cent of $60,000) or $23,172.

655 (3) The total tax is the sum of $11,586 (the tax upon the first part of the net income derived from contracting) and $23,172 (the tax upon the second part of the net income derived from engineering) or $34,758. (Art. 743, Reg. 45, Rev. Jan. 28, 1921.)

EXEMPTIONS.

666 Art. 751. Corporations exempt from tax.—A corporation whose 525 net income for a full taxable year of twelve months is less than $3,000 is exempt from the tax. [For return requirements in such cases see ¶851.] If the taxable period is less than twelve months the corporation is exempt from the tax if its net income for the period is less than the same proportion of $3,000 as the number of months in the period is of twelve months, any fractional part of a month being counted as the number of days

WAR-PROFITS AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAX REGULATIONS.—1918 ACT.

in such part of a month divided by 30. Certain classes of corporations, including personal service corporations, named in section 231 [¶667 below] of the statute are also exempt. See articles 511-522 [for discussion of exemption of certain corporations, ¶667 below, from liability to income tax]. [See ¶913.] (Art. 751, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

667 Sec. 231 [of the Revenue Act of 1918, as in effect prior to January 1, 1921]. That the following organizations shall be exempt from taxation under this title—

- (1) Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations;
- (2) Mutual savings banks not having a capital stock represented by shares;
- (3) Fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, (a) operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system, and (b) providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents;
- (4) Domestic building and loan associations and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit;
- (5) Cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members;
- (6) Corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;
- (7) Business leagues, chambers of commerce, or boards of trade, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;
- (8) Civic leagues or organizations not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare;
- (9) Clubs organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, recreation, and other non-profitable purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or member;
- (10) Farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, or fire insurance companies, mutual ditch or irrigation companies, mutual or cooperative telephone companies, or like organizations of a purely local character, the income of which consists solely of assessments, dues, and fees collected from members for the sole purpose of meeting expenses;
- (11) Farmers', fruit growers', or like associations, organized and operated as sales agents for the purpose of marketing the products of members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them;
- (12) Corporations organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title;
- (13) Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations as provided in section 26 of the Act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An Act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositories and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes";
- (14) Personal service corporations.

682 Art. 752. Net Income Exempt from Tax.—If a corporation is engaged in the mining of gold, the portion of its net income derived from that source is exempt from tax. The tax on the remaining portion of its net income is the proportion of the tax that would have been payable, had the entire net income been derived from other sources than the mining of gold, which such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income. For the method of determining the net income derived from the mining of gold see article 715 [¶607]. (Art. 752, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

683 Art. 753. Illustration of Computation of Tax where Net Income from Gold Mining.—In the case of the corporation used as an illustration in article 716 [¶608] let it be assumed that it is engaged in the mining both of gold and of other rare metals; that the Commissioner finds under article 715 [¶607] that \$35,000 of its gross income is properly attributable to the mining of gold; and that \$20,000 of the deductions allowed are properly applicable to the gross income from that source. The portion of the net income attributable to the mining of gold and exempt from tax would be \$15,000. The remaining portion of the net income is \$25,000 and the tax thereon is the same proportion of the tax computed on the entire net income without the benefit of the exemption (i. e., a tax of \$17,600) which the remaining portion of the net income (\$25,000) bears to the entire net income (\$40,000). The tax will therefore be  $\frac{5}{8}$  of the tax of \$17,600 computed without the benefit of the exemption, or \$11,000. (Art. 753, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

APPORTIONMENT OF SPECIFIC EXEMPTION.

684 Art. 761. Apportionment of Specific Exemption.—The specific exemption of \$3,000 is apportioned only in the case where a return is made covering a period of less than twelve months. In such a case the specific exemption is the same proportion of \$3,000 as the number of months in the period is of twelve months, any fractional part of a month being counted as the number of days in such part of a month divided by 30. Thus, in the case of a corporation organized May 12, 1918, and making a return for the period ending December 31, 1918, the exemption is \$1,916.67, that is, the same proportion of \$3,000 as 7  $\frac{20}{30}$  months is of 12 months. This provision is inapplicable where the return is made for a full fiscal year beginning prior to January 1, 1918, and ending after that date, even though the income for such fiscal year is not subject to full taxation under the present statute. (Art. 761, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

PREWAR PERIOD. §310

685 Art. 771. Prewar Period.—The prewar period in the case of each corporation covers so many of the calendar years 1911, 1912 and 1913 during the whole of which it, or a predecessor trade or business, was in existence. See section 330 [law ¶575] of the statute and articles 931-934 [for certain reorganizations, beginning at ¶837]. If a new enterprise was launched in corporate form in June, 1912, its prewar period would accordingly be the calendar year 1913. The prewar period when mentioned without reference to any particular corporation means the calendar years 1911, 1912 and 1913. (Art. 771, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

WAR PROFITS CREDIT. §311

686 Art. 781. War Profits Credit.—Ordinarily the war profits credit
530 consists of the sum of the specific exemption of $3,000 and an amount equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period, plus 10 per cent of the excess of the invested capital for the taxable year over the average invested capital for the prewar period, or minus 10 per cent of the excess of the average invested capital for the prewar period over the invested capital for the taxable year. If a return is made for a period of less than twelve months, the amount equal to the average net income for the prewar period plus or minus 10 per cent of the difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year shall be reduced to the same proportion thereof as the number of months in the period is of twelve months. See section 305 [law ¶528] of the statute and article 761 [for apportionment of specific exemption ¶684]. If at the time a return is made the net income for the prewar period or the difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year can not be determined, the war profits credit shall be computed in the first instance as provided in the following article [¶688]. If either of these amounts can not eventually be determined, the war profits credit shall be finally determined as provided in the following article [¶688]. See also section 327 [for special cases subject to special tax: law ¶565 and regulations ¶831] and articles 716-720, 743 and 901 [for illustrations of computation of tax, beginning at ¶608; ¶648, ¶831]. (Art. 781, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

687 Manner of determining average prewar profits and invested capital.
547 —Reference is made to your letter of March 8, 1919, relative to 564 average net income and invested capital as computed under the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918. Assuming in each case a full prewar existence, the computation is similar under both Acts. The average invested capital for the prewar period is one-third of the sum of the invested capital determined for each of the prewar years as provided in the respective Acts. ¶The average net income for the prewar period is one-third of the total net income for the prewar years as provided in the respective Acts.
 If any of the prewar years showed a net loss, such net loss may not be offset against the net income of the other years in determining the average net income. (Letter to Richard H. Hart, Denver, Col., signed by J. H. Callan, Assistant to the Commissioner, and dated March 24, 1919.)

688 Art. 782. War profits credit where meager prewar net income.—
533 If a corporation had no net income for the prewar period, or if the war profits credit as ordinarily computed (exclusive of the specific exemption of $3,000) is less than 10 per cent of its invested capital for the taxable year, then the war profits credit consists of the sum of the specific exemption of $3,000 and an amount equal to 10 per cent of the corporation's invested capital for the taxable year. See article 720 [for illustration, ¶634]. (Art. 782, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

689 Acceptance of $3,000 plus 10% of invested capital for taxable year as war-profits credit.—Read ¶852.

690 Art. 783. War Profits Credit where no Prewar Period.—If a cor-536 poration had no prewar period, then the war profits credit consists of the sum of the specific exemption of $3,000 and an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital for the prewar period of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer, but not less than 10 per cent of its invested capital for the taxable year. The war profits credit shall be computed in the first instance on the basis of 10 per cent of the invested capital, and when the average percentage of corporations engaged in the same general class of trade or business has been determined [see ¶691] the amount of the tax will if necessary be recomputed. See section 250 of the statute and articles 1001 [for credit, refund, or additional assessment on recomputation] and 784 [for war-profits credit where no prewar period in special circumstances, ¶722]. (Art. 783, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

691 The Average Percentages known as the Median.—Reference is made 538 to your letter of April 4, 1919; with respect to the application of Section 311 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1918 to the returns of corporations entitled to the benefit thereof.

692 In reply you are advised that the average percentages applicable to the invested capital of corporations coming within Section 311 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1918 are being worked out by this office, but it is not likely that such average percentages will be ready for use prior to the extended date for filing the complete tax returns for the taxable year 1918. [For the average percentages, i. e., the "median," see ¶694.] Therefore, it will be necessary to file such returns and compute the war profits credit on the basis of 10% of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as provided by the 1918 Act.

693 Any adjustments shown to be necessary upon determination and application of the average percentages, as noted above, will be made as soon as practicable thereafter. (Letter to The Corporation Trust Company, signed by Acting Deputy Commissioner P. S. Talbert, and dated May 15, 1919.)

694 The median: Average percentages of pre-war income to pre-war
538 invested capital of general classes of corporations, grouped as to trades or businesses, as provided for in Section 311 (c) (2), Revenue Act of 1918.—Section 311 of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that a corporation which was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the pre-war period, and therefore received no income during the pre-war period, shall be allowed a specific exemption of $3,000 and "an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital, for the pre-war period, of corporations engaged in trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer; but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per centum of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year. Such average percentage shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of data contained in returns made under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, and the average known as the median shall be used."

695 In pursuance of this requirement of the law the accompanying table of medians has been compiled and will be used in complying with Section 250 (b), which provides, "As soon as practicable after the return is filed, the Commissioner shall examine it. If it then appears that the correct amount of the tax is greater or less than that shown in the return, the installments shall be recomputed. If the amount already paid exceeds that which should have been paid on the basis of the installments as recomputed, the excess so paid shall be credited against the subsequent installments; and if the amount already paid exceeds the correct amount of the tax, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of Section 252."

696 Inasmuch as the examination of all returns filed will not be completed by the due date of the last installment of 1918 taxes, it is suggested that the taxpayers entitled to credit, based on the appropriate median shown in the accompanying tables, may recompute their tax using a war profits credit based on such median, and file claim for abatement [Form 47, page 1611] for as much of the last installment of the outstanding assessment as the total tax assessed exceeds the tax so recomputed. In any case where the amount already paid exceeds the amount due, with the benefit of the median, claim for refund should also be filed on Form 46 [page 1609]. [See ¶715.]

722 Art. 784. War Profits Credit where no Prewar Period in Special
539 Circumstances.—If a corporation had no prewar period, but (a) if a majority of its stock at any time during the taxable year was owned or controlled by a corporation which was in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, or (b) if 50 per cent or more of its gross income consisted of income derived from Government contracts made after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, then the war profits credit is to be determined as provided in article 782 [¶688 instead of in the manner provided in article 783 [¶690]. See section 1 of the statute [law ¶503] and article 1510 [for definition of government contract]. (Art. 784, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

723 Art. 785. War Profits credit in the case of affiliated corporations.
 —In the case of affiliated corporations making a consolidated return only one specific exemption of $3,000 is allowed. See also sections 240 [for specific exemption in case of consolidated returns, ¶588] and 305 of the statute [law ¶528] and article 761 [regulations ¶684, for apportionment of specific exemption]. (Art. 785, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

EXCESS PROFITS CREDIT.

724 Art. 791. Excess Profits Credit.—The excess profits credit consists of the specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year. In the case of affiliated corporations making a consolidated return only one specific exemption of $3,000 is allowed. See also sections 240 [for specific exemption in case of consolidated returns, ¶588] and 305 of the statute [law ¶528, and regulations ¶684 for apportionment of specific exemption] and articles 716-720, 743, and 761 [for illustrations, beginning at ¶608, ¶648, and ¶684]. (Art. 791, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

NET INCOME.

725 Art. 801. Net Income.—The net income of a corporation for the 543 purpose of the imposition of the war profits and excess profits tax is the same net income [see ¶726 below] as determined for the purpose of the income tax. See section 232 of the statute and article 531. For the prewar period, however, the net income of a corporation is to be ascertained in the case of the calendar years 1911 and 1912 as provided in section 38 of the Act of August 5, 1909, and in the case of the calendar year 1913 as provided in section II of the Act of October 3, 1913, except that in either case the amount of any taxes imposed by section 38 of the Act of August 5, 1909, and paid within the year in question should be included and that in the case of the calendar year 1913 any dividends received from other corporations taxed under section II of the Act of October 3, 1913, should be deducted. (Art. 801, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

726 Interest on Liberty Bonds and Victory Notes, and on War Finance Corporation Bonds.—[Sec. 213 (b) (4) of the Revenue Act of 1918 reads in part as follows:]—"In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, and in the case of bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective Acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from taxation to the taxpayer both under this title [Income Tax] and under Title III [excess-profits tax].” [Sec. 236 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that for the purpose of the income tax imposed on corporations, there shall be allowed as a credit], “(a) The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States and bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, which is included in gross income under section 233 [which section refers back to Sec. 213, quoted above];” [furthermore the Acts authorizing the issue of Liberty bonds and War Finance Corporation bonds, and the Act authorizing the issue of Liberty notes (considering the series elected by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority given to him by the Act itself), exempts the interest from such bonds and notes from income tax in the case of corporations; therefore all interest on all Government obligations and interest on War Finance Corporation bonds is free of income tax to corporations: The extent to which such interest was exempt for excess-profits tax purposes prior to January 1, 1921, is shown below.]

728 Tax exemptions of Liberty Bonds and Victory Notes.—Liberty bonds and Victory notes issued under authority of the acts of Congress approved April 24, 1917, September 24, 1917, April 4, 1918, July 9, 1918, September 24, 1918, and March 3, 1919, are entitled, respectively, to the exemptions from taxation set forth in said acts, from which the statements in this article are summarized, and to which they are subject.

1. 4 per cent and  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds are exempt from all Federal, State and local taxation, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes and (b) Federal income surtaxes and profits taxes, as follows:

1. First Liberty loan converted 4 per cent bonds of 1932-1947 (first 4s).
2. First Liberty loan converted  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds of 1932-1947 (first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, issue of May 9, 1918).
3. First Liberty loan second converted  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. bonds of 1932-1947 (first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, issue of October 24, 1918).
4. Second Liberty loan 4 per cent. bonds of 1927-1942 (second 4s).
5. Second Liberty loan converted  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent bonds of 1927-1942 (second  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s).
6. Third Liberty loan  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. bonds of 1928 (third  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s).
7. Fourth Liberty loan  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. bonds of 1933-1938 (fourth  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s).
8. Victory Liberty loan  $4\frac{3}{4}$  per cent. convertible gold notes of 1922-1923 ( $4\frac{3}{4}$  per cent Victory notes).

are exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, associations, or corporations.

The exemptions in the tabulation that follows, apply to periods prior to January 1, 1921.

[For periods prior to Jan. 1, 1921.]

- II. 4 per cent and  $4\frac{1}{4}$  per cent Liberty bonds (but not  $4\frac{3}{4}$  per cent Victory notes) treasury certificates, and war savings certificates are entitled to certain limited exemptions from graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, associations, or corporations, in respect to the interest on principal amounts thereof, as follows:
- \$5,000 in the aggregate of first 4s, first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s (issues of May 9 and October 24, 1918), second 4s and  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, third  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, fourth  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, Treasury certificates, and war-savings certificates.
  - 30,000 of first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s (issue of October 24, 1918, only), until the expiration of two years after the termination of the war.
  - 30,000 of fourth  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, until the expiration of two years after the termination of the war.
  - 30,000 in the aggregate of first 4s, first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s (issues of May 9 and October 24, 1918), second 4s and  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, third  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, and fourth  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, as to the interest received on and after January 1, 1919, until the expiration of five years after the termination of the war.
  - 45,000 in the aggregate of first 4s, first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s (issue of May 9, 1918, only), second 4s and  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, and third  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, as to the interest received after January 1, 1918, until the expiration of two years after the termination of the war; this exemption conditional on original subscription to, and continued holding at the date of the tax return of two-thirds as many bonds of the fourth Liberty loan.
  - 20,000 in the aggregate of first 4s, first  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s (issues of May 9, and October 24, 1918), second 4s and  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, third  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, and fourth  $4\frac{1}{4}$ s, as to the interest received on and after January 1, 1919; this exemption conditional upon original subscription to, and continued holding at the date of the tax return of one-third as many notes of the Victory Liberty loan, and extending through the life of such notes of the Victory Liberty loan.

160,000 total possible exemptions from Federal income surtaxes and profits taxes, subject to conditions above summarized.

III.  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent bonds and  $3\frac{3}{4}$  per cent notes are exempt from all Federal, State, and local taxation, except estate or inheritance taxes, as follows:

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. First Liberty loan  | } Are exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate or inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority. |
| $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent bonds of 1932-1947.                  |   |
| 2. Victory Liberty loan                                      | }   |
| $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent convertible gold notes of 1922-1923. |   |

(Art. 80(a), Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

729 Income of a corporation as such is taxable to the corporation and is not taxable to the stockholders. The corporation, and not the stockholders, is regarded as the owner of the bonds held by the corporation and entitled to exemption on account of such ownership. When bonds of the Fourth Liberty Loan are subscribed for by the corporation it, and not the stockholders, is the original subscriber and entitled to the collateral exemption of interest on bonds of previous issues on account of such original subscription. (T. D. 2762, Oct. 18, 1918.)

730 Original subscription to Victory Notes.—For the purposes of the additional tax exemption for Liberty Bonds granted by Section 2 (b) of the Victory Loan Act, approved March 3, 1919, Victory notes of either series issued upon conversion of Victory notes of the other series which were originally subscribed for by any taxpayer will be deemed to have been originally subscribed for by such taxpayer. (T. D. 2857, June 7, 1919.—Art. 80, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

[Not limited to periods prior to Jan. 1, 1921.]

732 Taxable status of War Finance Corporation Bond interest.—War Finance Corporation bonds are issued under the authority of the Act of April 5, 1918, which provides that the interest on the amount of such bonds, the principal of which does not exceed $5,000, shall be exempt from normal taxes, surtaxes, excess profits and war profits taxes, and that the interest received by a taxpayer, independent of the amount of his holdings, is exempt from normal Federal tax [which includes the income tax on corporations]. (Official announcement by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, April 5, 1919.)

733 Interest on all United States Bonds and on War Finance Corporation Bonds entirely exempt from taxation to foreign corporations.—Sec. 4 [of the Victory Liberty Loan Act]. That section 3 of the Fourth Liberty Bond Act is hereby amended to read as follows:
 “Sec. 3. That, notwithstanding the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act or of the War Finance Corporation Act or of any other Act, bonds, notes, and certificates of indebtedness of the United States and bonds of the War Finance Corporation shall, while beneficially owned by a nonresident alien individual, or a foreign corporation, partnership, or association, not engaged in business in the United States, be exempt both as to principal and interest from any and all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States or by any local taxing authority.” (Section 4 of “An Act to amend the Liberty Bond Acts and the War Finance Corporation Act, and for other purposes,” known as the “Victory Liberty Loan Act,” approved by the President, March 3, 1919.)

734 Art. 802. Prewar net income of affiliated corporations.—The consolidated net income of affiliated corporations for the prewar period shall be the average consolidated net income for the prewar years of such of the several corporations included in the consolidation for the taxable year as were affiliated during the prewar period, plus the aggregate of the average net income for each of the corporations not affiliated during the prewar period which were in existence during all of the prewar period or during at least one full year within the prewar period. The net income of a subsidiary corporation organized during the prewar period by an existing corporation shall also be included. See also sections 240 and 330 of the statute and articles 631-638 and 931-934 [for "Reorganizations," beginning at ¶837]. (Art. 802, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

735 Liberty Bond interest exemption, consolidated returns, bonds all being owned by parent corporation.—Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 25, 1919, in which you state that the _____ Company is affiliated with various subsidiaries in which the _____ Company owns all the stock directly or owns the stock of the company which does own all the stock of such affiliated company. The _____ Company has on hand an investment in Liberty Bonds amounting to $2,345,000 of the second, third and fourth issues. ¶You inquire if the _____ Company may apportion the Liberty Bonds held by it among its several subsidiaries in order to determine the total exemption allowable for purposes of a consolidated return. ¶In reply you are advised that in cases of consolidated returns, affiliated corporations are treated as if they were one corporation and the tax is based upon the consolidated income and the consolidated invested capital of these corporations. Whether the parent company owns the bonds or apportions them among its subsidiaries, makes no difference in the amount of exemption allowable in cases where consolidated returns are required, as such exemption is based upon the consolidated condition. (Letter to The Corporation Trust Company, signed by Commissioner Daniel C. Roper, and dated April 5, 1919.)

736 Liberty Bond interest exemption, consolidated returns, bonds being owned by each of the affiliated corporations.—Reference is made to your letter dated April 22, 1919, in which you question the validity of a ruling in connection with exemptions to which several affiliated corporations included in a consolidated return are entitled on account of their ownership of various issues of Liberty Bonds appearing in a letter from Acting Commissioner J. H. Callan dated April 16, 1919, to The Corporation Trust Company and printed in the War Tax Service, 1919, to the effect that:

"Whether each of the subsidiary companies owns the bonds or whether the parent company, or any one of the companies alone, owns the exempt bonds makes no difference in the amount of exemption allowable in cases where consolidated returns are required, as such exemptions are based upon the consolidated condition."

TERMS RELATING TO INVESTED CAPITAL.

738 Art. 811. Intangible and Tangible Property.—Intangible prop-
549 erty includes patents and good will and other like property. Tan-
550 gible property includes all property other than intangible property.

Most contracts are intangible property and in the absence of a specific ruling by the Commissioner to the contrary should be so regarded for the purpose of making returns. A contract may be treated as tangible property only after the submission of a full statement as to its exact nature, showing to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that it relates to rights in tangible property to such an extent that its value arises chiefly therefrom. Associated Press, United Press, and similar franchises, and subscription lists and mailing lists, are intangible property. (Art. 811, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

739 Art. 812. Borrowed Capital: Securities.—Any interest in a cor-
551 poration represented by bonds, debentures, or other securities, by 561 whatever name called, including so-called preferred stock, if with respect to the payment of either interest or principal it ranks with or prior to the interest of the general creditors, is borrowed capital and cannot be included in computing invested capital. Any such preferred stock may, however, be so included if it is deferred with respect to the payment of both interest and principal to the interest of the general creditors (Art. 812, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

740 Art. 813. Borrowed Capital: Amounts Left in Business.—Whether
561 stitutes borrowed capital or paid-in surplus is largely a question of fact. Thus, indebtedness to stockholders actually cancelled and left in the business would ordinarily constitute paid-in surplus, while amounts left in the business representing salaries of officers in excess of their actual withdrawals, or deposit accounts in favor of partners in a partnership succeeded by the corporation, will be considered paid-in surplus or borrowed capital according to the facts of the particular case. The general principle is that if interest is paid or is to be paid on any such amount, or if the stockholder's or officer's right to repayment of such amount ranks with or before that of the general creditors, the amount so left with the corporation must be considered as borrowed capital and be so treated in computing invested capital. (Art. 813, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

741 Interest-bearing one-year loan to corporation by stockholder although all other creditors are preferred, is not "Invested Capital."—Principal stockholder of X. Corporation loans $35,000 to Corporation for one year. In order to protect credit of Corporation, agreement is signed that lender shall be deferred to all other creditors, lender to receive one per cent additional interest in consideration. Can this $35,000 be included in "invested capital" in nature of preferred stock, the interest not being deducted as expense? (Answer.) Your telegram April second. Question answered in negative. (Telegram of inquiry from Bernhard Knollenberg, Richmond, Indiana, and the reply thereto signed by Commissioner Daniel C. Roper, and dated April 4, 1919.)

742 Art. 814. Borrowed Capital: Other Illustrations.—Items such as 551 deposits or amounts due to other banks shown in the balance sheet
561 of a bank, unexpired subscriptions shown in the balance sheet of a publishing concern, etc., are deemed liabilities and can not be included in computing invested capital. (Art. 814, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

743 Art. 815. Inadmissible assets.—Stocks, bonds and other obliga-
552 tions (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which are not required to be included in computing net income, are inadmissible assets even though no such dividends or interest have been actually paid or received during the taxable year. The failure to pay or to receive dividends or interest does not change the status of such securities as inadmissible assets. A corporation cannot by including the income from inadmissible assets as taxable income create the right to have such assets considered admissible assets. (Art. 815, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

744 Federal Reserve Bank Stock held to be an inadmissible asset.— Reference is made to office letter to you dated March 11, 1919, in reply to your letter of February 25, 1919. ¶Through an oversight an erroneous ruling was made in the above mentioned office letter, relative to Federal Reserve Bank Stock, in connection with invested capital. ¶Federal Reserve Bank Stock, held by a member bank, is held to be an inadmissible asset in determining invested capital for excess profits tax purposes. This ruling will supersede the ruling in Office letter of March 11, 1919. (Letter to The Chase National Bank, New York, N. Y., signed by Commissioner Daniel
 C. Roper, and dated March 13, 1919.)

745 War Finance Corporation Bonds as admissible and inadmissible assets.—Bonds of the War Finance Corporation, the principal of which does not exceed $5,000, are inadmissible assets. Bonds of the War Finance Corporation, the principal of which exceeds $5,000 are admissible assets. This ruling was issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue today in response to numerous inquiries as to whether such bonds are admissible or inadmissible assets.

746 “Inadmissible assets” is a term used in the Revenue Act of 1918 to indicate certain assets of a corporation which may not be included in calculating its invested capital.

747 War Finance Corporation bonds are issued under the authority of the Act of April 5, 1918, which provides that the interest on the amount of such bonds, the principal of which does not exceed $5,000 shall be exempt from normal taxes, surtaxes, excess profits and war profits taxes, and that the interest received by a taxpayer, independent of the amount of his holdings, is exempt from normal Federal tax. (Official announcement by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, April 5, 1919.)

748 Art. 816. Inadmissible Assets: Government Bonds.—Obligations
552 of a State or Territory or any municipal or other political subdivision thereof, of the District of Columbia, or of any possession of the United States, and Federal farm loan bonds, not being obligations of the United States within the meaning of the statute, are inadmissible assets.
 See Section 213(b) of the Statute and Articles 74-82. (Art. 816, Reg. 45,

749 Art. 817. Inadmissible Assets: Partial Exception.—(a) Where the 552 income derived from inadmissible assets consists in part of profit from the disposition thereof, or (b) where all or a part of the interest derived from such assets is in effect included in net income because the interest paid on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry such assets may not be deducted from gross income, in either case a corresponding part of the capital invested in such assets shall be deemed an admissible asset. This article applies separately to each issue or class of inadmissible securities held by a corporation. For example, it may hold A company stock costing $100,000 and B company stock costing $200,000. During the year it receives $8,000 in dividends from A company and $5,000 from B company, and on September 30 sells part of its B company stock at a profit of $3,000. For the period from January 1 to September 30, $75,000 of its holdings of B company stock became admissible. After September 30 its remaining holdings of B company stock are inadmissible, but the proceeds of the sale are admissible unless invested in inadmissibles. See articles 852 [for percentage of inadmissible assets, ¶805] and 854 [for computation of average invested capital, ¶807]. (Art. 817, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

750 Art. 818. Admissible Assets.—Admissible assets include all assets 553 other than inadmissible assets. Organization expenses and deferred charges against future income are admissible assets. For all purposes of computing invested capital admissible assets must be valued in accordance with the provisions of sections 326 [¶555], 330 [¶575], and 331 [¶579] of the statute and the articles thereunder. Thus, for example, intangible property paid in for stock or shares is an admissible asset, but it cannot be valued at an amount in excess of that at which it may be included in computing invested capital under paragraphs (4) [¶559] and (5) [¶560] of section 326(a). (Art. 818, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

INVESTED CAPITAL. §326

751 Art. 831. Meaning of Invested Capital.—Invested capital within 555 the meaning of the statute is the capital actually paid in to the corporation by the stockholders, including the surplus and undivided profits, and is not based upon the present net worth of the assets, as shown by an appraisal or in any other manner. The basis or starting point in the computation of invested capital is found in the amount of cash and other property paid in, the valuation at which such other property may be included being determined in accordance with the statute and the regulations. The computation does not stop, however, with such original entries or amounts, but also takes into account the surplus and undivided profits of prior years left in the business. The invested capital of a corporation includes, generally speaking, (a) the cash paid in for stock, (b) the tangible property paid in for stock, (c) the surplus and undivided profits, and (d) the intangible property paid in for stock (to a limited amount), less, however, the same proportion of such aggregate sum as the amount of inadmissible assets bears to the amount of the admissible assets and the inadmissible assets held during the taxable year. Invested capital does not include borrowed capital. See section 325 of the statute and articles 811-818 [for terms relating to invested capital, beginning at ¶738]. The fair market value of the assets as of March 1, 1913, has no bearing on invested capital. (Art. 831, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.) [See ¶865 and ¶889.]

753 Art. 832. Cash paid in: Bonus stock.—Capital stock issued as a
556 bonus in connection with the sale of a corporation's bonds may not be included in invested capital unless the corporation proves to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that such stock bonus enabled the corporation to secure a higher price for the bonds than it could otherwise have secured. Wherever this fact is established such stock shall be included in computing invested capital to the extent of the difference between the selling price of the bonds and the price at which they could have been sold if issued without such stock bonus. The excess of the face value of such bonds over the price at which they could have been sold if issued without the stock bonus is deemed discount and is subject to amortization. See Article 39. (Art. 832, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

754 Art. 833. Tangible Property Paid in: Evidences of Indebtedness.
557 —Enforcible notes or other evidences of indebtedness, either interest-bearing or non-interest bearing, of the subscriber received by a corporation upon a subscription for stock may be considered as tangible property in computing its invested capital to the extent of the actual cash value of such notes or other evidences of indebtedness at the time when paid in, but only (a) if such notes or evidences of indebtedness could under the laws of the jurisdiction in which the corporation was organized legally be received in payment for stock, and (b) if they were actually received by the corporation as absolute, and not as conditional, payment in whole or in part of the stock subscription. (Art. 833, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

755 Art. 834. Tangible Property Paid in: Inadmissible Assets.—
557 Stocks, bonds and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which are not included in computing net income, when bona fide paid in for stock or shares may like other tangible property be included in computing the invested capital of the corporation at their actual cash value when paid in. For the purpose of the reduction required in articles 852 [¶805] and 854 [¶807] however, account must be taken of such assets in the same manner as of any other inadmissible assets. (Art. 834, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

756 Art. 835. Tangible Property Paid in: Mixture of Tangible and In- 557 tangible Property.—Where stock or shares and bonds or other obligations have been issued for a mixed aggregate of tangible and intangible property, it will be presumed in the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary that the bonds were issued for tangible property and that the stock was issued for the balance of the tangible property, if any, and for the intangible property. Where stock or shares have been issued for a mixed aggregate of tangible and intangible property and certain liabilities have been assumed in connection with the transaction, it will be presumed that such liabilities are to be charged against the tangible property and the intangible property in the order named, unless it is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner that this presumption is not in accordance with the facts. See further section 327 (c) [law §568] of the statute [and regulations §831]. (Art. 835, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

757 Art. 836. Tangible Property Paid in: Value in Excess of Par Value of Stock.—[For this Article 836 amended see §1265.] Evidence offered to support a claim for a paid-in surplus must be as of the date of the payment, and may consist among other things of (a) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities made on or about the date of the transaction; (b) certification of the assessed value in the case of real estate; and (c) proof of a market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares. The additional value allowed in any case is confined to the value definitely known or accurately ascertainable at the time of the payment. No claim will be allowed for a paid-in surplus in a case in which the additional value has been developed or ascertained subsequently to the date on which the property was paid in to the corporation, or in respect of property which the stockholders or their agents on or shortly before the date of such payment acquired at a bargain price, as for instance, at a receiver's sale. Generally, allowable claims under this article will arise out of transactions in which there has been no substantial change of beneficial interest in the property paid in to the corporation, and in all cases the proof of value must be clear and explicit. (Art. 836, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

758 Tangible property paid in: Value in excess of par value of stock.—

Reference is made to your letter of March 3, 1919, in regard to the — Coal Company, —, Kentucky, and it is noted that you desire a ruling as to the following facts: Mr. — secured a lease on a coal mine near —, Kentucky. It appeared that from the development and geographical condition of the country that the amount of coal this mine would produce would not exceed 500,000 tons. The — Coal Company was organized with a capital stock of $75,000 and the lease secured by Mr. — was transferred to the corporation. Subsequent developments have proven that the mine will produce approximately 2,000,000 tons of coal. At the time of organization, the company was capitalized on the basis of the value of the coal known to be contained in the property. The company, therefore, desires to include in invested capital the increase in value of the property due to the discovery of the extraordinary large deposits of coal. In this connection your attention is called to Art. 836 [§757] of Reg. No. 45. (Letter to The Corporation Trust Company, signed by Commissioner Daniel C. Roper, dated March 11, 1919.)

759 Depreciation of tangible property, added to invested capital as paid-in surplus, to be reflected in adjustment of earned surplus or undivided profits.—Reference is made to your letter of March 18th, relative to paid-in surplus representing value of property in excess of the consideration paid therefor. ¶In reply you are informed that paid-in surplus representing tangible property need not be reduced by reason of depreciation of the property in question. All adjustments necessary on account of inadequate or excessive depreciation should be made in connection with earned surplus or undivided profits. ¶Therefore, if a corporation is properly entitled to add to its invested capital in the form of paid-in surplus an amount representing excess in value of property, over the consideration paid therefor, either under Article 63 of Regulations No. 41, relative to the Revenue Act of 1917, or under Articles 836 [¶757] and 837 [¶760] of Regulations No. 45, relative to the Revenue Act of 1918, such paid-in surplus need not be reduced on account of depreciation of the property on which the excess value is claimed. ¶It should be borne in mind, however, that while paid-in surplus as indicated above, need not be reduced on account of depreciation, such adjustment must be made in earned surplus or undivided profits, and the computation must be based not on the cash paid or stock issued for the property but on its actual value at the time acquired for the purpose of computing the allowable addition to paid-in surplus. (Letter to Leslie, Banks & Company, New York, N. Y., signed by Commissioner Daniel C. Roper, and dated April 14, 1919.)

760 Art. 837. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Paid-in Surplus.—

558 Where it is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner that tangible property has been paid in by a stockholder to a corporation as a gift or at a value definitely known or accurately ascertainable as of the date of such payment clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or other consideration paid by the corporation therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus. Substantially the same kind of evidence will be required under this article as under article 836 [¶757]. See further article 813 [for amounts left in business by stockholders, as invested capital or borrowed capital, ¶740]. (Art. 837, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

761 Art. 838. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Earned Surplus.—Only

558 true earned surplus and undivided profits can be included in the computation of invested capital, and if for any reason the books do not properly reflect the true surplus such adjustments must be made as are necessary in order to arrive at the correct amount. In the computation of earned surplus and undivided profits full recognition must first be given to all expenses incurred and losses sustained from the original organization of the corporation down to the taxable year, including among such expenses and losses reasonable allowances for depreciation, obsolescence, or depletion of property (irrespective of the manner in which such property was originally acquired), and for the amortization of any discount on its bonds. There can, of course, be no earned surplus or undivided profits until any deficit or impairment of paid-in capital due to depletion, depreciation, expense, losses, or any other cause has been made good. Where adequate evidence is presented that the amounts written off or deducted in previous returns of net income are in the aggregate incorrect or unreasonable, adjustments must be made, and, if not barred by the statute of limitations, the taxpayer will be allowed a refund in respect of any taxes overpaid in prior years, or in the case of an underpayment of taxes will be additionally assessed. (Art. 838, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

762 Art. 839. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Allowance for Depletion

558 and Depreciation.—Depletion, like depreciation, must be recognized in all cases in which it occurs. Depletion attaches to each unit of mineral or other property removed, and the denial of a deduction in computing net income under the Act of August 5, 1909, or the limitation upon the amount of the deduction allowed under the Act of October 3, 1913, does not relieve the corporation of its obligation to make proper provision for depletion of its property in computing its surplus and undivided profits. Adjustments in respect of depreciation or depletion in prior years will be made or permitted only upon the basis of affirmative evidence that as at the beginning of the taxable year the amount of depreciation or depletion written off in prior years was insufficient or excessive, as the case may be. Where deductions for depreciation or depletion have either on the books of the corporation or in its returns of net income been included in the past in expense or other accounts, rather than specifically as depreciation or depletion, or where capital expenditures have been charged to expense in lieu of depreciation or depletion, a statement indicating the extent to which this practice has been carried should accompany the return. (Art. 839, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

763 Allowance for amortization under the Munitions Manufacturer's Tax Law will not affect computation of invested capital for taxable year 1918.—Reference is made to your letter in which you request a ruling on behalf of your client, with regard to whether amounts deducted as allowances for amortization on munitions tax returns for 1916 and 1917 should be included in the computation of invested capital for 1918, or should be made the subject of adjustments in the nature of deductions from invested capital.

¶In reply you are advised that the Munition Manufacturer's tax was laid "upon the entire net profits actually received or accrued," from the sale or disposition of specific munitions, and it was provided in Section 302 "That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title, for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such articles manufactured within the United States, the following items: * * *

(f) A reasonable allowance according to the conditions peculiar to each concern, for amortization of the values of building and machinery, account being taken of the exceptional depreciation of special plants." ¶It is apparent from this language that the amortization allowance in question was authorized for the purpose of computing "net profits," not net "income." The right to make a deduction for amortization in computing net income for the income tax did not exist and was repeatedly denied by the Bureau prior to the passage of the Revenue Act of 1918. It is to be noted further that the taxes imposed by Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 and Title III of the Revenue Act of 1918 were explicitly laid upon "net income," and were in a variety of ways impressed with the stamp and character of an income rather than a munition manufacturer's tax. They are in no sense mere continuations or expansions of the tax imposed by Title III of the Revenue Act of 1916. It follows, therefore, that the deduction for amortization under the Munition Manufacturer's Tax law was not allowed for income tax purposes and should not now be permitted to affect the surplus or any other element entering into the "invested capital" employed for purposes of the war-profits and excess-profits taxes. ¶This conclusion is supported by the character of the amortization allowance in question. It was in many respects quite dissimilar from the depreciation and depletion allowances. It was not based upon the fact that plant and equipment acquired in the year 1916 or earlier for the manufacture of munitions, actually depreciated in use or market value during the taxable year 1916. There was in general no such depreciation in value or impairment of useful life. Account was taken "of the exceptional depreciation of special plants" but the principal allowance was "for the amortization of the values of buildings and machinery," whether those values increased or decreased in the immediate future. The principal amortization allowance looked to the establishment of a special fund to recoup exceptional war costs when war uses had ceased; it did not imply that there had been or would be any immediate impairment of physical assets, such as is covered by the depletion allowance, or any immediate exhaustion, wear, tear or obsolescence in excess of the amount covered by the depreciation allowance. It was, as stated, a special allowance peculiar to this tax, designed possibly to moderate the (then) exceptionally high rates, of the Munition Manufacturer's Tax. ¶Reference has been made in this connection to the wording of Section 214 (a) (9) and Section 234 (a) (8) authorizing a deduction for amortization under the Revenue Act of 1918; but upon careful examination these paragraphs are found to have no bearing upon the present case. ¶It is held, therefore, that the amount deducted as an allowance for amortization under the Munitions Manufacturer's Tax Law will not affect the computation of invested capital for the taxable year 1918. (Letter to a subscriber, signed by Commissioner Daniel C. Roper, and dated August 13, 1919.)

764 Art. 840. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Additions to Surplus
558 Account.—A corporation's books of account will be presumed to show the facts. If it claims that its capital or surplus account is understated the burden of proof will rest upon it. Additions to such accounts will be accepted to the following extent:

765 (1) Excessive depreciation heretofore charged off on property still owned and in use, if it is now shown by satisfactory proof to have been excessive and such excess is substantial in amount, whether or not disallowed by the Commissioner as a deduction from net income, may be restored to the surplus account. No such amount shall be restored, however, unless it is shown that adequate depreciation has been deducted upon all other property of the corporation still in use, nor in any case in which such amount has been allowed as a deduction for amortization under section 234 (a) (8) of the statute, or in which the cost of the property has been recovered through being included in the price of goods or services, as for example, in the case of patterns, dies, plates, special tools, etc., or under a munition contract with a foreign government.

766 (2) Amounts which have been expended before January 1, 1917, for the acquisition of plant, equipment, tools, patterns, furniture, fixtures, or like tangible property, having a useful life extending substantially beyond the year in which the expenditure was made, and which have been charged as current expense, may (less proper deductions for depreciation or obsolescence) be added to the surplus account when such assets are still owned and in active use by the corporation during the taxable year. Special tools, patterns, and similar assets shall not be assigned any value if their cost has been recovered through having been included in the price of goods. If their cost has not been so recovered and they are held for only occasional use, they shall not be assigned a value in excess of the fair value based upon the earnings actually arising from their current use, and in no case shall such value be more than the cost less depreciation. Assets of this kind not in current use shall not be valued at more than their nominal or scrap value.

767 (3) Amounts which have been expended in the past for intangible property of any kind can be restored to capital or surplus account only to the extent that the corporation specifically paid such amounts for the intangible property as such. For provisions relating to patents see article 843.

768 (4) Adjustments necessary to correct other errors found in the books of account may be made. But see the following article. (Art. 840, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

769 Art. 841. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Limitation of Additions
558 to Surplus Account.—Additions to surplus which a corporation may desire to make under the preceding article fall broadly into two classes:

770 (1) To correct returns of net income for prior years in which actual errors have been made, as for example where excessive depreciation has been deducted, additions to plant and equipment or other capital charges have been charged off as an expense, inventories have been taken upon a wrong basis of valuation, etc.

771 (2) To reinstate in surplus deductions from income which are as a matter of good accounting to some extent optional, such as experimental expenses, patent litigation, development of good will through advertising or otherwise, etc. [See ¶1926.]

772 Adjustments falling in class (1) will be permitted for all years whether before or after March 1, 1913, provided amended returns of net income are filed for each year in which an erroneous return has been made. Due consideration will be given to the assessment of penalties in any case in which a fraudulent return has been made. Adjustments falling in class (2) cannot be permitted, as in such cases it is considered that the corporation has exercised a binding option in deducting such expenses from income. An election of this sort which was made concurrently with the transaction cannot now be revised, and amended returns in respect thereof cannot be accepted. The corporation shall submit with its return a statement of the additions proposed, specifying the kinds and amounts of property involved, the years in which the expenditures were made, and the method followed in distinguishing between capital outlays and current expenses, and showing that adequate provision has been made for depreciation, obsolescence and depletion of such of the assets affected by the additions as are subject to recognized depreciation, obsolescence or depletion. In any case in which there is an operating deficit amounts restored must first be set off against the deficit and only the excess can be actually included in the computation of invested capital (Art. 841, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.) [See ¶1926.]

773 Art. 842. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Property Paid in and Subsequently Written off.—Where tangible or intangible property has been paid in to a corporation for stock or shares or as paid-in surplus and has subsequently been in whole or in part written off the books, the amount so written off may upon evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner be restored to the capital or surplus account subject to the following limitations:

774 (1) The amount restored must be reduced by a proper deduction for any depreciation, obsolescence, or depletion; and

775 (2) The aggregate amount included in computing invested capital on account of such property shall not exceed the amount which might have been included if such property had not been written off. (Art. 842, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

776 Art. 843. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Patents.—From the 558 standpoint of assets a patent, or more particularly a group of patents, is closely analogous to good will. Their value is contingent upon and measured by their earning power. While patents have a definite life, there is a common tendency to extend that life by improvements upon the original, and in a successful business the patent value merges more or less completely into a trade name or other form of good will. Therefore, while deductions in respect to the depreciation of patents based upon a normal life period of seventeen years are allowable in computing net income for the purpose of the income tax, such deductions are not obligatory, but are optional with each taxpayer. Where since January 1, 1909, a corporation has exercised that option to its own benefit in computing its taxable net income the amount so deducted can not now be restored in computing invested capital. Where, however, the cost of patents has been charged against surplus or otherwise disposed of in such a manner as not to benefit the corporation in computing its taxable net income since January 1, 1909, any amount so written off may be restored in computing invested capital, if it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the amount so written off represented a mere book entry ascribable to a conservative policy of management or accounting and did not represent a realized shrinkage in the value of such assets. Any amount so restored may not be written off by way of deductions from taxable net income in any subsequent year or years. Where a corporation has charged to current expenses the cost of developing or protecting patents, no amount in respect thereof expended since January 1, 1909, can be restored in computing invested capital. In respect of expenditures made before January 1, 1909, a corporation now seeking to restore them must be prepared to show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that all such items are proper capital expenditures. It can not be said that the correct computation of surplus and undivided profits necessarily requires a deduction in respect of the expiration of patents. It follows, therefore, that where a corporation in the exercise of its option has not written down the cost of patents, it is not ordinarily necessary to reduce the surplus and undivided profits in computing invested capital, whether the patents have been acquired for stock or shares or for cash or other tangible property. Due consideration will be given to the facts in any case in which this rule seems obviously unreasonable. See article 167. (Art. 843, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

777 Blank.

778 Art. 844. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Reserve for Depreciation or Depletion.—If any reserves for depreciation or for depletion are included in the surplus account it should be analyzed so as to separate such reserves and leave only real surplus. Reserves for depreciation or depletion can not be included in the computation of invested capital, except to the following extent:

779 (1) Excessive depletion or depreciation included therein and which if charged off could be restored under article 840 [764] may be included in the computation of invested capital; and

780 (2) Where depreciation or depletion is computed on the value as of March 1, 1913, or as of any subsequent date, the proportion of depreciation or depletion representing the realization of appreciation of value at March 1, 1913, or such subsequent date, may if undistributed and used or employed in the business be treated as surplus and included in the computation of invested capital.

781 For the purpose of computing invested capital depreciation or depletion computed on the value as of March 1, 1913, or as of any subsequent date shall, if such value exceeded cost, be deemed a pro rata realization of cost and appreciation and be apportioned accordingly. Except as above provided value appreciation (even though evidenced by an appraisal) which has not been actually realized and in respect of amounts accrued since March 1, 1913, reported as income for the purpose of the income tax, can not be included in the computation of invested capital, and if already reflected in the surplus account it must be deducted therefrom. (Art. 844, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

782 Art. 845. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Reserve for Income and 558 Excess Profits Taxes.—For the purpose of computing invested capital federal income and war profits and excess profits taxes are deemed to have been paid out of the net income of the taxable year for which they are levied. It is immaterial, therefore, whether reserves for the payment of such taxes for the preceding year have been set up or not, or if set up whether such taxes when paid have actually been charged against such reserves. Amounts payable on account of such taxes for the preceding year may be included in the computation of invested capital only until such taxes become due and payable. A deduction from the invested capital as of the beginning of the taxable year must therefore be made for such taxes or any installment thereof, averaged for the proportionate part of the taxable year after date when the tax or the installment is due and payable. Where as a result of an audit by the Commissioner, or the acceptance of an amended return, or for any other reason, the amount of any such tax for the preceding year is subsequently changed, a corresponding adjustment will be made in the invested capital for the taxable year upon the same basis as if the corrected amount of the tax for the preceding year had been used in the original computation of the invested capital for the taxable year. (Art. 845, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

783 Art. 845 (a). Surplus and undivided profits: Reserve for 1918 income and excess profits taxes of corporations having a fiscal year.
 —In case of corporations having a fiscal year, the Federal income and profits taxes for the taxable year 1918 shall, for the purpose of computing invested capital for the taxable year 1919 be deemed to become due and payable as follows: (a) As to such amounts as became due and payable prior to February 25, 1919, under the provisions of Section 14 (a), Revenue Act of 1916, such law shall govern; (b) in all other respects the provisions of Section 250 of the Revenue Act of 1918 shall govern except that the installments which would become due prior to February 25, 1919, shall be deemed to become due and payable on that date; (c) Any amounts which became due and payable under said Section 14 (a) prior to February 25 shall, so far as possible, be deemed to cancel earlier installments payable under said section 250. For example, a corporation whose fiscal year ended August 31, 1918, is assessed a total income and profits tax under the 1917 law of $250,000 and an additional tax under the 1918 law of $110,000. The total tax of $360,000 would, for the purpose of computing invested capital, be deemed to become due and payable as follows: February 12, 1919,

$250,000; May 15, 1919, $20,000; August 15, 1919, $90,000. If, assuming the same taxes, the fiscal year ended September 30, 1918, the total tax would for the purpose of computing invested capital, be deemed to become due and payable as follows: February 25, 1919, $90,000; March 15, 1919, $90,000; June 15, 1919, $90,000; September 15, 1919, $90,000. The provisions of this article apply solely for the purpose of computing invested capital and do not affect the provisions of T. D. 2797 in regard to the time and manner of paying taxes where corporations have filed returns for fiscal years ending in 1918. (Art. 845 (a), Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

785 Installment due-and-payable dates govern in apportioning reserves for taxes for invested capital purposes.—“¶ In the preparation of 1919 corporation tax returns we would like to know if we will be permitted in the computation of invested capital under schedule “H,” Form 1120, to compute our taxes as having been paid in quarterly installments, or, will we be forced to deduct from invested capital the full amount of taxes paid on the date remitted to the collector?”

786 In reply you are advised that the date when the 1918 taxes were actually paid has no bearing on the computation of the invested capital of the corporation for the year 1919, inasmuch as the controlling factor is the date when such taxes were “due and payable,” and not the date when they were actually paid. In other words, the amount of each installment of the tax for 1918 will remain a part of the invested capital for 1919 until such installment is due and payable, and when such installment is due, an adjustment should be made in the nature of a deduction from invested capital under Schedule H (d), on page 5, of Form 1120-A. (Letter to Simon Bros., Ltd., Alexandria, La., signed by P. S. Talbert, Acting Assistant to the Commissioner, by C. R. Trobridge, Acting Head of Division, and dated September 22, 1919, made available through the courtesy of Cox and Flournoy, Alexandria, La.)

787 Art. 846. Surplus and undivided profits: Insurance on officers.—

558 Where insurance is carried by the corporation on the life of an officer or employee, the policy may be included as an admissible asset and reflected in the surplus account at the cash surrender value as of the beginning of the taxable year. The whole amount of premiums paid on such insurance can not be included in surplus, but the surplus will be considered as increased as of the beginning of each taxable year by the amount added to the cash surrender value of the policy. (Art. 846, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

788 Art. 847. Surplus and undivided profits: Property taken for debt

558 or in exchange.—Real or personal property taken by a corporation in payment or satisfaction of a debt, or property received in exchange for other property, will be an admissible asset at its fair market value upon receipt. The profit or loss, if any, resulting from the transaction will not be reflected in invested capital until the succeeding taxable year. But see as to the foreclosure of a mortgage article 153. See also section 202 of the statute and articles 1561-1570. (Art. 847, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

789 Blank.

790 Art. 848. Surplus and undivided profits: Discount on sale of bonds.

558 —Discount allowed on the sale of bonds is in effect an advance on account of interest, so that the effective rate of interest in such a case is equal to the sum of the nominal rate plus the rate necessary to amortize the discount over the life of the bonds. Where, under incorrect accounting practices, the discount on bonds has been charged to a property account or otherwise carried as an asset, and is so reflected in the surplus account, it is necessary in computing invested capital to make an adjustment in respect of such discount. See article 563. (Art. 848, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

791 Art. 849. Surplus and undivided profits: Miscellaneous.—Only

558 the amount of discount which has actually been reported by a bank in a prior year as taxable income and credited to surplus account may be included in surplus as of the beginning of the taxable year. For the treatment of surplus arising out of sales on the installment plan see articles 42-46, and from compensation for property lost, damaged, or condemned, see articles 49 and 50. (Art. 849, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

792 to 802 Blank.

803 Art. 850. Surplus and Undivided Profits: Current Profits.—Profits

558 earned during any year can not be included in the computation of invested capital for that year, even though during the year such profits are set up as surplus on the books or assumed to be distributed in the form of stock dividends. If a dividend is declared and paid during any year out of the profits of that year and the stockholders pay back into the corporation all or a substantial part of the amount of such dividends, the amount so paid back can not be included in the computation of invested capital unless the corporation shows by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner that the dividends were paid in good faith and without any understanding, express or implied, that they were to be paid back. (Art. 850, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

804 Art. 851. Intangible Property Paid In.—The actual cash value of

559 intangible property paid in for stock or shares must be determined
560 in the light of the facts in each case. Among the factors to be considered are (a) the earnings attributable to such intangible assets while in the hands of the predecessor owner; (b) the earnings of the corporation attributable to the intangible assets after the date of their acquisition; (c) representative sales of the stock of the corporation at or about the date of the acquisition of the intangible assets; and (d) any cash offers for the purchase of the business, including the intangible property, at or about the time of its acquisition. A corporation claiming a value for intangible property paid in for stock or shares should file with its return a full statement of the facts relating to such valuation. See also article 835 [for mixture of tangible and intangible property paid in, ¶756]. (Art. 851, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

562 ascertaining the deductible percentage the amount of inadmissible assets held during the year may ordinarily be determined by dividing by two the sum of the amount of such assets held at the beginning of the year and the amount held at the end of the year. The total amount of admissible and in admissible assets held during the year may ordinarily be determined by dividing by two the sum of the amount of such assets held at the beginning of the year and the amount at the end of the year. If at any time a substantial change has taken place either in the amount of inadmissible assets or in the total amount of admissible and inadmissible assets, the effect of such change shall be averaged exactly from the date on which it occurred. In any case where the Commissioner finds that either amount determined as above provided does not substantially reflect the average situation throughout the year, and that the amount of each kind of assets held on a given day of each month throughout the year or at more frequent regular intervals can be determined, the amount of inadmissible assets and the amount of both kinds of assets held during the year shall be determined by averaging the amounts held at such several times. In making the computations under this article the valuation at which each asset is carried shall be adjusted in accordance with the provisions of the statute and of the regulations relating to the valuation of assets for the purpose of computing invested capital, including in such adjustment the amount of reserves for depreciation, depletion, amortization and other reserves which represent the valuation of assets. It is immaterial whether any asset was acquired out of invested capital or out of profits earned during the year or borrowed capital. (Art. 852, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

806    Art. 853. Changes in Invested Capital During Year.—The invested capital as of the beginning of any period of one year or less should be adjusted by an appropriate addition or deduction for each change in invested capital during the period. The amount so added or deducted in each case is the amount of the change averaged for the time remaining in the period during which it is in effect. The fraction used in finding such average is the number of days remaining in the period (including the day on which the change occurs) over the number of days in the period. Thus if a return is made for the calendar year ending December 31, 1918, and if $100,000 of additional capital was paid in on February 17, 1918, this addition to invested capital is in effect for 318 days, and the amount to be added to the invested capital as of the beginning of the year would be  $318/365$  of $100,000, or $87,123.29. If $50,000 of this amount was withdrawn on October 31, 1918, the amount to be deducted would be  $62/365$  of $50,000, or $8,493.15. (Art. 853, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

807    Art. 854. Computation of Average Invested Capital.—For the purpose of computing invested capital for any period of one year or less each corporation shall add together its paid-in capital and its paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits (under whatever name it may be called) as shown by its books at the beginning of the period. The total so obtained shall be adjusted (a) for any property paid in, or for any asset reflected in surplus and undivided profits, which is not carried on the books at the valuation prescribed by the statute or by the regulations, and (b) for any changes in paid-in capital or in paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits (not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the period) occurring during the period, averaged for the time for which such changes are effective. See article 853 [for changes in invested capital during year, ¶806]. The total so obtained and adjusted is the average invested capital for the period, unless the corporation at any time during the period held any inadmissible assets, in which case such total must be reduced by a percentage thereof equal to the percentage which the amount of inadmissible assets held during the period is of the total amount of admissible and inadmissible assets held during the period. See article 852 [¶805]. The invested capital for any year during the prewar period is determined in the same manner as for the taxable year. The invested capital can not be determined by adding the amounts of the assets of a corporation. (Art. 854, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

808 Art. 855. Invested Capital for Full Year or Less.—In the case of a corporation making a return for a full year of 12 months, its invested capital for the year is the average invested capital for the year. In the case of a corporation making a return for a fractional part of a year, its invested capital for such period is the same fractional part of the average invested capital for such period, except that for the purpose of section 311 (a) (2) [computation of war-profits credit, ¶532] of the statute it is the full average invested capital for the period. In computing the tax under a return for a fractional part of a period the same purpose may sometimes be more readily effected by using the full average invested capital and taking a fractional part of the result, as in schedule III of form 1120, used for 1918. In schedule IV of the same form, however, the fractional part of the full average invested capital for the period should be used. See articles 720 [for illustration of computation, ¶634] and 853 [for changes in invested capital during year, ¶806]. (Art. 855, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

809 Art. 856. Illustration of Invested Capital for Fractional Part of Year.—A corporation was organized July 1, 1918, and makes a return for the six months ending December 31, 1918. The invested capital consists of $100,000 paid in on July 1 and $100,000 paid in on October 1. The average invested capital for such period would be $100,000 plus  $92/184$  (not  $92/365$ ) of $100,000, or $50,000, a total of $150,000. The invested capital for the period for the purpose of the tax would, however, be  $6/12$  of $150,000, or $75,000. But see section 311 (a) (2) of the statute [for computation of war-profits credit, ¶532]. (Art. 856, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

810 Art. 857. Method of Determining Available Net Income.—
558 Whether at the time of any payment made during the taxable year there is sufficient income of the taxable year available for such payment, or whether the surplus or undivided profits as of the beginning of the taxable year must be reduced by the amount of such payment shall be determined according to the following principles:

811 (1) The aggregate amount of earnings of the taxable year available for all purposes up to any given date will be determined upon the basis of the same proportion of the net income for the taxable year (as finally determined for the purpose of income and war profits and excess profits taxes) as the part of the year already elapsed is of the entire year (determined in the manner provided in article 853 [¶806]), unless the corporation shows from its books or other records that a greater proportion of its earnings for the year was available on such date.

812 (2) The aggregate amount available will be deemed to be applied for the following purposes in the order in which they are stated:
(a) accrued federal income and war profits and excess profits taxes for the taxable year (see article 845 [¶782]), and (b) dividends paid after the expiration of the first sixty days of the taxable year (see section 201 of the statute [law ¶505] and article 1541 [Income Tax Service]) and other corporate purposes, including the purchase of outstanding stock of the corporation previously issued (see article 862 [¶817]). In any case where the above computation would be indeterminate because of the effect of the provisions of this article upon the invested capital for the year, the amount of such invested capital for the purpose of this computation may be deemed to be the invested capital as of the beginning of the taxable year, plus any additional capital paid in during such year and minus any specific withdrawal or liquidation of capital during such year. (Art. 857, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

558 stock dividend affects the computation of invested capital from the date when the dividend is payable and not from the date when it is declared, except that where no date is set for its payment the date when declared will be considered also the date when payable for the purpose of this article. For the purpose of computing invested capital a dividend paid after the expiration of the first sixty days of the taxable year will be deemed to be paid out of the net income of the taxable year to the extent of the net income available for such purpose on the date when it is payable. See article 857, [¶810]. The surplus and undivided profits as of the beginning of the taxable year will be reduced as of the date when the dividend is payable by the entire amount of any dividend paid during the first sixty days of the taxable year and by the amount of any other dividend in excess of the current net income available for its payment. In the case of a dividend paid during the first sixty days of a taxable year which exceeds in amount the surplus and undivided profits as of the beginning of the taxable year the excess will be deemed to be paid out of earnings of the taxable year available at the date when the dividend is payable, and to the extent that such earnings are insufficient it will be deemed to be a liquidation of paid-in capital or surplus. From the date when any dividend is payable the amount which the several stockholders are entitled to receive will be treated as if actually paid to them, whether or not it is so paid in fact, and the surplus and undivided profits, either of the taxable year or of the preceding years, will in accordance with the foregoing provisions be deemed to be reduced as of that date by the full amount of the dividend. Amounts paid to stockholders in anticipation of dividends, or amounts withdrawn by stockholders in excess of dividends declared, will in computing invested capital have the same effect as if actually paid as dividends. See also article 813 [for amounts left in business by stockholders, ¶740], and see generally section 201 [for dividends, ¶505] and articles 1541-1549 [for taxable status of dividends generally]. (Art. 858, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

814 Art. 859. Effect of Stock Dividend.—Neither the payment nor the receipt of a true stock dividend has any effect upon the amount of invested capital. Such items as appraised value of good will, appreciation in value of real estate or other tangible property, etc., although carried to surplus and distributed as stock dividends, can not in this manner be capitalized and included in computing invested capital. If a corporation has paid a stock dividend in excess of its true surplus, it can not be deemed to have any greater invested capital than could have been computed had

815 Art. 860. Impairment of Capital.—Capital or surplus actually paid 556 in is not required to be reduced because of an impairment of capital in the nature of an operating deficit, except where there has been directly or indirectly a liquidation or return of their investment to the stockholders, in which case full effect must be given to any liquidation of the original capital. (Art. 860, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

816 Art. 861. Surrender of Stock.—Where stock which has originally 556 been issued or exchanged by the corporation for property (tangible or intangible) is returned to the corporation as a gift or for a consideration substantially less than its par value, the stock so returned shall not be treated as a part of the stock issued or exchanged for such property. The proceeds derived in cash or its equivalent from the resale of the stock so returned shall, however, be included in computing invested capital. See article 542. (Art. 861, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

817 Art. 862. Purchase of Stock.—Where a corporation either di-556 rectly or indirectly, as for example through a trustee, has prior to the taxable year bought its own stock, either for the purpose of retirement or of holding it in the treasury or for other purposes, the entire cost of such stock must be deducted from the aggregate invested capital as of the beginning of the taxable year, if such deduction has not already been made. Where such stock is purchased during the taxable year a deduction from the invested capital as of the beginning of the taxable year and effective from the date of such purchase is required only to the extent that such stock has not been purchased out of the undivided profits of the taxable year. See article 857 [for method of determining available net income, ¶810]. The full amount derived in cash or its equivalent from the resale of such stock may be included in the invested capital from the date of such resale, unless such stock had been purchased out of earnings of the taxable year. See article 542. (Art. 862, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

818 and 819 Blank.

820 Art. 863. Invested Capital and other Measures of Capital.—(a) The invested capital as here defined may differ from the capital as shown on the books of the corporation. In such event no changes should be made in the books themselves. The corporation should, however, in all cases keep a permanent record of the adjustments which are made in computing invested capital. (b) Section 1000 of the statute imposes a tax on the fair value of the capital stock of corporations [Capital Stock Tax, ¶3000 herein]. As in the case of the war profits and excess profits tax the invested capital is based upon the actual investment of the stockholders in the corporation, irrespective of the present value of its assets, and in the case of the capital stock tax the fair value looks to the present value of the corporation's assets, irrespective of the amount of the investment of the stockholders therein, the amount determined as the fair value of the capital stock for the purpose of the capital stock tax can have no bearing upon the determination of invested capital. See also article 1561 [or articles 831, ¶751, for statement that "the fair market value of the assets as of March 1, 1913, has no bearing on invested capital"]. (Art 863, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

821 Art. 864. Affiliated corporations: Invested capital.—The invested 587 capital of affiliated corporations, as defined in section 240 (b) of the statute [law ¶589] and article 633 for the taxable year is the invested capital of the entire group treated as one unit operated under a common control. As a first step in the computation a consolidated balance sheet should be prepared in accordance with standard accounting practices, which will reflect the actual assets and liabilities of the affiliated group. In preparing such a balance sheet all intercompany items, such as intercompany notes and accounts receivable and payable, should be eliminated from the assets and the liabilities, respectively, and proper adjustments should be made in respect of intercompany profits or losses reflected in inventories which at the beginning or end of the taxable year contain merchandise exchanged between the corporations included in the affiliated group at prices above or below cost to the producing or original owner corporation. Such consolidated balance sheet will then show (a) the capital stock of the parent or principal company in the hands of the public; (b) the consolidated surplus belonging to the stockholders of the parent or principal company; and (c) the capital stock, if any, of subsidiary companies of which substantially all the capital stock is not owned or controlled by the parent or principal company, together with the surplus, if any, belonging to such minority interest. In computing consolidated invested capital the starting point is furnished by the total of the amounts shown under (a), (b), and (c) above. This total must be increased or diminished by any adjustments required to be made under the provisions of sections 325, 326, 330, and 331 of the statute and articles 811-818, 831-869, 931-934, and 941 of the regulations, except as otherwise provided in articles 865-868. (Art. 864, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

822 Blank.

823 Art. 865. Affiliated Corporations: Intangible Property Paid In.—

587 (1) In respect of corporations whose affiliation is in the nature of parent and subsidiary companies: (a) in the case of intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares prior to March 3, 1917, there may be included in invested capital an amount not exceeding the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, or the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or in the aggregate 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the consolidation outstanding on March 3, 1917 (determined as indicated in items (a) and (c) in article 864 [¶821]), or in the aggregate 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares shown on the consolidated balance sheet, being the amount of the capital stock included in items (a) and (c) in article 864 [¶821] at the beginning of the taxable year, whichever is lowest; and (b) in the case of intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917, there may be included in invested capital an amount not exceeding the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, or the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or in the aggregate 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares shown by the consolidated balance sheet, being the amount of the capital stock included in items (a) and (c) in article 864 [¶821] outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year, whichever is lowest. (c) When intangible property has been acquired in part before and in part after March 3, 1917, the amounts shall be ascertained, respectively, under (a) and (b) above and in the aggregate shall in no case exceed 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year shown in the consolidated balance sheet, being the amount of the capital stock included in items (a) and (c) in article 864 [¶821].

824 (2) In respect of corporations affiliated by reason of stock ownership
587 or control by the same interests, the limitations set forth in paragraphs (4) [¶559] and (5) [¶560] of subdivision (a) of section 326 of the statute shall be applied to each corporation separately and the aggregate of the intangible property, so valued, shall be included in invested capital in the consolidated return. In respect of each of the affiliated corporations the aggregate of the amounts ascertained under the provisions of paragraphs (4) [¶559] and (5) [¶560] shall in no case exceed 25 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of such corporation at the beginning of the taxable year. (Art. 865, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

825 Art. 866. Affiliated Corporations: Inadmissible Assets.—Where 587 adjustment is required in respect of inadmissible assets in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (c) [¶562] of section 326 of the statute, such adjustment shall be made on the basis of the consolidated balance sheet with due regard to the adjustments and eliminations set forth in articles 864 [¶821] and 865 [¶823] and to the provisions of articles 815-818 [beginning at ¶743]. (Art. 866, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

826 Art. 867. Affiliated Corporations: Stock of Subsidiary Acquired
587 for Cash.—When all or substantially all of the stock of a subsidiary corporation was acquired for cash, the cash so paid shall be the basis to be used in determining the value of the property acquired. (Art. 867, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

827 Art. 868. Affiliated Corporations: Stock of Subsidiary Acquired for 587 Stock.—Where stock of a subsidiary company was acquired with the stock of the parent company, the amount to be included in the consolidated invested capital in respect of the company acquired shall be computed in the same manner as if the net tangible assets and the intangible assets had been acquired instead of the stock. If in accordance with such acquisition a paid-in surplus is claimed, such claim shall be subject to the provisions of article 837 [¶760]. (Art. 868, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

828 Art. 869. Affiliated Corporations: Invested Capital for Prewar
587 Period.—The invested capital of affiliated corporations for the prewar period shall be computed on the same basis as the invested capital for the taxable year, except that where any one or more of the corporations included in the consolidation for the taxable year were in existence during the prewar period, but were not then affiliated as herein defined, then the average consolidated invested capital for the prewar period shall be the average invested capital of the corporations which were affiliated in the prewar period plus the aggregate of the average invested capital for each of the several corporations which were not affiliated during the prewar period. Full recognition, however, must be given to the provisions of section 330 of the statute [¶575], particularly the last paragraph thereof [¶578], and of articles 931-934 [beginning at ¶837: all having to do with reorganizations]. (Art. 869, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

829 Art. 870. Insurance Companies.—The reserve funds of life insurance
551 companies, the net additions to which are deductible from gross income under the provisions of Section 234 of the statute, can not be 561 included in computing invested capital. The like reserve funds of insurance companies, other than life insurance companies, may be included in computing invested capital. See Sections 325 and 326 (a) (3) and (b) and Articles 569 and 814 [¶742]. (Art. 870, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921, as amended by T. D. 3153, April 9, 1921.)

830 Art. 871. Foreign Corporations.—Inasmuch as the war profits and 565 excess profits tax in the case of a foreign corporation is not based on 567 the invested capital of the corporation, but is computed in accordance with section 328 of the statute [See ¶832], the provisions of section 326 [law ¶555] and of articles 831-870 [having to do with invested capital, beginning at ¶751] have no application to foreign corporations. For the same reason, when rendering a return of income on form 1120 for a foreign corporation, no entry of invested capital should be made thereon. See article 962 [for returns by foreign corporations, ¶852]. (Art. 871, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

SPECIAL CASES. §327

831 Art. 901. Treatment of special cases.—In the cases specified in 565 section 327 [¶565] of the statute the tax will be specially determined under the provisions of section 328 [¶570], but the tax will not ordinarily be computed under section 328 merely because the corporation's form or manner of organization, or the limitations imposed by section 326 [invested capital, ¶555], result in a greater tax than would otherwise be payable. A corporation which comes within the provisions of subdivision (d) [¶569 of section 327 may make application for assessment under the provisions of section 328, which application shall be attached to its return in the form of a statement setting forth in full: (a) the reasons why the tax should be so determined; (b) the facts upon which such reasons are based; (c) an exact description of each trade or business or important branch of a trade or business carried on by it; (d) a statement of the invested capital and net income for each year since the beginning of the prewar period; and (e) a statement showing the amount of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived on a cost-plus basis from Government contracts made after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, and showing the per cent which such income is of the total income of the corporation. See section 1 and article 1510 [for definition of Government contract, law ¶503] and section 326 [¶555] and articles 831-871 [beginning at ¶751, all having to do with invested capital]. (Art. 901, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

COMPUTATION OF TAX IN SPECIAL CASES. §328

832 Art. 911. Computation of tax in special cases.—In the cases specified 570 in section 327 [¶565] of the statute the tax is to be computed by comparison with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326 and which are engaged in a like or similar trade or business and similarly circumstanced. The provisions of section 328 [¶570] do not permit the determination of a general average for any trade or business. In each case which comes under the provisions of section 327 the Commissioner will determine, as nearly as may be, the group or class of corporations with which the corporation should be compared and the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the corporation (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year as the average tax of such representative corporations bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. The comparison will take account of similarity with respect to gross income, net income, profit per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances. (Art. 911, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

573 —In the case of any corporation, other than a foreign corporation, where absolutely no data are available for the determination of invested capital for the taxable year, the installments of the tax shall in the first instance be determined upon the basis of a war profits and excess profits tax equal to 50% of the net income, except that for 1919 and subsequent taxable years, in the case of any corporation other than a foreign corporation, such installments shall be determined upon the basis of an excess profits tax equal to 20% of the net income in excess of $3,000.00, but not in excess of $20,000.00, plus 40% of the net income in excess of $20,000.00. In any other case under Section 328 of the statute other than the case of a foreign corporation, but including a case where the invested capital for the taxable year cannot be accurately determined, but where a minimum amount of invested capital, as to which there is no question, can be determined, the installments shall in the first instance be determined upon the basis of a war profits and excess profits tax computed by using the minimum invested capital, the tax in any such case not to exceed an amount equal to 50% of the net income, and for 1919 and subsequent taxable years not to exceed 20% of the net income in excess of $3,000.00, but not in excess of $20,000.00, plus 40% of the net income in excess of $20,000.00. [See ¶861.] (Art. 912, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921, as amended by T. D. 3235, Oct. 6, 1921.)

834 Art. 913. Determination of first installment of tax in the case of foreign corporation.

—In the case of a foreign corporation the installments of the tax shall in the first instance be determined upon the basis of a war profits and excess profits tax computed by using its invested capital for the taxable year 1917, such tax for any taxable year not to exceed an amount equal to 50% of the net income, and for 1919 and subsequent taxable years not to exceed 20% of the net income not in excess of $20,000.00, plus 40% of the net income in excess of $20,000.00. For the purpose of this Article the invested capital for 1917 shall be adjusted for any subsequent changes in its amount due to cash or property paid in or withdrawn or to surplus or undivided profits of prior years retained in the business and properly attributable to its business within the United States. If the tax for 1917 was determined under Section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, the constructive capital which would result in a tax equivalent to the tax determined under that section shall be used. In the case of a foreign corporation which was organized subsequent to the taxable year 1917, or which had no income from sources within the United States during 1917, the installments of the tax shall in the first instance be determined upon the basis of a war profits and excess profits tax equal to 50% of the net income, except that for 1919 and subsequent taxable years such installments shall be determined upon the basis of an excess profits tax equal to 20% of the net income not in excess of $20,000.00, plus 40% of the net income in excess of $20,000.00. (Art. 913, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921, as amended by T. D. 3235, Oct. 6, 1921.)

835 Art. 914. Payment of tax in special cases.—In any case falling 573 under the last two articles the installments shall be paid upon the basis therein provided until the Commissioner notifies the corporation of the amount of tax computed under section 328. The installments shall then be recomputed upon the basis of a war profits and excess profits tax of such amount, and if the amount already paid is less than the amount which would have already become due if the installments had originally been computed upon that basis, the additional amount shall be due and payable ten days after notice and demand from the collector. (Art. 914, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

836 Blank. not add to amount.

REORGANIZATIONS. §330

837 Art. 931. Scope of Reorganizations.—The first two paragraphs of 575 section 330 [§575 and §576] of the statute relate only to the prewar period and not to the invested capital or net income for the taxable year. Under their provisions in the case of a reorganization, consolidation or change of ownership, the corporation is regarded as having been in existence prior to the date of such reorganization, consolidation or change in ownership, and the net income and invested capital of the predecessor trade or business for all or any part of the prewar period prior to the organization of the present corporation are deemed to have been the net income and invested capital of such corporation. (Art. 931, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

838 Art. 932. Net Income and Invested Capital of Predecessor Part-576 nership or Individual.—If the predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual, the corporation shall make its return of the net income and invested capital of such trade or business as nearly as may be in the same manner as if such trade or business had been carried on by a corporation. It shall submit with its return a statement setting forth (a) the manner in which such trade or business was carried on and (b) the points, if any, in which the provisions of the statute and of the regulations are not fully applicable to the determination of the net income or invested capital of the predecessor trade or business for the prewar period. In no case shall the deduction from gross income for salary or compensation for personal services exceed the salaries or compensation customarily paid at that time by corporations or partnerships of similar size and standing engaged in similar trades or businesses for similar services under like responsibilities. (Art. 932, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

839 Art. 933. Election to be Taxed as Corporation.—A business enter-577 prise (a) which is organized as a corporation before July 1, 1919, (b) in which capital is and has been a material income-producing factor, and (c) which was previously owned by a partnership or individual, may elect to be taxed as a corporation on its net income from January 1, 1918, to the date of organization of the corporation. In such event the corporation shall be treated as if in existence since January 1, 1918, for the purposes of the income tax, the war profits and excess profits tax, and the capital stock tax. The adoption of any other date than January 1, 1918, for such purpose is not permissible. But this option is not extended to a business enterprise with a net income for the taxable year 1918 less than 20 per cent of its invested capital. (Art. 933, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

840 Art. 934. Adjustment for Asset Differently Valued in Prewar In-578 vested Capital.—In any case in which as a result of a reorganization or for any other reason any asset in existence both during the taxable year and any prewar year is included in computing the invested capital for the taxable year, but is not included in computing the invested capital for such prewar year, or is valued on a different basis in computing the invested capital for the two years, the difference resulting therefrom shall not be included in determining the difference 10 per cent of which is added to or deducted from the war profits credit under section 311 (a) (2) of the statute [¶532]. In any such case the corporation shall make the readjustment required by the statute, and shall submit with its return a full statement of the difference in such valuations and of the facts which give rise to such difference. See also section 331 [law ¶579] and article 941 [regulations ¶841, for reorganizations after March 3, 1917.] (Art. 934, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

VALUATION OF ASSETS UPON REORGANIZATION. §331

841 Art. 941. Valuation of Asset upon Change of Ownership.—Where 579 a business is reorganized, consolidated or transferred, or property is transferred, after March 3, 1917, and an interest or control of fifty per cent or greater in such business or property remains in the same persons or any of them, then for the purpose of determining invested capital each asset so transferred is valued (a) at an amount representing its actual cash value, subject to the limitations imposed by section 326, but not exceeding its allowable value, for invested capital purposes, in the possession of the previous owner, if a corporation, or, if not a corporation, (b) at its cost to such previous owner, with proper adjustments for losses and improvements.
 This provision is accordingly concerned with the computation of invested capital for the taxable year, while section 330 of the statute is chiefly concerned with the determination of invested capital for the prewar period.
 See articles 931 [for reorganizations after January 1, 1911, ¶837], 932 [for net income and invested capital of predecessor partnership or individual, ¶838] and 1561-1570 [for basis for determining gain or loss in connection with the sale, exchange or other disposition of property]. (Art. 941, Reg. 45, Rev., as amended by T. D. 3259, Dec. 7, 1921.)

FISCAL YEARS ENDING IN 1918 OR 1919. §335

842 Art. 951. Fiscal year with different rates.—Section 335 [¶580] of 580 the statute applies to the war profits and excess profits tax. For 583 provisions with respect to the income tax see section 205 of the statute and articles 1621-1625. Subdivision (a), which deals with fiscal years beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, and subdivision (b) which deals with fiscal years beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, apply to corporations other than personal service corporations. Subdivision (c), which deals with fiscal years beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, applies to partnerships and to personal service corporations. See as to partnerships articles 321-327 and as to personal service corporations articles 328-335. See also section 252 of the statute and articles 1034-1036. Partnerships and personal service corporations having fiscal years beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919 are not subject to the war profits and excess profits tax. (Art. 951, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

843     Art. 952. Fiscal Year of Corporation Ending in 1918.—The method
580     provided for computing the tax for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918 is as follows: (a) the tax attributable to the calendar year 1917 is found by computing the income of the taxpayer and the tax thereon in accordance with Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 as if the fiscal year was the calendar year 1917, and determining the proportion of such tax which the number of months falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the number of months in the entire period; (b) the tax attributable to the calendar year 1918 is found by computing the income of the taxpayer and the tax thereon in accordance with the present statute as if the fiscal year was the calendar year 1918, and determining the proportion of such tax which the number of months falling within the calendar year is of the number of months in the entire period; and (c) the tax for the fiscal year is found by adding the tax attributable to the calendar year 1917 and the tax attributable to the calendar year 1918. (Art. 952, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

844     Art. 953. Deductions and Credits in the Case of Fiscal Year Ending
581     in 1918.—Net losses deductible from net income of the fiscal year under the provisions of section 204 of the statute shall be deductible in computing the tax attributable to the calendar year 1917 as well as in computing the tax attributable to the calendar year 1918. See articles 1601-1603. Amounts previously paid by the taxpayer on account of the excess profits tax for its fiscal year ending in 1918 shall be credited towards the payment of the war profits and excess profits tax imposed for such fiscal year by the present statute. Any excess shall be credited or refunded in accordance with the provisions of section 252 of the statute. For credits for foreign taxes see section 238 of the statute and article 611. (Art. 953, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

845     Art. 954. Fiscal Year of Corporation Ending in 1919.—The method
582     provided for computing the tax for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919 is as follows: (a) the tax attributable to the calendar year 1918 is found by computing the income of the taxpayer and the tax thereon in accordance with the statute as if the fiscal year was the calendar year 1918, and determining the proportion of such tax which the number of months falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the number of months in the entire period; (b) the tax attributable to the calendar year 1919 is found by computing the income of the taxpayer and the tax thereon in accordance with the statute as if the fiscal year was the calendar year 1919, and determining the proportion of such tax which the number of months falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the number of months in the entire period; and (c) the tax for the fiscal year is found by adding the tax attributable to the calendar year 1918 and the tax attributable to the calendar year 1919. For credits for foreign taxes see section 238 of the statute and article 611. (Art. 954, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

846 Art. 955. Illustration of Computation of Tax for Fiscal Year.—A corporation makes its return on the basis of a fiscal year ending March 31. It had an average prewar invested capital of $50,000 and an average prewar net income of $3,500. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1918, its invested capital and net income are $100,000 and $75,000, respectively, as computed under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, and $125,000 and $70,000, respectively, as computed under the present statute. Such a difference in these amounts as computed under the two acts may readily occur where, for example, a corporation is allowed under the present statute a deduction for interest, amortization, etc., which it was not allowed under the Revenue Act of 1917, or where, under the present statute, it is allowed a greater amount of invested capital on account of intangible property paid in for stock or shares than allowed under the Revenue Act of 1917. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1919, its invested capital and net income are $125,000 and $60,000, respectively.

847 (1) A war excess profits tax for the year ending March 31, 1918, as computed under the provisions of Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, and upon the basis of an invested capital of $100,000 and a net income of $75,000 as computed under that Act, is $32,800. For the details of this computation see illustration (1) under article 16 of Regulations 41. A war profits and excess profits tax for the entire period as computed under subdivision (a) of section 301 of the present statute, and upon the basis of an invested capital of $125,000 and a net income of $70,000 as computed under the statute, is $43,600. Section 335 provides that the tax for this period is the sum of 9/12 of the tax of $32,800 as computed under the Revenue Act of 1917, or $24,600, plus 3/12 of the tax of $43,600 as computed under the present statute, or $10,900, making a total war excess profits tax for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1918, of $35,500.

848 (2) A war profits and excess profits tax for the year ending March 31, 1919, as computed under subdivision (a) of section 301 of the statute is $35,600. A war profits and excess profits tax for the entire period as computed under subdivision (b) of section 301 is $16,400. Section 335 provides that the tax for this period is the sum of 9/12 of the tax of $35,600, as computed under subdivision (a) of section 301, or $26,700, plus 3/12 of the tax of $16,400, as computed under subdivision (b) of section 301, or $4,100, making a total war profits and excess profits tax for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1919, of $30,800. (Art. 955, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

RETURNS.

849 Art. 961. Returns.—Every corporation, domestic or foreign, not 585 exempt under section 304 [¶525] of the statute and article 751 [¶666] shall make a return for the purpose of the war profits and excess profits tax on form 1120. The return shall be made and the tax shall be paid as provided in the case of a return for and payment of the income tax by corporations. See generally Parts IIA and III of the regulations, and particularly sections 239, 240, 241, 250 and 253 of the statute and the articles thereunder. (Art. 961; Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

850 Blank.

WAR TAX 371 SERVICE

"Where computation shows that a corporation has no taxable net income must it go to expense of preparing and filling out the schedules relating to excess profits war profits on Form 1120? Is answer any different if the return is a consolidated return? Kindly wire reply."

In reply you are advised that corporations which have no taxable income for the year are required to fill out only Schedules A and B [A, K, and L, for 1920] and the Schedules in support thereof, on their (separate or consolidated) corporate income tax returns (Form 1120), and are not required to furnish the other information called for on these returns. (Letter to Van Vorst, Marshall and Smith, New York, N. Y., signed by J. H. Callan, Assistant to the Commissioner, and dated March 24, 1919.)

852 Art. 962. Returns in special cases.—Where a corporation computes its war profits credit upon the basis of the sum of (a) the specific exemption and (b) an amount equal to 10 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year, the items on form 1120 which relate solely to the net income or to the invested capital for the prewar period need not be filled in. Where a corporation enters on its return a war profits and excess profits tax equal to the amount of the maximum tax determined under section 302 [¶523] of the statute, the items on form 1120 which relate solely to the net income for the prewar period and the items which relate to the invested capital for the prewar period and for the taxable year need not be filled in. Likewise in the case of a foreign corporation the same items may be disregarded, except that balance sheets as of the beginning and the end of the taxable year for the entire business of the corporation both within and without the United States shall be submitted. See article 871 [for foreign corporations, ¶830]. The Commissioner may at any time specifically call for all or any part of the information which under this article is not required to be entered on the return. In any case, however, where a claim is made under sections 327 [¶565] and 328 [¶570] of the statute, other than in the case of a foreign corporation, the corporation should fill out all items of the return so far as possible and submit a statement explaining why it is impracticable to fill out the entire return. (Art. 962, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

SALE OF MINERAL DEPOSITS.

853 Art. 971. Tax on Sale of Mineral Deposits.—In the case of a sale
586 of mines, oil or gas wells, or any interest therein, as described in article 13 [thirteen], the portion of the war profits and excess profits tax attributable to such a sale shall not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price. To determine the application of this provision to a particular case the corporation should compute the war profits and excess profits tax in the ordinary way upon its net income, including its net income from any such sale. The proportion of the total tax indicated by the ratio which the taxpayer's net income from the sale of the property, computed as prescribed in article 715, bears to its total net income is the portion of the tax attributable to such sale, and if it exceeds 20 per cent of the selling price of the property such portion of the tax shall be reduced to that amount. See articles 219, 220, 220(a), and 221. (Art. 971, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

854 to 857 Blank.

858 Art. 972. Illustration of Computation of Tax Where Sale of Mineral Deposits.—In the case of the corporation used as an illustration in article 716, let it be assumed that its gross income for 1918 included $15,000 derived from a bona fide sale of an oil well, the principal value of which had been demonstrated by exploration and discovery work done by the corporation, and that the Commissioner finds under article 715 that only $800 of the deductions allowed are properly applicable to the gross income derived from the sale. The portion of the net income attributable to the sale would be $14,200, which is 35.5 per cent of the entire net income of $40,000, and the portion of the tax for that year attributable to the sale will be 35.5 per cent of the entire tax of $17,600, or $6,248. But this portion of the tax can not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price ($15,000) and is accordingly reduced to $3,000. The total tax will be $11,352 (the portion of the tax not affected) plus $3,000, or $14,352 (instead of $17,600). (Art. 972, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

859 Promulgation of Regulations No. 45, Revised.—In pursuance of the statute [see ¶860] the foregoing regulations are hereby made and promulgated and all rulings inconsistent herewith are hereby revoked. Art. 1800, Reg. 45, Rev., Jan. 28, 1921.)

860 Sec. 1309 [of the Revenue Act of 1918]. That the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.

861 Estimate of amount of excess payment on account of any expected
833 but undetermined relief under Section 328 for prior year not to be credited against first installment of tax for succeeding year which tax is to be computed in first instance without regard to former claim.—Reference is made to your letter of March 8, 1921, relative to corporation returns to be filed for 1920 under the provisions of Sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

862 You state that it is your understanding that in filing returns for 1920 under the above-mentioned sections, claim for credit may be applied against the amount of the first installment of tax due thereon to the extent that it is estimated the amount of tax paid was in excess of the amount due as computed under the provisions of Section 328. You inquire as to a justifiable percentage of tax on income for 1919 to be used as the basis for a claim for credit against the first installment of the tax for 1920.

863 In reply your attention is invited to Section 328(a) which provides in part that "In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year, as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year." The special relief afforded by Sections 327 and 328 is based upon the merits of the individual case, and the provisions of Section 328 to not permit the determination of a general average for any trade or business.

864 Claim for credit may not under any circumstances be applied against taxes due until the Bureau has definitely determined that the amount of the claim is actually in excess of the amount of taxes due on the previous return. Until complete audit comparatives are available for use in computing under Section 328 the taxes due on 1919 returns, the exact amount of tax due thereon can not be determined, and, consequently, claims for credit in the amounts believed to be in excess of tax due for the previous year may not be applied against the amount of the first installment of the 1920 taxes. (Letter to The Corporation Trust Company, signed by Commissioner Wm. M. Williams, and dated March 23, 1921.)

865 Use of appreciated or inflated values in determining invested capital 555 shown in income and excess profits tax returns for 1917 and subse-751 quent years.—An examination of income and excess profits tax returns for 1917 and subsequent years has disclosed that many taxpayers have used appreciated and inflated values in determining invested capital shown in such returns contrary to Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and Section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

866 This office has held consistently that the use of appreciated or inflated values in determining invested capital is not permissible and this ruling has been sustained by the United States Supreme Court in the case of the La Belle Iron Works v. The United States (41 Sup. Ct. 528; T. D. 3051 [¶889 herein]).

867 All taxpayers who, in the preparation of their income and excess profits tax returns for 1917 and subsequent years, have used appreciated or inflated values in determining the amount of their invested capital are required to file with the Collector of Internal Revenue within 90 days from date of this decision amended returns* for each of such years, in which the invested capital shall be computed strictly in accordance with the law and regulations and without the use of appreciated or inflated values. It is not required that such amended returns shall include the figures shown in the original returns which are unaffected by this decision. Only such figures as are necessary to show the correct values used in the computation of invested capital and such totals as are necessary to a redetermination of the tax need be shown. Payment of the additional tax shown to be due on such amended returns must also be made at the time the returns are filed.

868 Failure to file amended returns within the time specified will subject taxpayers to the penalties provided for in Section 3176 [¶8071], United States Revised Statutes, as amended. (T. D. 3220, signed by Commissioner
D. H. Blair, and dated August 26, 1921.)

869 Interpretation of T. D. 3220 requiring amended returns in cases where appreciated or inflated values have been used in determining amount of invested capital under the Revenue Act of 1917 and 1918.— 1. Attention is directed to T. D. 3220 [¶865] dated August 26, 1921, in which amended income and excess profits tax returns are required for 1917 and subsequent years in cases where appreciated or inflated values have been used in determining the amount of invested capital. This decision was based on the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the La Belle Iron Works v. The United States (41 Sup. Ct. 528) [¶889].

870 2. Numerous inquiries have reached this office in regard to the meaning of that Treasury Decision and it is possible that the Collectors of Internal Revenue will be asked whether certain cases fall within its provisions. It should be clearly understood that the purpose of that Treasury Decision was to have amended returns filed and tax paid to the Government in cases where returns were filed contrary to the regulations, Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and Section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

871 3. It was the intention that the tax due the Government as the result of the use of appreciated values should be paid into the Treasury immediately rather than waiting until the returns are finally reached in the regular course of audit. The fact that a field investigation has been made or that the return is in the process of audit in the Bureau is not sufficient to waive the filing of amended returns. Where the taxpayer has received a letter from the Bureau notifying him of an additional assessment as the result of the elimination from his original return of such appreciated or inflated values, it will not be necessary to file amended returns referred to in that decision. In each case where a taxpayer in your district is in doubt as to whether amended returns should be filed, a complete statement of facts should be submitted to this office for a ruling.

872 4. It is possible that certain taxpayers, on account of unusual conditions, can not comply with the provisions of T. D. 3220 and file their returns by November 24, the due date of the amended returns under that decision. If, prior to November 24, 1921, conditions seem to warrant, the Bureau will give consideration to the question of a supplemental Treasury Decision extending the due date beyond November 24, 1921, for the filing of amended returns required by that decision. [See ¶875.]

873 5. Collectors of Internal Revenue are not authorized to grant any extension of time in this respect and taxpayers should be so advised. You will, therefore, refer to this office all cases which require special consideration.

874 You are requested to acknowledge receipt of this mimeograph. (IT. Mim. Coll. No. 2848, signed by Commissioner D. H. Blair, and dated October 19, 1921.)

875 Extension of time for filing amended returns required by Treasury Decision 3220 in cases in which appreciated or inflated values have been used in determining invested capital.—Under the provisions of Treasury Decision 3220 [¶865], approved August 26, 1921, all taxpayers who, in the preparation of their income and profits tax returns for 1917 and subsequent years, have used appreciated or inflated values in determining the amount of their invested capital, are required to file amended returns within ninety days from the date of that decision and make payment of the additional tax shown to be due.

876 In view of the fact that many taxpayers are unable to complete their returns by November 24, 1921, the last date under which amended returns may be filed, as provided by Treasury Decision 3220, an extension of time up to and including January 15, 1922, is hereby granted within which to file such amended returns and make payment of the additional tax due. (T. D. 3243, signed by Commissioner D. H. Blair, and dated November 14, 1921.)

Adjustments in surplus and undivided profits account because of alleged failure to charge off depreciation.

MEMORANDUM NO. 106.
COMMITTEE ON APPEALS AND REVIEW.

February 26, 1921.

Mr. Commissioner:

(For Mr. Newton)

877 The Committee is in receipt of a request for advice relative to the 762 practice of field agents in reducing earned surplus by deductions for depreciation where none had been claimed in the past, or where a lower rate has been claimed than is ordinarily allowable with respect to the depreciable assets in question.

878 It is the judgment of the Committee that there is no warrant for reducing earned surplus because of alleged failure to charge off sufficient depreciation in the past, unless the depreciable assets of the corporation are valued on its books at the beginning of the taxable year at an amount in excess of their actual value at that time. This is particularly true where the corporation in prior years earned positive income from which larger deductions for depreciation might have been taken, if in the opinion of the officers and directors of the corporation such larger charges had been justified. Nothing herein is to be construed as precluding the Income Tax Unit from adjusting depreciation, either by way of increase or decrease, where there is at hand affirmative evidence that as at the beginning of a taxable year the amount of depreciation written off in prior years was insufficient or excessive. The correct attitude of the Bureau and the proper conduct of its field agents, in particular, are plainly set forth in that part of Art. 839 of Reg. 45, which reads:

“Adjustments in respect of depreciation or depletion in prior years will be made or permitted only upon the basis of affirmative evidence that as at the beginning of the taxable year the amount of depreciation or depletion written off in prior years was insufficient or excessive, as the case may be.”

Chairman,

Committee on Appeals and Review.

(Signed) M. F. West, Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

879 Adjustments in surplus and undivided profits account because of 762 alleged failure to charge off depreciation.—Specific inquiry has been made as to the meaning of the words “actual value” as used in Committee on Appeals and Review memorandum No. 106 [¶877]. For the purposes of taxation depreciation is based upon cost. Accordingly, the words “actual value” mean “sound value”, which is “original cost” (or value as of March 1, 1913, if applicable), including additions and betterments charged to capital account, less depreciation sustained.

880 Article 161, Regulations 45 (1920 edition) defines the proper allowance for depreciation as “that amount which should be set aside for the taxable year in accordance with a consistent plan by which the aggregate of such amounts for the useful life of the property in the business will suffice, with the salvage value, at the end of such useful life to provide in place of the property its cost, or its value as of March 1, 1913, if acquired by the taxpayer before that date."

881 It follows from this definition that any action on the part of a particular taxpayer which extends the useful life of a depreciable asset beyond the normal or usual term, and any circumstance which serves to increase the salvage value of a depreciable asset, operates to justify a reduction in the normal rate of depreciation. The depreciation of an asset is arrested where it is maintained at a high standard of efficiency either by the exercise of unusual care in its use or by unusual maintenance expenditures.

882 Invested capital, as defined in the Excess Profits Tax Law, is a statutory concept and is composed of two elements: (a) original contribution, and (b) earnings of the corporation available for distribution but not distributed and not dissipated by subsequent operating losses. The exhaustion of this capital through use, wear and tear has, for the purpose of computing invested capital, the same effect as an operating loss and unless this loss is properly taken care of out of earnings in one way or another, earned surplus must be adjusted in accordance with the provisions of the regulations. There are two ways of taking care of this loss out of income. One is by charging ordinary repairs directly to expense and setting up a depreciation reserve against which are properly chargeable all renewals and replacements; the other is where renewals and replacements, as well as repairs, have been charged directly against gross income. Either way has the effect of reducing the amount added during the year to earned surplus. Consequently, the mere fact that no depreciation, or a minimum depreciation, has been charged as such, is not sufficient reason for reducing the earned surplus, where renewals and replacements sufficient to care for the decrease in value of capital assets have been charged directly to expense, or where for any of the other reasons hereinbefore suggested less than the normal rate of depreciation is properly chargeable. When a taxpayer makes this claim there are two methods of verifying it. One is by determining the plant efficiency and the other is by determining the value of the capital assets remaining. From an administrative standpoint the latter is probably more practical even though it may be said that the former is more accurate.

883 Many cases have been brought to the attention of the Committee where corporations have been in existence for a long period of years, some of which corporations have been in existence several times the ordinary estimated life of the depreciable assets, and yet those assets are today in first-class condition and worth the figure at which they are carried on the books, although no depreciation has been charged as such and no additions to capital account have been made. In such cases it is obvious that depreciation has been adequately cared for by charges to expense, although it frequently happens that it is impossible at this late date to segregate and specify such charges and there is no warrant in the law or the regulations for requiring the depreciable assets in such cases to be written down below the figure at which they are carried on the books, since to do so is to reduce earned surplus twice, once through the original charge to expense (whether proper or improper), and again through an arbitrary depreciation charge required by the Bureau to be set up against earned surplus for the purpose of computing invested capital.

884 The controlling rule in this matter is found in that part of Article 839 of Regulations 45, which reads: "Adjustments in respect of depreciation or depletion in prior years will be made or permitted only upon the basis of affirmative evidence that as at the beginning of the taxable year the amount of depreciation or depletion written off in prior years was insufficient or excessive, as the case may be." Mere failure in prior years to have written off on the books the maximum or ordinary rate of depreciation, is not in itself "affirmative evidence." There is no warrant for reducing earned surplus because of alleged failure to charge off sufficient depreciation in the past, unless the depreciable assets of the corporation are valued on its books at the beginning of the taxable year at an amount in excess of their sound value at that time. (Statement by the Committee on Appeals and Review, signed by N. T. Johnson, Chairman, and dated July 6, 1921 (released for publication July 15, 1921). Noted by Carl A. Mapes, Solicitor of Internal Revenue.)

762 alleged failure to charge off depreciation.—Reference is made to Committee on Appeals and Review Memorandum 106 [¶877] and explanatory memorandum of the Committee dated July 6, 1921 [879].

836 The attention of the Commissioner's office has been called to the fact that Article 839 [¶762] of Regulations 45 as interpreted by Committee Memorandum 106 and the memorandum of July sixth, has not been properly followed.

887 When the Regulation (Article 839 of Regulations 45) was being drafted it was the intention of the draftsmen that a corporate surplus account was not to be disturbed lightly and that no change should be made in it either by the Government or by the taxpayer except upon adequate evidence that the surplus account was incorrect. It was the view of the draftsmen that unless the taxpayer could show a state of error, the Government should deny a claim for an increase in the surplus shown by the taxpayer's books; conversely, before a deduction could be made from the taxpayer's surplus account, the Government must show that such an adjustment is necessary to correct the account. The view was also held that such proof must be in the form of affirmative evidence—that it could not rest upon mere assertion of the working out of the theoretical formula.

888 It is my opinion that no doubt ever should have existed as to the correct interpretation of Article 839. A taxpayer's corporate surplus should not be reduced by the arbitrary adjustment of depreciation and depletion for past years. Surplus accounts should, however, always be carefully scrutinized and checked up for the purpose of preventing the inclusion therein of appreciated values of property. In case of doubt in such case the burden should be cast upon the taxpayer to prove that no appreciative values were included in the surplus. A presumption should always exist that a taxpayer's books of account reflect actual facts. The burden of proof is upon any one who attempts to impugn the correctness of the books of account—upon the Government if it seeks to reduce its surplus account by charging off depreciation and depletion which have not been claimed by the taxpayer and upon the taxpayer where he claims that too much depreciation and depletion have been charged off in prior years. (Memorandum, signed by Commissioner D. H. Blain, and dated November 1, 1921.)

(Decision.)
Revenue Act of 1917.

The excess of actual value of property over its cost in cash, subsequently capitalized, a stock dividend being declared, all prior to incidence of tax, is not to be included as invested capital either as paid-in surplus, or, because of the stock dividend involving the surrender and cancellation of the original stock, on account of "the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock."—The Act is constitutional.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

La Belle Iron Works, Appellant, } vs. The United States. } Appeal from the Court of Claims.
The United States. }

(256 U. S. 377.)

Mr. Justice PITNEY delivered the opinion of the Court.

889 The Court of Claims dismissed appellant's petition which claimed
555 a refund of $1,081,184.61, alleged to have been erroneously assessed
751 and exacted as an "excess profits tax" under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 (Act of October 3, 1917, Ch. 63, 40 Stat. 300, 302, et seq.). The case involves the construction and application of those provisions by which the deduction from income, for the purposes of the tax, is measured by the "invested capital" of the taxpayer; and a question is raised as to the constitutionality of the Act as construed and applied.

890 Title I of the Act imposed "War Income Taxes" upon individuals and corporations in addition to those imposed by Act of September 8, 1916 (Ch. 463, 39 Stat. 756). Title II provided for the levying of "War Excess Profits Taxes" upon corporations, partnerships, and individuals. As applied to domestic corporations, the scheme of this Title was that, after providing for a deduction from income (sec. 203, p. 304) equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period (the years 1911, 1912, and 1913) was of the invested capital for that period, but not less than 7 nor more than 9 per cent., plus $3,000, it imposed (sec. 201, p. 303), in addition to other taxes, a graduated tax upon the net income beyond the deduction, commencing with 20 per centum of such net income above the deduction but not above 15 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year, and running as high as 60 per centum of the net income in excess of 33 per centum of such capital. It applied to "all trades or businesses," with exceptions not now material (p. 303).

891 What should be deemed "invested capital" was defined by sec. 207 (p. 306), which, so far as pertinent, is set forth in the margin.*

*SEC. 207. That as used in this title, the term "invested capital" for any year means the average invested capital for the year, as defined and limited in this title, averaged monthly.

As used in this title "invested capital" does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title, nor money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corpora-

892 The case was decided upon a demurrer to the petition, in which the facts were stated as follows: Appellant is a domestic corporation and, prior to the year 1904, acquired ore lands for which it paid the sum of $190,000. Between that time and the year 1912 extensive explorations and developments were carried on (the cost of which is not stated), and it was proved that the lands contained large bodies of ore and had an actual cash value not less than $10,105,400; and at all times during the years 1912 to 1917, inclusive, their actual cash value was not less than the sum last mentioned. In the year 1912 the company increased the valuation of said lands upon its books by adding thereto the sum of $10,000,000, which it carried to surplus, and thereupon, in the same year, declared a stock dividend in the sum of $9,915,400, representing the increase in value of the ore lands. Theretofore appellant's capital stock had consisted of shares issued, all of one class, having a par value of $9,915,400. The declaration of the stock dividend was carried out by the surrender to the company of all the outstanding stock, and its cancellation, and the exchange of one share of new common and one share of new preferred stock for each share of the original stock.

893 In returning its annual net income for the year 1917 the company stated its invested capital to be $26,322,904.14, in which was included the sum of $10,105,400 as representing the value of its ore lands. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue caused a reassessment to be made, based upon a reduction of the invested capital to $16,407,507.14; the difference ($9,915,400) being the increase in the value of the ore lands already mentioned. The result was an additional tax of $1,081,184.61, which, having been paid, was made the subject of a claim for refund; and this having been considered and rejected by the Commissioner, there followed a suit in the Court of Claims, with the result already mentioned.

894 Appellant's contentions, in brief, are, first, that the increased value of the ore lands, placed upon the company's books in 1912, ought to be included in invested capital under sec. 207 (a) (3), as "paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits." Second, that within the meaning of clause (2), which provides that invested capital shall include "the actual cash value

tion or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, the actual cash value of such property as of January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year: Provided, That (a) the actual cash value of patents and copyrights paid in for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment, shall be included as invested capital, but not to exceed the par value of such stock or shares at the time of such payment, and (b) the good will, trade-marks, trade brands, the franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, shall be included as invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, the value of such good will, trade-mark, trade brand, franchise, or intangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment; but good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, bona fide purchased, prior to March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, for and with interests or shares in a partnership or for and with shares in the capital stock of a corporation (issued prior to March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen), in an amount not to exceed, on March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, twenty per centum of the total interests or shares in the partnership or of the total shares of the capital stock of the corporation, shall be included in invested capital at a value not to exceed the actual cash value at the time of such purchase, and in case of issue of stock therefor not to exceed the par value of such stock; of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation," the stock of the company issued in 1912, consisting of $9,915,400 of preferred stock and an equal amount of common, was fully paid for: either (a) by the tangible assets, including the ore properties at their increased value, or (b) by the surrender of all the certificates representing the old common stock, which, it is said, had an actual cash value equal to double its par. And, third, that the construction put upon the Act by the Treasury Department, based as it is said not upon value but upon the single feature of cost, disregarding the time of acquisition, would render the Act unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process under the Fifth Amendment, because so arbitrary as to amount in effect to confiscation; and hence that this construction must be avoided.

895 Reading the entire language of Section 207 in the light of the circumstances that surrounded the passage of the Act, we think its meaning as to "invested capital" is entirely clear. The great war in Europe had been in progress since the year 1914, and the manufacture and export of war supplies and other material for the belligerent powers had stimulated many lines of trade and business in this country, resulting in large profits as compared with the period before the war, and as compared with ordinary returns upon the capital embarked. The United States had become directly involved in the conflict in the Spring of 1917, necessitating heavy increases in taxation; at the same time manufactures and trade of every description were rendered even more active, and in certain lines more profitable, than before, so that the unusual gains derived therefrom formed a natural subject for special taxation.

896 On the eve of our entry, and in order to provide a "Special Preparedness Fund" for army, navy, and fortification purposes, an Act (March 3, 1917; Ch. 159, 39 Stat. 1000) was passed, which, in Title II, provided for an excess profits tax on corporations and partnerships equal to 8 per centum of the amount by which their net income exceeded $5,000 plus 8 per centum of the "actual capital invested"; and, in sec. 202 (p. 1001), defined this term to mean "(1) actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value, at the time of payment, of assets other than cash paid in, and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business," but not to include money or other property borrowed.

897 The Revenue Act of October 3, 1917, passed after we had become engaged in the war, took the place of the Act of March 3, and embodied a "War Excess Profits Tax," with higher percentages imposed upon the income in excess of deductions and a more particular definition of terms. A scrutiny of the particular provisions of Section 207 shows that it was the dominant purpose of Congress to place the peculiar burden of this tax upon the income of trades and businesses exceeding what was deemed a normally reasonable return upon the capital actually embarked. But if such capital were to be computed according to appreciated market values based upon the estimates of interested parties (on whose returns perforce the Government must in great part rely), exaggerations would be at a premium, corrections difficult, and the tax easily evaded. Section 207 shows that Congress was fully alive to this and designedly adopted a term—"invested capital"—and a definition of it, that would measurably guard against inflated valuations. The word "invested" in itself imports a restrictive qualification. When speaking of the capital of a business corporation or partnership, such as the Act deals with, "to invest" imports a laying out of money, or money's worth, either an individual in acquiring an interest in the concern with a view to obtaining income or profit from the conduct of its business, or by the concern itself in acquiring something of permanent use in the business; in either case involving a conversion of wealth from one form into another suitable for employment in the making of the hoped-for gains. See Webster's New Internat. Dict., "Invest", 8; Century Dict., "invest", 7; Standard Dict., "invest", 1.

898 In order to adhere to this restricted meaning and avoid exaggerated valuations, the draftsman of the Act resorted to the test of including nothing but money, or money's worth, actually contributed or converted in exchange for shares of the capital stock, or actually acquired through the business activities of the corporation or partnership (involving again a conversion) and coming in ab extra, by way of increase over the original capital stock. How consistently this was carried out becomes evident as the section is examined in detail. Cash paid in, and tangible property paid in other than cash, are confined to such as were contributed for stock or shares in the corporation or partnership; and the property is to be taken at its actual cash value "at the time of such payment"—distinctly negating any allowance for appreciation in value. There is but a single exception: tangible property paid in prior to January 1, 1914, may be taken at its actual cash value on that date, but in no case exceeding the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued for it; a restriction in itself requiring the valuation to be taken as of a date prior to the war period, and in no case to exceed the stock valuation placed upon it at the time it was contributed. The provision of clause (3) that includes "paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business" recognizes that in some cases contributions are received from stockholders in money or its equivalent for the specific purpose of creating an actual excess capital over and above the par value of the stock; and, in view of the context, surplus "earned" as well as that "paid in" excludes the idea of capitalizing (for the purposes of this tax) a mere appreciation of values over cost.

899 The same controlling thought is carried into the proviso, which relates to the valuation of patents, copyrights, trade-marks, good will, franchises, and similar intangible property. Every line shows evidence of a legislative purpose to confine the account to such items as were paid in for stock or shares, and to their values "at the time of such payment"; but, with regard to those bona fide purchased prior to March 3, 1917, there is a special provision, limiting the effect of any adjustments that might have been made in view of the provisions of the Act of that date.

900 It is clear that clauses (1) and (2) refer to actual contributions of cash or of tangible property at its cash value contributed in exchange for stock or shares specifically issued for it; and that neither these clauses, nor clause (3) which relates to surplus, can be construed as including within the definition of invested capital any marking up of the valuation of assets upon the books to correspond with increase in market value, or any paper transaction by which new shares are issued in exchange for old ones in the same corporation, but which is not in substance and effect a new acquisition of capital property by the company.

901 It is clear enough that Congress adopted the basis of "invested capital" measured according to actual contributions made for stock or shares and actual accessions in the way of surplus, valuing them according to actual and bona fide transactions and by valuations obtaining at the time of acquisition, not only in order to confine the capital, the income from which was to be in part exempted from the burden of this special tax, to something approximately representative of the risks accepted by the investors in embarking their means in the enterprise, but also in order to adopt tests that would enable returns to be more easily checked by examination of records, and make them less liable to inflation than if a more liberal meaning of "capital and surplus" had been adopted; thus avoiding the necessity of employing a special corps of valuation experts to grapple with the many difficult problems that would have ensued had general market values been adopted as the criteria.

902 In view of the special language employed in Section 207, obviously for the purpose of avoiding appreciated valuations of assets over and above cost, the argument that such value is as real as cost value, and that in the terminology of corporation and partnership accounting "capital and surplus" mean merely the excess of all assets at actual values over outstanding liabilities, and "surplus" means the intrinsic value of all assets over and above outstanding liabilities plus par of the stock, is beside the mark. Nor has the distinction between capital and income, discussed in Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U. S. 179, 187; Hays v. Gauley Mtn. Coal Co., 247 U. S. 189, 193; and Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 330, 334-335, any proper bearing upon the questions here presented.

903 Upon the strength of an administrative interpretation contained in a Treasury Regulation pertaining to the Revenue Act of 1917, under which "stocks" were to be regarded as tangible property when paid in for stock or shares of a corporation, it is insisted that appellant's stock dividend distribution of 1912 ought to be treated as paid for in tangible property, the old stock surrendered being regarded as tangible for the purpose. But that distribution, in substance and effect, was an internal transaction, in which the company received nothing from the stockholders any more than they received anything from it (see Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U. S. 189, 210-211); and the old shares cannot be regarded as having been "paid in for" the new ones within the meaning of Section 207 (a) (2), even were they "stocks" within the meaning of that Regulation, which is doubtful.

904 It is said that the admitted increase in the value of appellant's ore lands is properly to be characterized as earned surplus, because it was the result of extensive exploration and development work. We assume that a proper sum, not exceeding the cost of the work, might have been added to earned surplus on that account; but none such was stated in appellant's petition, nor, so far as appears, in its return of income. In the absence of such a showing it was not improper to attribute the entire $9,915,400, added to the book value of the ore property in the year 1912, to a mere appreciation in the value of the property; in short, to what is commonly known as the "unearned increment," not properly "earned surplus" within the meaning of the statute.

905 The foregoing considerations dispose of the contention that either the increased value of appellant's ore lands, or the surrender of the old stock in exchange for the new issues based upon that value, can be regarded as "tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation" within the meaning of sec. 207 (a) (2); and of the further contention that such increased value can properly be regarded as "paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits" under sec. 207 (a) (3).

906 It is urged that this construction, defining invested capital according to the original cost of the property instead of its present value, has the effect of rendering the Act "glaringly unequal" and of doubtful constitutionality; the insistence being that, so construed, it operates to produce baseless and arbitrary discriminations, to the extent of rendering the tax invalid under the due process of law clause of the Fifth Amendment. Reference is made to cases decided under the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment (Southern Ry. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 418; Gast Realty Co. v. Schneider Granite Co., 240 U. S. 55); but clearly they are not in point. The Fifth Amendment has no equal protection clause; and the only rule of uniformity prescribed with respect to duties, imposts, and excises laid by Congress is the territorial uniformity required by Art. I, sec. 8. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 557; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 98, 106; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 150; Billings v. United States, 232 U. S. 261, 282; Brushaber v. Union Pacific R. R., 240 U. S. 1, 24. That the statute under consideration operates with territorial uniformity is obvious and not questioned.

907 Appellant cites Looney v. Crane Co., 245 U. S. 178, 188, and International Paper Co. v. Massachusetts, 246 U. S. 135, 145, but these cases also are inapplicable, being based upon the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, with which state taxing laws were held in conflict because they had the effect of imposing taxes on the property of foreign corporations located and used beyond the jurisdiction of the taxing State. There is no such infirmity here.

908 Nor can we regard the Act—in basing “invested capital” upon actual costs to the exclusion of higher estimated values—as productive of arbitrary discriminations raising a doubt about its constitutionality under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. The difficulty of adjusting any system of taxation so as to render it precisely equal in its bearing is proverbial, and such nicety is not even required of the States under the equal protection clause, much less of Congress under the more general requirement of due process of law in taxation. Of course it will be understood that Congress has very ample authority to adjust its income taxes according to its discretion, within the bounds of geographical uniformity. Courts have no authority to pass upon the propriety of its measures; and we deal with the present criticism only for the purpose of refuting the contention, strongly urged, that the tax is so wholly arbitrary as to amount to confiscation.

909 The Act treats all corporations and partnerships alike, so far as they are similarly circumstanced. As to one and all, Congress adjusted this tax, generally speaking, on the basis of excluding from its operation income to the extent of a specified percentage (7 to 9 per cent) of the capital employed, but upon condition that such capital be valued according to what actually was embarked at the outset or added thereafter, disregarding any appreciation in values. If in its application the tax in particular instances may seem to bear up on one corporation more than upon another, this is due to differences in their circumstances, not to any uncertainty or want of generality in the tests applied.

910 Minor distinctions—such as those turning upon the particular dates of January 1, 1914, and March 3, 1917—are easily explained, as we have seen. The principal line of demarcation—that based upon actual costs, excluding estimated appreciation—finds reasonable support upon grounds of both theory and practice, in addition to the important consideration of convenience in administration, already adverted to. There is a logical incongruity in entering upon the books of a corporation as the capital value of property acquired for permanent employment in its business and still retained for that purpose, a sum corresponding not to its cost but to what probably might be realized by sale in the market. It is not merely that the market value has not been realized or tested by sale made, but that sale cannot be made without abandoning the very purpose for which the property is held, involving a withdrawal from business so far as that particular property is concerned. Whether in a given case property should be carried in the capital account at market value rather than at cost may be a matter of judgment, depending upon special circumstances and the local law. But certainly Congress, in seeking a general rule, reasonably might adopt the cost basis, resting upon experience rather than anticipation.

911 In organizing corporations, it is not unusual to issue different classes of securities, with various priorities as between themselves, to represent different kinds of contribution to capital. In exchange for cash, bonds may be issued; for fixed properties, like plant and equipment, preferred stock may be given; while more speculative values, like good-will or patent rights, may be represented by common stock. In the present case, for instance, when appellant took the estimated increase in value of its ore lands as a basis for increased capitalization, it issued preferred stock to the amount of the former total, carrying those lands at cost, and issued a like amount of common stock to represent the appreciation in their market value. It does not appear that in form the new issues were thus allocated; but at least there was a recognition of a higher claim in favor of one part of the book capital than of the other. Upon like grounds, it was not unreasonable for Congress, in adjusting the "excess profits tax," to accord preferential treatment to capital representing actual investments, as compared with capital representing higher valuations based upon estimates, however confident and reliable, of what probably could be realized were the property sold instead of retained.

912 From every point of view, the tax in question must be sustained.

We intimate no opinion upon the effect of the Act with respect to deductions from cost values of capital assets because of depreciation or the like; no question of that kind being here involved.

Judgment affirmed.

(Decision.)Revenue Act of 1917—War Excess-Profits Tax.

A corporation whose entire income is derived from royalties on patents in which it has no investment is entitled to assessment under Section 209 as being engaged in a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital.

United States District Court, District of New Jersey.

De Laski & Thropp Circular Woven Tire Co.
vs. Iredell, Collector.
(268 Fed. 377.)

(Note Supplementary Bulletin Rulings at Sec. 327, Art. 901-13, Ruling No. 17, and particularly the matter quoted there from T. B. M. 9.)

913 BODINE, District Judge. The plaintiff, a New Jersey corporation, has brought suit against the collector of internal revenue for the First district of New Jersey to recover an excess profits tax for the year 1917, alleged to have been improperly levied, assessed, and collected, and the defendant has moved to strike out the complaint, for the reason that—

“A corporation whose sole income is received from licensed patents is a corporation having more than a nominal capital, within the meaning of section 209 of the Revenue Act of October 3, 1917.”

914 The complaint discloses that the plaintiff was incorporated in 1903, with an authorized capital stock of $100,000. At the time of its incorporation its officers contemplated engaging in the business of manufacturing pneumatic vehicle tires of a peculiar and unusual construction. The Company experimented at great expense over a period of years, until it was determined that the manufacture of its tires was not commercially possible. One of the officers of the Company during the period of experimentation developed a new form of mold for vulcanizing pneumatic tires, which mold was of general utility, and a patent was secured, which was assigned to the Company for $1, together with other patents relating to tire-manufacturing apparatus.

915 In 1911 the Company ceased conducting any other business than that of granting licenses under its patents. Its capital was reduced to $10,000. During the year 1917 the capital and surplus were $10,000 and $2,000, respectively, or a total invested capital of $12,000, which capital was used as a fund from which to advance salaries, wages, etc., and to provide office furniture, accommodations, and equipment. The Company was in much the same position as an individual who, having invented a machine desired by others, received royalties for the use of his invention and kept sufficient money on hand to provide for his needs during periods when royalties would not be received. The Company's net income during the year 1917 was $105,650.29. It is clear, therefore, that the patents had real value.

916 The plaintiff concluded that it was entitled to be assessed under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917, on the theory that it was a corporation "having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital." The Treasury Department, however, acting under section 210 of the act, on the theory that it was unable to satisfactorily determine the invested capital of the plaintiff, assessed an additional tax, which was paid by the plaintiff under protest, and for the recovery of which this action is brought.

917 Section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides that, in addition to an income tax, every corporation, except those specifically exempted, of which the plaintiff is not one, shall pay the additional tax upon its net income. The tax was graduated, and was a certain percentage of the net income, not in excess of certain fixed percentages of the invested capital. Under section 207 of the act the term "invested capital" is defined. It appears from this section that the plaintiff's patents would not be included in the term "invested capital," for the reason that no stock of the plaintiff Company was issued therefor, nor were these patents specifically paid for in cash or tangible property. The only invested capital of the plaintiff was the $12,000 of capital and surplus, which was not used in the production of the net income of the plaintiff, but merely for the purpose of advancing salaries, wages, and providing office accommodations and equipment, and which in itself, under treasury ruling, would not bring the Company under section 201 of the act.

918 In determining the question whether such a corporation, deriving its income solely from royalties or licenses from patents, can be said to be a corporation "having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital," within the meaning of section 209, reference is made in behalf of the collector to the Congressional Record of October 6, 1917, containing a statement by Hon. Claude Kitchin, who was at that time chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. It appears from this statement that the Excess Profits Tax Law, as contained in the House Bill, applied only to corporations and partnerships, and not to individuals. The Senate brought within the scope of the law individuals in trade or business, but excluded lawyers, doctors, professional men, and officers of corporations, as well as governmental officers. The House conferees, it would seem from Mr. Kitchin's statement, opposed the inclusion of individuals, unless they were all brought in. The Senate insisted upon the exemptions, and section 209 of the act resulted, which, it is the claim of the collector, was intended to apply to a definite class of persons; i.e., lawyers, doctors, professional men, and high-salaried officers of corporations and the government.

919 If this idea of providing especially for those rendering a personal service was all that was in the minds of the conferees, there seems to be no reason why they should not have used more exact language to convey their meaning, and further there is no reason at all why Congress should have specifically provided that, in a case of a trade or business "having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital," there should be assessed a tax other than the tax to which such trade or business would otherwise be liable under section 201, unless there was to be a distinction between those employing "invested capital" and those employing "nominal capital." These terms admit of exact definitions.

920 The determination of this case must, as already indicated, depend upon the meaning of the words "not more than a nominal capital." It is clear from section 207 that the patents from which the plaintiff derived its revenue cannot be regarded as "invested capital." Counsel for the plaintiff, in a most exhaustive and painstaking brief, has shown that the treasury rulings indicate that the word "invested" was omitted in the act by oversight in the phrase "not more than a nominal (invested) capital." This suggestion, however, is not well taken, for the reason that, whatever the treasury rulings may have been, they can be given no force to modify or add to the clearly expressed language of Congress.

921 It does not follow, however, that the word "capital" embraces patents. The following definitions of "capital" are in point:

"Wealth employed in or available for production." Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary.

"That part of the production of industry which, in the form either of national or of individual wealth, is available for further production." The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia.

922 The late J. S. Mill, the eminent economist, defines "capital" as follows:

"What capital does for production is to afford shelter, protection, tools, and materials which the work requires, and to feed and otherwise maintain the laborers during the process. Whatever things are destined for this use, destined to supply productive labor with these various prerequisites, are capital." Political Economy, i, iv, § I. (The italics are mine.)

923 Taking this last definition, which embodies the thought of all the others, it seems clear that patents do not fall within the term "capital;" and it also seems to be clear that this is what was in mind when Congress made the distinction between "invested capital," which is defined under section 207 to include the actual cash value of patents paid for in stock or shares, and also such other intangible property, which had been paid for in money or stock, and also what was in mind when the word "capital" is used alone in section 209, preceded by the word "nominal;" that is, in the sense of something in name only employed in or available for production. The distinction is between those employing those stored-up concrete things, essential to productive labor, and those employing these things existing in name only. Patents were never capital in an economic sense. Congress included them within the term "invested capital" to the extent only of the investment in them; if no investment in them, then they remain in the same class as that intangible something which makes for the wealth of the professional man, the broker, or others engaged in a personal service, which could never be "capital," except in name only.

924 The decision of this case, however, need not depend solely upon the meaning of the word "capital," to be found in the distinction between "invested capital" and "nominal capital," as used in the act. The patents which the plaintiff owned were the concrete embodiment of the skill which the plaintiff possessed in its field of activity. This skill or service it bartered for a consideration. Such skill or service is like the service a lawyer in large practice renders for an annual retainer, and is very nearly akin to the service which a commission house renders to those who buy and sell through it, or the service of a concern engaged in selling or leasing real estate, and in writing insurance. The plaintiff's source of income was that which certain persons were willing to pay it for the use of its skill and knowledge. It is true that skill and knowledge had been reduced to concrete form; but the payment was for the use of the skill and knowledge, and not for any part or parcel of the form to which the skill and knowledge had been reduced. Hence it would seem that in a very real sense the plaintiff was engaged in rendering a personal service, and was not employing "capital," and certainly no more than a "nominal capital."

925 The motion to strike is dismissed.

(Decision.)

Revenue Act of 1917.

Additions to surplus account; Earned surplus expended in developing and improving a secret process, or used to repay borrowed money so expended.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.
Lincoln Chemical Company, Plaintiff,

against

William H. Edwards, as Collector, etc.

(272 Fed. 142.)

926 Action by a taxpayer against the Collector for refund of a part of 771 the excess profits tax for 1917. The plaintiff, a domestic corporation, 772 filed its return for 1917 and calculated its capital upon the basis of Section 209 of the law of October 3, 1917; that is to say, it assumed that it had "no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital." The Treasury officials reassessed the tax at a larger figure upon a basis not now necessary to set forth, because it is conceded that the propriety of their action depends upon the correctness of the plaintiff's reading of Section 209.
 If that is right, the plaintiff wins; if it is wrong, the defendant.

927 The case was tried before a jury of one, and at the conclusion of the evidence both sides moved for the direction of a verdict. The evidence, which was undisputed, showed the following state of facts: The plaintiff was organized in April, 1909, under the laws of New York, with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars. There were but two persons financially interested in it, Loeb and Riddle. Riddle was an inventor, and before the incorporation came to Loeb with a process for extracting cocoa butter out of cocoa shells, a by-product. This process proved worthless, and Riddle thereupon suggested to Loeb the possibility of converting the process into one from which he could extract from cocoa shells a chemical substance, known as theobromine, allied to caffeine. Loeb, having some money, continued to advance it in defraying Riddle's further experiments, until he became fearful of two wide involvement, and determined to incorporate the venture. Riddle agreed to work for the corporation for five years at a salary of eighteen hundred dollars and to convey his process, still unperfected, both for twenty-four hundred dollars par value of the plaintiff's stock. Loeb agreed to convey the machinery and supplies par for par in stock, seventy-four hundred dollars, and two hundred dollars was paid in cash.

928 During the year 1910 the company borrowed nearly twenty thousand dollars, which it spent in Riddle's further experiments upon the process, which was then complete. During that year it got one Schaefer, a manufacturing chemist, to make a contract for the exploitation of the process on a royalty basis, but the sales of theobromine were so few that the royalty was never earned. In 1912 they got Schaefer to give them better terms; he agreed to pay two thousand dollars a year for the process over a period of fifteen years and to furnish theobromine to the plaintiff at $2.50 a pound, or less. This gave the plaintiff control of a supply without manufacturing.
 At the time of the first contract in 1910, the plaintiff sold all its machinery and plant to Schaefer for $1,155, and its supplies for $407, and this money was either used in development or upon the indebtedness. In any event, it had all disappeared before 1914. The plaintiff never manufactured any theobromine after 1910.

929 The plaintiff's profits on the sale of theobromine made by Schaefer under the process were not large throughout the year 1911, but they began to increase in 1912 and 1913, and the company thus made a small income besides the royalty paid by Schaefer. The advent of the Great War in 1914 greatly increased the demand, and the business became very profitable, so that by January 1, 1917, all its debts were paid and it had a surplus of thirteen thousand dollars after writing off a depreciation of seven thousand seven hundred dollars upon the process.

930 The business was done as follows: There were but three purchasers of theobromine, all large manufacturing chemists, who bought at ten days' cash. The plaintiff necessarily bought all its theobromine (made under the process), from Schaefer at fifteen days cash, and was therefore in a position to pay Schaefer out of the moneys which its customers paid to it. As these were of high financial responsibility it had no need to hold a reserve in its treasury, in order to finance its purchases, though at times, when in ample funds, it did use its surplus to pay Schaefer before the customers paid for their consignments.

931 During the year 1917 the assets of the plaintiff, therefore, consisted only of its cash on hand, the contract with Schaefer, and the secret process finally perfected by Riddle. Its stock was ten thousand dollars, and its surplus as stated, thirteen thousand dollars, of which over seven thousand dollars was in cash. It necessarily followed that its other assets were valued at sixteen thousand dollars.

932 The case depends upon the meaning of the phrase "invested capital" and "nominal capital" as used in Section 209 and as defined in Section 207. The plaintiff asserts that there was only two hundred dollars of cash paid in, no tangibles remaining after 1913, no surplus "used and employed" in the business, and that the secret process was an "intangible" which must be taken at its "actual cash value" in April, 1909, which is shown to be nothing. The defendant argues that the sums spent upon the process which did in fact increase its value by nineteen thousand dollars should be taken as a surplus "used and employed" in the business.

933 LEARNED HAND, D. J.: I shall decide this case upon the assumption that "nominal capital" in Section 209 means "nominal invested capital," without of course passing upon that question. I shall further assume—and indeed on this point both sides agree—that the secret process of Riddle was "intangible property" within the meaning of Section 207 (a) (3) (b). I shall finally assume that the process had only a nominal value in April, 1909, when it was sold to the plaintiff for twenty-four hundred dollars of stock. With these assumptions the question arises whether the money used to develop the process can be regarded as "paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business" under Section 209 (a) (3). On the trial I thought that the plaintiff was right on this point, and for clarity I shall therefore state its argument as strongly as I can. The statute, it says, prescribes that "intangible property" of this kind "shall be included in invested capital at a value not to exceed the actual cash value at the time of such purchase." Disregarding "paid in surplus," of which there is none here, the "earned surplus" is the only item into which the supposed added value of the process can be placed. Now surplus, or at least "earned surplus" is merely an accountant's way of saying that the value of the assets are greater than the liabilities. When the statute speaks of "invested capital," it must be understood to refer to existing property, i. e. "means of production," and to use accountant's language, not because accounts can ever of themselves be the basis of taxation, but because they are the most convenient record of actual values, embodied in property which is alone the proper basis of taxation. "Earned surplus" must therefore represent the value of existing property.

934 This being true, continues the plaintiff, the only asset of value in 1917 was the perfected process and we may assume that it had enough value to give more than a "nominal" "earned surplus" above the capital stock, which was the only liability. Therefore, if the asset could be taken at its true value in 1917, Section 209 of the statute would not apply. The difficulty with the Collector's position, however, is that Section 207 directed us to include the process at no more than its "actual cash value" in 1909, and at that time it had none. The money spent in improving and perfecting the process had, in 1917, no existence at all, save in the process itself. It was spent in machinery or supplies or Riddle's living expenses, or salaries. So far as our treasury was concerned there was nothing now left except the process. That was therefore the only asset which could figure on the credit side of our account to establish any "earned surplus," and the statute forbade its inclusion at anything but a nominal value. Therefore, we had no "earned surplus," and only a "nominal invested capital."

935 This argument appears to me unanswerable if the incompleting process be regarded as the same asset for all purposes when finally developed as when first acquired. The statute must of course mean something, and the least that it can mean must be, I think, that any automatic increase in value of a process or "other intangible property," must be disregarded. The "unearned increment," as economists would call it, will be ignored. Therefore, I should altogether disregard any increase in the value of this process dependent upon general conditions of industry, as for example the rise in the price of theobromine due to the Great War. Furthermore, for the purposes of this case, anyway, I may assume that an increase in the value of the process, resulting from spending money in advertising or the like, which leaves it unchanged in itself, will fall into the same category. That question can await decision till it arises; I say nothing about it here. The case at bar is, however, one where money has been spent in changing the property itself, so that in place of a formula which prescribed one sequence of steps, there emerged another which prescribed a different sequence. Fair analogies appear to me, for example, cattle fed for market, or houses rebuilt or enlarged. It is true that for convenience we speak of such property as always remaining the same, though in fact it is not only different in value, but that difference results from a change in the objective character of the property itself, but that convenience should not disguise the substantial fact that it is, economically speaking, new property which appears.

936 When such changes have resulted from the expenditure of new capital, I see no reason why the statute should be construed as peremptorily directing that they should be disregarded. It is quite true still, as the plaintiff argues, that the "earned surplus" must be found in some assets and that the only asset in the case at bar still remains the process, but it is a different process. The limitation of Section 207 may be confined, without undue violence to the sense of the words, to such increases in value as arise without the addition of new capital, and it may be, to such others also as involve no objective change in the thing itself.

937 Indeed, it can scarcely be supposed that Congress could have had any other purpose than to prevent the taxpayer from crediting his capital account with increases which he had done nothing to produce. If they meant to include also new outlays upon existing capital, no matter how providently made, the statute provides a direct incentive to extravagance. Often, perhaps generally, it is a sound industrial policy to improve existing capital, rather than to scrap it, and invest anew. Yet if the plaintiff be right, no such investment can ever do more than meet depreciation, and this would apply as well to "tangibles" as to "intangibles." The only new values which could be recognized would be in property bought outright after incorporation, and those investments which may have been the means of changing the industrial character and value of existing property, would be totally lost for purposes of taxation. When taxes can be as high as the excess profits tax may be, such inducements may become a patent influence upon industrial conduct, and it cannot be supposed that the result of the plaintiff's construction was within the purposes of Congress.

938 Again, it should be a weighty consideration with me that the Tax Bureau has made these allowances in the past in the case of thousands of taxpayers and has drafted its regulations upon the assumption that the statute permits them. I therefore hold that when money has been earned and spent in improving a process such as this, its increased value due only to that expenditure may figure as an asset in estimating under Section 207 "earned surplus," if any, as an element of "invested capital."

939 It does not follow, of course, in the case at bar that the value of the process so improved was enough to cause any "earned surplus" to emerge. That depends upon whether the assets, so estimated, were greater than the stock, ten thousand dollars, by more than a "nominal" amount. Now the value of the "tangibles" must under Section 207 be taken as of January 1, 1914, at which time they had disappeared. Therefore, the process must have increased from its nominal value in 1909 to more than ten thousand dollars before any "earned surplus" could begin to appear at all. The value at which the plaintiff carried the process does not definitely appear on its books. On January 1, 1917, it had a surplus of $13,088.59 and therefore assets of $23,088.59. Of this, $7,367.64 was in cash, leaving $15,720.95 for other assets which must be the process and the contract. The contract got its value only from the process and may be disregarded. The value of the process as of that year would therefore appear to be this sum.

940 This figure, it is true, does not correspond with other evidence and apparently is incorrect. In its income tax return for 1916 it valued the process as of March 1, 1913, at $19,716.84, and claimed a deduction for depreciation to date of $7,761.42, leaving a value of about $12,000 as of January 1, 1917. The discrepancy of some $3,700 I have been unable to account for except upon the hypothesis that there were other assets not shown. Perhaps the cash was greater, because the cash book showed a balance on January 2, 1917, of $11,000 which just about makes up the difference. Assuming that this is the proper explanation, still on the plaintiff's own admission it had an "earned surplus" of $2,000 which in view of the size of the business I should not consider "nominal."

941 But the defendant was not bound by the plaintiff's admission. It was for the plaintiff to prove that it had only a nominal capital. The process was clearly of very substantial value. The contract had ten years more to run and there was a minimum royalty of $2,000. Besides this the plaintiff could call for at least three thousand pounds of theobromine yearly at not more than $2.50 a pound, a right which had been of substantial value in the years before the war began to affect the price. In 1914 this right was worth $525 and the royalty apparently $2,854. Moreover, when the contract terminated the process would not necessarily become worthless. Indeed it may have a very substantial value for an indefinite time. The plaintiff has certainly failed to prove that its value in 1917 over $10,000 was "not more than nominal."

942 I therefore conclude that the case is not proved and will direct a verdict for the defendant. (The foregoing is reproduced in T. D. 3183 not as a ruling, but for information. The case is reported at 272 Fed. 142.)

Defendant in Error.

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan, Southern Division.

(No. 3541.)

Before KNAPPEN, DENISON and DONAHUE, Circuit Judges.

943 On the 20th day of May, 1912, Charles E. Cartier and Edward M.
566 Holland, entered into a written contract of partnership for the purpose of manufacturing and dealing in forest products including lumber, timber, ties, shingles, laths, etc., and also timbered, improved and cut-over lands.

944 It was further agreed that the paid-in capital of the partnership should be thirty thousand dollars, any portion or all of which amount should be furnished to the partnership by Charles E. Cartier, as the requirements of the partnership appear upon the note or notes of the partnership to be paid at the earliest practicable opportunity out of the net earnings of the partnership business, and to bear legal rate of interest.

945 It does not appear from the evidence that this partnership ever manufactured any forest products but it did purchase lumber and kindred commodities to fill current orders of its customers but not for speculative purposes based upon rise and fall of the market. It kept no lumber yard and kept no lumber in stock, and the only lumber owned by it was lumber in transit from the mill from which it was purchased by the partnership, to the partnership's customers. In a few cases, however, where the lumber was rejected by the customer it was held by the partnership until it could be sold to another purchaser. In 1917 the partnership also negotiated sales for timber and secured an option on a larger acreage of timber land in its own name, but in fact for William and Samuel Horner, who furnished the thousand dollars necessary to be paid for this option and the additional five hundred dollars necessary to extend the option beyond the sixty days named therein.

946 For services in this transaction the partnership received $20,353.00, which is by far the largest single item in the aggregate of the net income of $47,018.00, earned by the partnership in 1917.

947 It further appears from the record that after the organization of the partnership which was known as the Cartier-Holland Lumber Company, Cartier did furnish it some money and took its notes therefor, but in 1914 a new arrangement was entered into by which the partnership borrowed the money required in its business directly from the bank and executed its notes therefor. These notes were indorsed by both Cartier and Holland, and Cartier left upon deposit with the bank, as collateral to his indorsement of these notes, securities theretofore deposited by him when he borrowed the money in his own name and loaned it to the partnership. It was also further understood and agreed between the bank and the partnership, when these loans were negotiated, that if at any time the collateral deposited by Cartier seemed to the bank to be insufficient to cover his liability as indorser on the notes of the partnership, Holland would furnish further collateral security. This method of transacting the partnership business was continued until and during the year 1917 and in this way the partnership obtained all its capital including the money required by it to discount its bills for lumber and other commodities purchased by it and sold to its customers.

948 It further appears that during the time the partnership was operated Cartier drew out of the partnership business $11,556.37 and Holland $18,106.28, which amounts were charged to them on the books of the partnership. If these amounts withdrawn by the partners are reckoned as assets of the partnership, then on January 1, 1917, there was a net surplus of assets over and above liabilities of $22,443.80; otherwise the liabilities of the partnership would exceed its assets by the sum of $7,218.85.

949 The partnership paid an excess profit tax of eight per cent of its net income of $47,018.00, for the year 1917 under the provisions of Section 209 of Title II of the Act of October 3, 1917, amounting to $3,761.44. Later a supplemental return was requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who then notified the partnership that its claim for assessment based upon the provisions of Section 209 of the Excess Profits Tax Law had been disallowed and that the tax had been computed and assessed against it under Sections 201 and 210 and Articles 18, 24 and 52 of Regulation No. 41.

950 This tax based upon an estimated capital of $118,515.85 amounted to $12,788.90, or a balance over the amount already paid of $9,027.46, which additional tax was paid under protest. Later the partnership brought an action in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan, Southern Division, to recover the additional tax levied and demand by the Internal Revenue Commissioner and paid by it under protest.

951 The parties having expressly waived a jury, the cause was submitted to the District Court upon the pleadings and the evidence, resulting in judgment for the defendant. Findings of fact were submitted by the plaintiff and defendant, but the court refused to adopt these findings or either of them, and ordered that its opinion should constitute its findings of fact and conclusion of law, to which findings, conclusion and judgment, exceptions were taken by the plaintiff in error.

952 DONAHUE, Circuit Judge: The only question presented by this record is whether or not the partnership of Cartier-Holland Lumber Company during the year 1917 had an invested capital within the meaning of Section 201, 207 and 210 of Title II of the Act of Congress approved October 3, 1917.

953 If this question were to be determined separate and apart from the act levying this excess profit tax, then it would be of easy solution. Money invested in a partnership business, whether paid in by the partners or borrowed from a partner or a bank, in the absence of legislation to the contrary, would constitute invested capital in the ordinary meaning and acceptance of that term. Congress, however, evidently for the purpose of protecting the government from claims of inflated capitalization, thought it wise and necessary to define the term "invested capital," which is made the basis of the computation of the tax to be levied under the authority conferred by this Act. To that end Section 207 provided among other things the following:

"As used in this title 'invested capital' does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title nor money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

"(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, the actual cash value of such property as of January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year: * * *"

954 In the construction of the Act of Congress of which this definition is a part, this legislative definition of the term "invested capital" must be accepted as final and conclusive, regardless of any preconceived notion the public generally, or this court, may have as to the meaning of that term.

955 In the construction of this statute it must also be remembered that it is the settled rule not to extend the provisions of taxing statutes by implication, or to enlarge their operation, so as to embrace matters not specifically covered thereby. Gould v. Gould, 245 U. S. 141.

956 The trial court based its judgment for the defendant upon the conclusion of law that the collateral deposited by Cartier as security for his liability as an indorser of the partnership notes became a part of the working capital and was used and employed in the business of the company to the same extent as if it had been paid directly into the partnership funds.

957 This conclusion of law is not supported by the facts found by the court or by any evidence in this record. The articles of co-partnership provide that the paid-in capital of the partnership is to be $30,000.00, any or all portions of which amount is to be furnished to the partnership, upon notes signed by it, and to be paid at the earliest practicable opportunity out of the net earnings of the partnership.

958 It would seem unnecessary to say that a private contract between these parties would not change or affect, in the slightest degree, the plain and positive terms of the statute, declaring what shall be included and what shall not be included as "invested capital," for the purpose of this tax. If the articles of co-partnership had provided that the paid-in capital of the partnership should be $30,000.00, one-third of which should be paid in cash or in property by the partners, and $20,000.00 to be borrowed from a bank upon the notes of the partnership, indorsed by the partners, and further secured by the deposit of such collateral as the bank might demand, the money borrowed in pursuance of such partnership agreement, fixing the total capital of the partnership at $30,000.00, would necessarily be rejected as invested capital in the computation of surplus income taxes levied under this act. It logically follows that, if under this statutory definition of invested capital, money borrowed could not be included as capital where some substantial amount of cash had actually been paid into the partnership fund by the partners, such borrowed money can not be reckoned as invested capital where the partners contributed neither cash nor property to the partnership capital.

959 The original plan of operation written in the partnership agreement was abandoned as early as 1914, and thereafter the money used in the partnership business was borrowed directly from the bank upon the notes of the partnership, payable unconditionally and at certain fixed times, regardless of net earnings or any other contingency. While these notes were indorsed by the individual partners, nevertheless the money was borrowed by the partnership for partnership purposes, and it was primarily liable for the payment of these notes. Collateral held by the bank, a stranger to the partnership, whether the property of one or of both partners, was a mere incident to the loan, and can in no wise affect the character of the transaction.

960 It is therefore wholly unnecessary to determine whether under the original agreement the money to be furnished by Cartier, to be repaid out of the partnership earnings, would or would not be borrowed money within the meaning of this act. Nor is it important at whose suggestion this plan of operation was changed and the new plan adopted. It is sufficient for the purposes of this opinion to determine the legal effect of these transactions as they occurred during the taxing period of 1917. The evidence in relation to these transactions permits of no conclusion other than that the money borrowed from the bank upon the notes of the partnership was "borrowed money," within the meaning of Section 207 of the Act of Congress approved October 3, 1917.

961 The clear, positive and unambiguous language of Section 207 of this act is not subject to any other construction, regardless of the exigencies of any particular case. First it provides that borrowed money or other property shall not be included in the term "invested capital" as used in that title. Paragraph "A" of that section then specifically states what shall be included in determining the "invested capital" of a corporation or partnership as follows: "(1) Actual cash paid in." There is no claim made by the government that there was any "actual cash paid in" to the partnership funds other than the money borrowed from the bank on the notes of the partnership, endorsed by the partners, the endorsement of Cartier being secured by collateral deposited by him. "(2) The actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership." In this case there was no tangible property paid in by either partner for the purpose named or for any other purpose. The collateral deposited by Cartier could not upon any reasonable hypothesis be held to be "tangible property paid in" to the partnership. It was not deposited with, transferred or assigned to the partnership and the partnership never acquired any right, title or property interest therein, legal or equitable. This collateral was deposited with the bank as part of the loan transaction. Cartier never parted with the title or ownership therein. The bank held it, not as owner but as pledgee merely. "(3) Paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year."

962 Whether this partnership used or employed in its business paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year is a question of fact. The trial court found as a fact that at the beginning of the taxable year the liability of the firm exceeded its assets by the sum of $7,218.85. This court has no authority to determine the weight of the evidence. R. S. Sections 649 and 1011. If the finding of fact made by the trial court is sustained by some substantial evidence, then it must be accepted by this court as a final determination of the facts in issue.

963 There is practically no dispute in the evidence upon which the trial court made this finding of fact. It had been the custom of each partner, with the consent of the other, practically from the time the partnership was organized, to withdraw earnings of the partnership in advance of the ascertainment of the exact profits and a formal division of the same. These withdrawals were charged against the partners respectively on the partnership books of account, and whenever there was a formal division of the profits the amount due to each partner was credited to his account as against amounts that were withdrawn by him. On the first day of January, 1917, it appeared that Cartier had withdrawn in the aggregate, during the life of the partnership, the sum of $11,556.37, in excess of all sums credited to him. Holland had also withdrawn $18,106.28 in excess of his credits. The evidence further shows that these withdrawals were made in anticipation of a distribution of the profits, to be credited to them as against these withdrawals, that would finally balance their accounts. That this was the purpose and understanding of the partners fully appears by their testimony and particularly the testimony of Holland, as follows:

"The Court: It would be liquidated by dividends you declared?"

"A. Eventually."

"The Court: And credited yourself with?"

"A. Yes."

964 In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the partnership could not require a partner to return to it his share of the actual profits anticipated by these withdrawals. The strongest inference which anything in this record would justify as to the duties of the partners to each other to repay these items charged against them is that each should repay the amount he had withdrawn in excess of his share of the profits. This would mean in the aggregate $7,218.85, just enough to pay the general debts and leave no surplus. In any event, these profits were drawn by the partners and were not used in the partnership business. The claim that they were used in the partnership business as bills receivable, so they would furnish a basis of credit, is not tenable. These partners were the sole owners of the partnership business and in full control of its affairs; they were each individually liable for all the debts of the partnership, so that whether they were liable to the partnership for the full amount of these withdrawals, regardless of profits, could in no wise affect the security of creditors for the payment of their debts.

965 It would therefore appear that this finding of the trial court is fully sustained by substantial evidence.

966 Section 9 [209] of this act provides that in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital (and, of course, that means invested capital within the meaning of the act), or not more than a nominal capital, there shall be levied, assessed, collected and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by Section 201, a tax equivalent to eight per centum of the net income. This section of the act would appear to have been intended to cover just such conditions as are here presented.

967 For the reasons above stated, this judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with this opinion. [The District Court decision is reported at 269 Fed. 647.]

968 Revenue Act of 1917: Decision of Court: Invested Capital: Selling

566 Agent: Taxability Under Section 209.—Plaintiff corporation acted as sole agent for a mining company under an arrangement contemplating that it should discount drafts in the case of foreign shipments and pay the amount of the invoices in the case of domestic shipments, retaining in both cases only commissions and interest, so that the principal was constantly in the corporation's debt for advances. The corporation was incorporated for $25,000, and in 1917 had capital, at the beginning of the year, of $51,074, and income of $26,890.34 from commissions from selling for account of its principal, $22,133.25 profits from buying and selling on its own account, and $5,851.90 from interest. In 1915, the proportion of gross profits from trading on its own account was 23%; in 1916, 9.8%; and in 1917, 45%. Its profits during 1917 were retained, and not distributed as dividends, and its officers made substantial advances to aid it in financing the business. The capital of the corporation was not used merely to pay ordinary expenses, but to assist in paying advances to its principal, as well as to trade on its own account. During 1917 its capital was engaged in its business and was being turned over in connection with sales, its advances including capital available or capital repaid from advances. On December 31, 1917, when its bank balance was larger than in any other month of the year, it was only $16,501.67, while its capital and surplus amounted to $78,330. Held, that such corporation did not merely buy and sell on commission but traded substantially on its own account, and had a substantial invested capital which was employed in making advances to or on account of its principal, and also in buying merchandise on its own account for profitable sale, and hence it was not entitled to assessment under Section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917, which applies only to businesses having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital.

Reprints of Profits-Taxes Rulings From The Internal Revenue Bulletins.

FOREWORD

Early in 1920 the Government published its 1919 Cumulative Bulletin of Special Rulings, which rulings had been issued confidentially during 1919 for the exclusive use of the Bureau's employees. During 1920 by a change of policy, continued in 1921 and 1922, rulings were made public week by week. So far as appears, the Bulletins will continue to issue during 1923.

On the pages following are reproduced in full, verbatim as originally published by the Government in the Bulletins mentioned above, those rulings having specific application to the War-Profits and Excess-Profits Tax Titles of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921. This Supplement (and that it is a supplement must be borne in mind constantly) will be up-to-date at all times.

Rulings based on the 1917 Acts are included to the extent that they are applicable, directly or indirectly, to the provisions of the 1918 and 1921 Acts, but not otherwise. Excluded rulings relate in very large measure to the former tax on individuals.

Rulings bearing on provisions of the 1918 law applicable now to a restricted degree only, or entirely inapplicable now, are nevertheless included.

The table below is explanatory of the abbreviations used by the Bureau.

A, B, C, etc.=The names of individuals.

A. R. M.=Committee on Appeals and Review Memorandum.

A. R. R.=Committee on Appeals and Review Recommendation.

C. B.=Cumulative Bulletin.

Ct. D.=Court Decision.

I. T.=Income Tax Unit.

M, N, X, Y, Z, etc.=The names of corporations, places, or businesses, according to context.

Mim.=Mimeograph Letter.

O. or L. O.=Solicitor's Law Opinion.

O. D.=Office Decision.

Op. A. G.=Opinion of Attorney General.

S.=Solicitor's Memorandum.

Sol. Op.=Solicitor's Opinion.

T. B. M.=Advisory Tax Board Memorandum.

T. B. R.=Advisory Tax Board Recommendation.

T. D.=Treasury Decision.

x is used to represent a certain number, and when used with the word "dollars" represents a sum of money.

Each Special Bulletin ruling is cited to its source. In the 1919, 1920 and 1921 series the rulings are cited as follows: 29-20-1081: A. R. M. 71. This particular ruling, then, is the 71st memorandum of the Committee on Appeals and Review, is the 1081st ruling made, and was first published in Bulletin No. 29, of the 1920 Series. A new series of ruling numbers (beginning with ruling 1) was started with the first issue of 1922. Each Bulletin issue is designated by a number, as 1, 2, 3, etc., and the 1922 group of weekly issues is embodied in "Volume I," and that for 1923 in "Volume II." The old numbering following the letters characterizing the rulings, as A. R. M. 145, is continued; i. e., a new series is not started. However, the old characterization of "O. D." is dropped, "I. T." being substituted. Thus: I-1-14: I. T. 1155, is the 1155th ruling of the Income Tax Unit (in effect the 1155th O. D., or office decision), is the 14th ruling made in 1922, and was first published in Bulletin No. 1, of Volume I of the Internal Revenue Bulletin (i. e., Bulletin No. 1 of the 1922 Series).

Each special ruling when originally published is assigned to a particular Article of Regulations 45 or of Regulations 62. (See "Caution" on the perpetual check sheet facing page 401.)

We continue this assignment in the Supplement, giving to each Article its separate page or series of pages, where the special rulings assigned to it are reproduced in the order of their issue.

The rulings appearing under each Article are numbered serially, by us, in bold face type, as 1, 2, 3, etc., the serial number appearing in each case, at the end of the ruling, on the left.

The Articles of Regulations 45 and 62, referring to the 1918 and 1921 profits tax laws, respectively, as the reader knows, are grouped under the respective Law Sections. The grouping is clearly shown in the Tables of Contents, beginning on pages 316 and 425, respectively.

The number of each Article of Regulations 45 (beginning on page 318), and the number of each Article of Regulations 62 (beginning on page 427) is clearly shown in bold face type. Thus may one turn quickly to the Bulletin Rulings bearing on any particular Article, as the Article number captions on the Supplementary Bulletin Rulings pages are in sequence.

The Supplementary Bulletin Rulings Pages are not numbered. As stated before each Article has its page or series of pages—as Sec. 326, Art. 850.-1, or -2, -3, -4, etc., and each special ruling is numbered serially. On the last page of the Supplement, immediately preceding the blue pages on which is printed the Excess-Profits Tax Law for 1921 (Revenue Act of 1921), is an always-up-to-date table, giving a complete list of existing Article numbers, showing, by serial number, either the last published Special Ruling assigned to that Article number, or stating by use of the word “none” that there have been no Special Rulings assigned to certain articles. Thus is there a perpetual, automatic check on the completeness of the Supplement.

Unless otherwise noted, all rulings are based on the provisions of the 1918 Act and the formal regulations relating thereto.

Very Important Caution.

The following is printed on the front cover of each Internal Revenue Bulletin published by the Government.

“The rulings reported in the Internal Revenue Bulletin are for the information of taxpayers and their counsel as showing the trend of official opinion in the administration of the Revenue Acts; they have none of the force or effect of Treasury Decisions and do not commit the Department to any interpretation of the law which has not been formally approved and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Each ruling embodies the administrative application of the law and Treasury Decisions to the entire state of facts upon which a particular case rests. It is especially to be noted that the same result will not necessarily be reached in another case unless all the material facts are identical with those of the reported case. As it is not always feasible to publish a complete statement of the facts underlying each ruling, there can be no assurance that any new case is identical with the reported case. As bearing out this distinction, it may be observed that the rulings published from time to time may appear to reverse rulings previously published.

“Officers of the Bureau of Internal Revenue are especially cautioned against reaching a conclusion in any case merely on the basis of similarity to a published Income, Sales, Capital-Stock, Estate, Child-Labor, or miscellaneous tax ruling, and should base their judgment on the application of all pertinent provisions of the law and Treasury Decisions to all of the facts in each case. The Income and Sales Tax and other rulings should be used merely as aids in studying the law and the Treasury Decisions.”

21-21-1655: O. D. 928.

When a corporation may deduct the amount of its net operating loss for the calendar year 1919, which is in excess of the net income for the calendar year 1918, in computing net income for the calendar year 1920 in accordance with section 204 of the Revenue Act of 1918, the excess profits tax imposed by section 301 and limited by section 302 is upon the net income so determined.

Article 714.—Computation of Tax on Income from Government Contracts (Reg. 45—¶604, ante): (Reg. 62—¶1137, post).

1-19-113: T. B. M. 4.

In the case of a fiscal-year corporation the computation under section 301 (c) (1) should be based on the entire net income for the fiscal year even though no part of the income from Government contracts was derived after January 1, 1919.

The following question has been submitted:

In the case of a fiscal-year corporation should the excess tax for 1919 based on income from a Government contract be prorated to apply only to income attributable to that contract in 1919, or should the tax be computed on the basis that the income was received throughout the fiscal year?

The computation under section 301 (c) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1918 should be based on the entire net income for the taxable year, or, in other words, should be on the basis that the income was received throughout the fiscal year. In the judgment of the board any other ruling would be in conflict with the express provisions of the statute. It is a fundamental principle of the application of the provisions of the several acts relating to fiscal years that no adjustment should be made even though it can be definitely shown what proportion of the income was derived during each portion of the fiscal year.

A Government contract entered into in 1917, amended as to some of its provisions in 1918, and further modified in 1919, is in effect the same contract as entered into in 1917 if the original contract has not been revoked or supplanted by a new contract. Therefore, income derived from the contract should be computed in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 301.

28-19-620: A. R. M. 5.

If a corporation has a net income from a Government contract and sustains a net loss from other operations in the submission of a fiscal year return for a period ending in 1919, the loss may be deducted from the income from the Government contract.

Inquiry is as to the amount of net income to be taxed in the case of a fiscal-year corporation submitting a return for a period ending in 1919 if there is profit from a Government contract and loss from other operations.

Section 301 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides:

For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation which derives in such a year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, a tax equal to the sum of the following: * * *

It is to be noted that the tax is upon the net income of the corporation. The prorating in parts 1 and 2 of paragraph (c) of this section is purely for computation purposes. Accordingly, it is recommended that a corporation having a net loss from operations other than those relating to Government contracts, and a profit from Government contracts, be permitted to deduct the loss in order to ascertain the net income upon which the tax is to be computed.

2-20-666: O. D. 359.

A corporation which contracted with another corporation to manufacture and deliver machinery to be used in manufacturing ammunition, but did not produce or furnish ammunition or any component part thereof, nor perform any direct service in connection with the production of ammunition manufactured by another corporation under contract for the United States Government, is not a subcontractor within the meaning of section 1, Revenue Act of 1918.

The excess profits credit and the war profits credit, as provided in section 301 (c) 1, Revenue Act of 1918, and article 714 of Regulations 45, are computed on the basis of the invested capital for the taxable year, not on the invested capital for 1918.

A contract between the Government and a corporation which was entered into and enforceable against the corporation prior to April 6, 1917, but which was not executed in the form prescribed by section 3744, Revised Statutes, so as to become enforceable against the Government until after that date, is not a "Government contract" within the meaning of that term as defined in the Revenue Act of 1918, and the corporation will not be required to compute its tax upon the profits arising therefrom in accordance with section 301(c) of that Act.

The income of affiliated corporations which is derived from Government contracts is taxable (except as provided in sec. 240(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918) upon the basis of the total sum received from that source by the group and not upon the basis of the separate amount received by each corporation.

In 1919 a corporation derived a profit in excess of $10,000 from Government contracts, but sustained a net loss on other operations. If the amount of the excess profits credit exceeds the company's total net income from all sources for 1919 no tax will be imposed upon the portion of its net income for that year which was derived from Government contracts.

Since the company's net income included an item of net profit from Government contracts in excess of $10,000, it will be required to supply fully all of the data called for by the supporting schedules of Form 1120-S.

I('22)—2-16: Sol. Op. 128.

WAR EXCESS PROFITS TAX—SECTIONS 1 AND 301(c), REVENUE ACT OF 1918—GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Supplemental contracts made with a department of the United States Government after November 11, 1918, modifying original contracts entered into between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, between the same parties, are "Government contracts" entered into between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, within the meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918 and the income therefrom is taxable under section 301(c) of the above Act.

Reference is made to the proposed letter to the internal-revenue agent in charge, which raises the question whether the income from certain contracts between the M Company and the United States affecting original contracts entered into June —, 1918, between the same parties, is income from "Government contracts" entered into between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, within the meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918 and taxable under section 301 (c) of that Act.

Section 1 of the Revenue Act of 1918 reads in part as follows:

The term "Government contract" means (a) a contract made with the United States, or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency, under the United States and acting in its behalf, or with any agency controlled by any of the above if the contract is for the benefit of the United States, * * *.

Section 301(c) of the above Act provides in part as follows:

For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation which derives in such a year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917 and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, a tax equal to the sum of the following: * * *

The facts are as follows: In January, 1918, a department of the United States Government entered into a contract jointly with the O Company and the P Company for the construction of certain vessels at an agreed price of 40x dollars. At the same time another contract was entered into with the above-named companies for the construction of a certain number of vessels of another type at an agreed price of 153x dollars. Subsequently, the O Company and the P Company were merged and the name changed to the M Company.

The original contracts contained a provision that the Government reserved the right to make changes in the minor details of the plans or specifications, and such changes would not invalidate the contract; the amount to be added or deducted from the contract price by reason of such changes to be agreed upon in writing by the contractor or contractors and the officer in charge, who was also the responsible officer for directing such changes. Many minor changes were made in the specifications by the officer in charge, and those under his direction, but no formal contract was ever executed covering such items. Certain contracts were entered into, however, which were formally executed on behalf of the Government. The first of those contracts, dated December —, 1919, involving  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, related to the construction and equipment of the first-mentioned vessels and provided for an additional lavatory, windlass chain, locker, chain stoppers, blinds for officers' quarters, screens for air ports, extension of frame No. 34 athwartships, booby hatch, entrance, omission of syphons, changing whistle, difference in steel, difference in furniture, and additional drafting due to boiler change. The second contract, dated May —, 1920, involving 2-5x dollars, provided for additional skags, filler pieces, under decking, and additional riveting on these vessels. The third contract, dated March —, 1920, involving  $12\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, related to the construction and equipment of the stated number of the other type of vessels. Many changes were made in the specifications, both as to these vessels and the machinery and equipment. Some items originally specified were omitted entirely. Additional machinery and furniture and equipment were added, and, in some instances, changes were made to secure a better quality of material and equipment. The fourth contract, dated March —, 1920, involving 6x dollars, provided for many changes in the construction and material for these vessels.

Parties to an unperformed contract may by mutual consent modify it by altering or adding provisions, provided the modifications do not make it illegal or violative of public policy. Whether such alterations constitute a new contract, thus doing away with the obligations of the former contract, or are merely supplementary thereto, depends upon the nature of the later agreements and the intentions of the contracting parties. Nourse v. United States (25 Ct. Cls., 7); Mensfee v. Rankins (Ky., 164 S. W., 365); Uhlig v. Barnum (Neb., 61 N. W., 749); Pulpwood Company v. Perry (Mich., 122 N. W., 552).

One written contract complete in itself will supersede another one made prior thereto in relation to the same subject matter. It is contended by the taxpayer that the subsequent contracts in the instant case are complete in themselves. They provide chiefly, however, for changes and additions that go toward the completion of the construction and equipment covered by the original contracts, which in itself makes them dependent upon those contracts. The contracts of December —, 1919, and March —, 1920, provide that the "payment of the amount stipulated herein for each vessel shall be made on a percentage basis in accordance with the terms of the original contract." The subsequent contracts have entirely omitted certain essential obligations imposed on those who enter into contracts with the Government which are clearly set forth in the original contracts, such as sufficient insurance on work as completed; liability of contractor for all damages that may occur during the course of construction; necessary police protection; suspension of 8-hour law; nonviolation of child-labor law; prohibition against employment of convict labor; protection of United States against patent infringement; forfeiture in case satisfactory progress is not made on the work; and non-assignability of contract. That the later agreements are not complete in themselves is further evidenced by the fact that there is no express cancellation of the original contracts. On the contrary, each of the subsequent contracts contains the following provision:

And, whereas, it is found advantageous and in the best interests of the service of the United States to modify the provisions of said contract as specified below; now, therefore, It is hereby agreed * * * that the provisions of the original contract dated June —, 1918, shall be changed in the following particulars, and in these respects only * * *.

The above provision, together with the fact that the directors of the corporation in the resolutions ratifying the subsequent contracts referred to and accepted them as supplementary contracts is indicative of the intention of the parties.

The department, with the approval of this office, has already ruled upon a similar question in the case of the R Company (O. D. 295, C. B. 1, p. 12 [Ruling No. 2 of this series.]). This company, on September —, 1917, entered into a contract with the commanding officer for the handling of certain supplies. In July, 1918, a supplementary agreement was entered into changing the basis of computation of profit. In March, 1919, a second supplementary contract was made which materially changed certain provisions of the original contract. The taxpayer contended, as in the instant case, that the second supplementary contract constituted a new contract, the income from which was not taxable under section 301(c) of the Revenue Act of 1918. That contention was answered in the following language:

This office holds that the agreement entered into in March, 1919, is in effect the same contract as that entered into in September, 1917, since the contract as of the latter date has never been revoked and supplanted by a new contract, but has only been modified by amending some of its provisions. Therefore, the income derived from the contract as of September —, 1917, as amended in July, 1918, and further amended in March, 1919, should be computed in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 301.

In view of the foregoing, this office is of the opinion that the subsequent contracts between the United States Government and the M Company are supplementary to those of June —, 1918, and that the income therefrom is income from "Government contracts" entered into between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, as defined by section 1 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and therefore taxable under section 301(c) of the above Act.

If exact determination of income arising from Government contracts distinctively from other income is impossible, an approximation based on the proportion which sales to the Government bears to other sales should be used only in case approximations based on the respective cost and selling price are inapplicable. The approximation should be based upon the allocation of costs and allocation of selling price, in the most accurate manner possible from available records.

Amortization is not to be charged exclusively against income from Government contracts, and selling and administrative expenses not applicable to the Government contracts should not be so charged.

Representatives of the M Company state that it is impossible to ascertain profits from Government orders separately from profits on civilian orders, and ask:

(a) What method of apportionment of these profits is to be used in submitting a return for fiscal year ending June 30, 1919?

(b) What disposition is to be made of an amount claimed for amortization?

The answer to the first is that when profits can not be definitely allocated as to a Government contract, the proportion which the sales from the Government contract bears to the total sales is the proportion of income which is deemed to have arisen from the Government contract.

This answer presents a fair approximation under the following circumstances:

(a) If all articles made are of the same size, or grade, or if not, if the proportion sold to civilian trade of each kind is the same as the proportion sold to the Government.

(b) If the articles on hand at the beginning of the year cost the same as those manufactured during the year, or if the same proportion were sold out of those on hand at the beginning to civilians as were sold to the Government, or if all orders were filled exclusively either out of the ones on hand at the beginning or out of the ones manufactured during the year.

(c) If the prices charged the Government are identical with the prices charged the civilian trade.

The presence of all of these elements is so improbable that the Committee deems that the method proposed should be utilized only in case other methods likely to afford a closer approximation are inapplicable.

There is a probability that the inquiry was prompted by the fact that it is impossible to determine the exact cost of lots of articles made on Government contracts as distinguished from the exact cost of lots of articles made for civilian trade. Records may be available to an extent which will enable an approximation of the unit costs and selling prices from which an allocation may be determined. By working from the costs standpoint a method of closer approximation may be found.

In taking inventories of the stock on hand there should have been some method of ascertaining the unit price of articles that is reasonably accurate. This would apply as to articles of different kinds and grades, as well as to a condition in which the articles were all of the same kind and grade.

It is likely that articles made during the year were not made at the same costs as those on hand at the beginning. Accordingly, the first step would be to ascertain which of the articles on hand at the beginning were sold to the Government and which to civilian trade. If not otherwise accurately ascertainable, it is suggested that this be determined by assuming that the first articles delivered during the fiscal year were delivered out of inventory, by taking the dates of delivery, respectively, to the Government and to the civilian trade, and apportioning these articles accordingly, having in mind, of course, the different grades and sizes. The selling price of these articles would be offset by the value at which inventoried, so that the profit could be determined.

If the records are as incomplete as the letter of inquiry indicates, it is hardly likely that the costs of finishing the articles in process of manufacture at the beginning of the year can be determined separately from the costs of articles which were placed in manufacture and completed during the year. Nevertheless, the ordinary manufacturing and trading statement usually gives the costs of goods completed during the year. Inasmuch as it is essential that these costs be allocated, if the proper inventory is made as to grades and sizes it is likely that the records will contain sufficient information to show the total manufacturing costs of each kind and grade of articles completed during the year. The value of the articles sold, as to kind and grade, is then easily ascertainable by deducting the closing inventory. The proportion sold to the Government to the total sold, as to each kind, affords basis for determining the costs of each kind sold to the Government. These costs, deducted from the selling price of each kind, would give the gross profit on Government contracts as to articles manufactured during the year, which, added to the gross profit from those delivered out of opening inventory should give the total gross profit.

Assuming other expenses can not be properly apportioned as to each source of income, then the proportion which the gross income from the Government contracts bears to the gross income from other sources determines the basis of apportionment.

In answering the second query, it is believed that the taxpayer's representatives should be informed that amortization is not exclusively chargeable against the profits made on the Government contract, and that part of this amortization is probably applicable to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. As to selling and administrative expenses, it should be borne in mind that part of these may be exclusively applicable to articles sold to civilian trade—as, for example, costs of selling organization and of advertising, which are not ordinarily essential to the procurement of Government contracts.

Procurement orders issued after November 11, 1918, in confirmation of informal orders entered into prior to November 12, 1918, are Government contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, within the meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918 and whether fulfilled in 1918 or 1919 will be taxed at rates applicable to Government contracts.

In so far as stock purchased for Government contracts is used or useful for commercial purposes no separate inventory thereof need be made for Government contract accounting, such inventories being treated as commercial inventories in the ordinary course at the close of the taxable year 1919. If, however, a portion of such goods purchased is useful only for Government contracts and is still on hand at the close of the taxable year 1919, such goods should be inventoried at the then value if lower than cost and assigned to the Government contract section of the income statement for that year.

Advertising and sales promotion are not a part of the necessary expenses of Government contracts, except as relating to such contracts, and are not proper deductions from the gross income derived from Government sales.

Such expenditures, if entered into on a large scale at a time when the Government was doing practically no commercial business, may be treated either as an expense of the year in which incurred and deducted from the commercial income only, or they may be treated as deferred items in the balance sheet and set up as good will thereon, being in the nature of expenditures for the building up of future business and not for the business secured during the taxable year in which such expenditures were incurred.

Method of computing the war profits and excess profits taxes in the case of a corporation which has income during a fiscal year ended in 1919 in excess of $10,000 from Government contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918.

(1) The tax for the full fiscal year shall first be computed at the 1918 rates as if the fiscal year were the calendar year 1918. The same proportion of the tax so computed, which the income derived from Government contracts is of the total income from all sources, represents the tax due on the income from the Government contracts

(2) To compute the tax at the 1918 rates on the net income derived from sources other than Government contracts, the tax attributable to Government contracts is first deducted from the total tax computed at the 1918 rates, and the difference is reduced to the proportionate part thereof that the number of months of the fiscal year falling within 1918 is of the full fiscal year.

(3) The tax must then be computed on the entire income from all sources for the full fiscal year at the 1919 rates. The same proportionate part of this tax is taken as the net income from sources other than Government contracts is of the total net income. This amount is then reduced to the same proportionate part thereof that the number of months of the fiscal year falling within 1919 is of the full fiscal year.

The sum of the results obtained in following the procedure outlined in the three preceding paragraphs will be the total tax.

For example: Assume a corporation having a total net income of $120,000 for the full fiscal year ended March 31, 1919, $48,000 of which was derived from Government contracts. Assume further that the total war profits and excess profits tax computed at the 1918 rates is $60,000, and the total war profits and excess profits at the 1919 rates is $30,000.

The tax attributable to Government contracts would be two-fifths of $60,000, or $24,000. Deducting this amount from $60,000 leaves $36,000. The tax on the remaining net income at 1918 rates would be three-fourths of $36,000, or $27,000.

Applying the 1919 rates to the income not attributable to Government contracts would result in a tax of three-fifths of $30,000, or $18,000; but since only three months of the return period falls within 1919, the tax would be one-fourth of $18,000, or $4,500. The total war profits and excess profits tax would, therefore, be the sum of $24,000, $27,000, and $4,500, or $55,500.

The computation necessary to arrive at this result should be shown in a supplementary statement attached to the return. These computations will not apply to the income tax, which will be computed on the entire net income, as provided in section 205(b) of the Act. In the illustration given, the amount of war profits and excess profits tax to be credited against net income, in computing the income tax at both the 12 per cent and 10 per cent rates, would be $55,500, as computed above.

Revenue Act of 1921

A taxpayer made a return for seven months under the Revenue Act of 1921, which disclosed an actual net income of less than $25,000. The question was submitted as to the proper method of computing the income and excess profits taxes of the taxpayer when section 302 of that Act is applied in determining the excess-profits tax.

Held, that in order for a corporation whose return covers a period of less than one year to have the full benefit of section 302, which allows an exemption of $3,000 in all cases irrespective of whether the return is for an entire year or only for a fractional part of a year, it is necessary to compute the excess-profits tax upon the actual amount of the income shown by the return, less $3,000. In computing the income tax, however, the credit of $2,000 must be reduced to such a proportion of the full credit as the number of months in the period for which the return is made bears to 12 months. This amount should be added to the amount of the excess-profits tax and the sum deducted from the net income shown by the return. The net income should then be placed on an annual basis and the income tax computed. The income tax should then be reduced to the basis of the period covered by the return and, when added to the excess-profits tax, will give the total tax liability of the corporation.

Held also, that although the taxpayer's net income when raised to an annual basis exceeded $25,000, that fact did not destroy its right to the proportionate part of the $2,000 credit in computing the income tax, as the right to such credit is determined by the actual amount of the net income shown by the return and not by the amount which is disclosed when the net income is placed on an annual basis.

Applying this method of computation to a fictitious case will give the following results:

Where a corporation doing a commission and brokerage business satisfies the requirements of a personal-service corporation, except that it in part employs capital, surplus, and borrowed funds to make large advances to customers and receives more interest than it pays as a result of such transactions, it should be assessed under section 303. The income from commissions and brokerage should be considered as arising from personal service, and the remainder of the income as derived from the use of capital.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

Inquiry is made whether the value of the silver contained in the ore mined by the M Company, amounting to about 23 per cent in value, should be treated as the value of a by-product obtained as a result of the company's gold mining operations and therefore exempt from profits tax as a portion of the company's income derived from the mining of gold.

Held, that under section 304 of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, only the income derived from the gold itself was exempt from profits tax. This exemption has not been extended to income derived from other metals, although they may have represented nothing more than by-products incidental to gold mining. This construction was announced in articles 752 and 753 of Regulations 45 and 62, covering the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, respectively. Article 753 assumes the case of a corporation engaged in mining both gold and other rare metals, and explains that in such case only the income attributable to the mining of gold is exempt from profits tax.

The income of corporations derived from gold mining was never exempt from income tax, but was only exempt from the war-profits or the excess-profits tax for the years 1917 to 1921, inclusive, or for fiscal years falling within those calendar years. As the profits tax ceased to be effective at January 1, 1922, income from gold mining is now taxed in the same way as income from other mining operations.

Method of ascertaining a corporation's average net income and average invested capital for the prewar period where corporation closes its books on the basis of a fiscal year which differs from the calendar year.

The Income Tax Unit has requested a ruling as to the method by which a corporation is to ascertain the average net income and the average invested capital for the prewar period as called for in section 311 (2) in cases where a corporation closes its books on the basis of a fiscal year differing from the calendar year. The prewar period is defined in section 310 of the Revenue Act of 1918, which reads: "That as used in this title the terms 'prewar period' means the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, or, if a corporation was not in existence during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of which the corporation was in existence." The problem presented by the inquiry of the Income Tax Unit is as to how the fiscal year periods are to be made to conform to the calendar years specified for the prewar period.

It is recommended that the computation be made as follows:

The starting point for each year is the beginning of the fiscal year ending in 1911, 1912, and 1913, respectively, and the invested capital should be ascertained as at those dates. To these sums should be added any contributions of capital between the beginning of each such fiscal year and January 1, 1911, 1912, and 1913, respectively, and corresponding deductions should be made in respect of any dividends and any refunds of capital during those respective periods. To these balances should be added a pro rata share of the earnings of the respective fiscal years, and the totals thus arrived at will be deemed to be the invested capital of the taxpayer at January 1, 1911, 1912, and 1913, respectively. Taxpayers should file with their returns copies of their balance sheets at the beginning of each fiscal year and a schedule for each year showing the adjustments made in computing the invested capital as at the beginning of each calendar year during the prewar period.

Where a taxpayer has such accounting records as will enable him to prepare an accurate balance sheet showing the true surplus and undivided profits at the beginning of each one of the prewar calendar years and an accurate income account for such years, he may make the computation upon this basis and explain the method used in such detail as will enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to determine whether such basis is proper.

Where a taxpayer has not been in business during the whole of the prewar period the above methods will be applicable to such full calendar years during the whole of which years the taxpayer was in business.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit fixing the deduction to be used in computing the tax at 7 per cent be affirmed.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit fixing the deduction at 7 per cent. for the purpose of computing the excess profits tax instead of 8 per cent claimed by the corporation. A number of adjustments have been made by the Unit, all of which have been conceded by the corporation except the adjustment with respect to the percentage deduction.

This corporation was organized in July, 1915, under the laws of the State of New York, with an authorized capital stock of 5x dollars and succeeded a corporation known as the N Company.

It appears that prior to 1910, the corporation known as the N Company owned a frame mill building, some real estate, and some water power rights. The majority of the stock of this corporation was owned by one, A, and his brother, B, the latter owning 10 per cent of the stock. The corporation had outstanding two issues of bonds—first mortgage bonds in the sum of 4x dollars and second mortgage bonds in the sum of 6x dollars which were largely held by creditors of the corporation.

Sometime in June, 1914, the corporation became insolvent and stopped operations. Bankruptcy proceedings were instituted and in September, 1914, the corporation was declared by legal proceedings to be a bankrupt. Proceedings were started to foreclose the first mortgage. In March, 1915, a sale under the first mortgage was held at which time the property was acquired on behalf of the first mortgage bondholders at a price of 5x dollars, which represented the face of the first mortgage bonds and accrued interest. In June, 1915, steps were taken to form a new corporation and in July of that year the new corporation came into existence and took over the water power rights, real estate and buildings of the old corporation from the trustee. Stock of the new corporation was divided among the first mortgage bondholders in proportion to their ownership of bonds.

The newly organized corporation made extensive changes in the water power and in the machinery. The machinery which had been left at the plant in 1914, when the old corporation closed down was practically worthless. The new corporation installed at a considerable expense some new machinery and changed practically the entire system of production. New banking connections were formed and additional funds were acquired through these connections for the purpose of securing additional working capital.

The only points of similarity between the M Company and the N Company are that the product manufactured is sold under the same trade name and is produced on the same location.

The attorney for this corporation contends in a memorandum brief submitted that it would not be fair and equitable to say that the trade or business carried on by the new corporation was substantially a continuation of the trade or business carried on by the N Company and that the N Company had no good will to continue for the reason that it became bankrupt in 1914, and was closed for a period of approximately one year before the new corporation came into existence. The attorney submits that the Income Tax Unit was in error in fixing the deduction at 7 per cent for the purpose of computing the tax, rather than at 8 per cent claimed by the corporation, for the reason that the new corporation did not succeed to the trade or business of the N Company since it had become bankrupt and had not been in operation since the early part of 1914. In this connection it is contended that since the N Company had not been operating for a period of over one year there was no trade or business in existence at the time the new corporation was organized for the purpose of acquiring the assets formerly owned by the N Company; therefore, since no business was in existence it was impossible for the business of the new corporation to be considered a continuation of the business of the bankrupt corporation.

Section 204 of the Revenue Act of 1917 deals with the percentage deduction allowed to corporations or partnerships not in existence during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period and provides in part as follows:

A trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership, or individual, although formally organized or reorganized on or after January second, nineteen hundred and thirteen, which is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, shall, for the purposes of this title, be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of its predecessor prior to that date shall be deemed to have been its net income and invested capital.

Article 22 of Regulations 41 reads as follows:

If a trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership or individual was formally organized or reorganized on or after January 2, 1913, but is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, then the corporation or partnership shall be deemed to have been in existence, or the individual shall be deemed to have been engaged in the trade or business, prior to that date, and for the purpose of computing the deduction the net income and invested capital of the predecessor shall be deemed to have been the net income and invested capital of the present owner for the prewar period.

The Income Tax Unit has held in a specific case where an individual was engaged in the hardware business during the prewar period and made more than 9 per cent on his invested capital, but subsequent to the prewar period the hardware business was sold and the individual established a furniture store and made over 9 per cent on his invested capital in that business, that the deduction should be 8 per cent since he is now carrying on a business in which he was not engaged during the prewar period. The Unit has also held in the case of an individual buying a hotel business in 1914, which had been in existence during the prewar period that the deduction should be computed at 7 per cent, but since no records were available so that the average invested capital for that period could be ascertained a claim for final assessment under the provisions of section 210 and articles 18, 24 and 52 of Regulations 41 would be in order provided the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to satisfactorily determine the invested capital for the prewar period.

In the instant case, the M Company came into existence in 1915, after its predecessor, the N Company, had ceased to operate as a going concern and had not operated for a period of one year or more prior to the organization of the new company. However, it appears that this corporation acquired the assets of the bankrupt corporation and that even though a considerable amount was invested in new machinery, etc., the plant of the new corporation is located in the same place as the old corporation and that the product of the new corporation is sold under the same trade name as the product of the predecessor corporation was sold.

The facts presented in this case clearly indicate to the Committee that the business now carried on by the M Company is substantially a continuation of the trade or business carried on by its predecessor, the N Company, and that this view is substantiated by the fact that the new corporation is operating on the same location as its predecessor and the product of the new corporation is sold under the same trade name.

In view of the foregoing the Committee is clearly of the opinion that the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that the new business is substantially a continuation of the trade or business carried on by the N Company is correct, and, therefore, recommends that its action in fixing the deduction for the purpose of computing the tax at 7 per cent, rather than 8 per cent claimed by the corporation was proper.

Law Section 311.—War Profits Credit (§530).*Article 783.—War Profits Credit Where no Prewar Period (§690).

10-20-783: A. R. R. 36.

Held, that the median as determined under the provisions of paragraph (c) (2) of section 311 of the Revenue Act of 1918 is final and shall be used in computing the war profits credit of the M Company. Relief can not be granted under section 328 of the Act merely for the reason that the application of the median does not give the relief to which taxpayers think they are entitled.

The M Company claims that inequity and hardship are imposed upon it through the application of the "median" in determining its war profits credit under the Revenue Act of 1918 and requests the Commissioner to determine its tax liability under the provisions of section 328 for the reason that the median as determined allows the taxpayer a war profits credit of slightly in excess of 10 per cent.

It is contended that this percentage is not a representative percentage earned by corporations in the same general class of business during the prewar period. The taxpayer has made an independent investigation and apparently has taken into consideration only a few concerns similarly situated and claims that these concerns earned over 20 per cent during the prewar period. The Bureau has computed the median by using the returns of all corporations in same general class of business as that conducted by the M Company.

On account of this discrepancy the Commissioner is urged to ascertain and assess the tax in this case as provided in section 328 of the statute.

Section 311(c) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides in part:

If the corporation was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, then, except as provided in subdivision (d), the war profits credit shall be the sum of: (1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and (2) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital for the prewar period, of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer; but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per centum of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year. Such average percentage shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of data contained in returns made under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, and the average known as the median shall be used.

Article 783 of Regulations 45 interpreting the above-quoted provision of law provides in part as follows:

If a corporation has no prewar period, then the war profits credit consists of the sum of the specific exemption of $3,000 and an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital for the prewar period of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer, but not be less than 10 per cent of its invested capital for the taxable year. The war profits credit shall be computed in the first instance on the basis of 10 per cent of the invested capital, and when the average percentage of corporations engaged in the same general class of trade or business has been determined the amount of the tax will if necessary be recomputed.

Section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that in certain cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328. In the instant case it can not be said that the Commissioner is unable to determine the invested capital, that the taxpayer is a foreign corporation, that a mixed aggregate of tangibles and intangibles has been paid in for stock, etc., nor that the tax if determined without the benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work an exceptional hardship evidenced by a gross disproportion between the tax computed without the benefit of section 327 and the tax computed by reference to representative corporations as provided in section 328.

Section 327 does not apply to any case in which the tax is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital.

After analyzing the situation presented in the instant case the Committee is of the opinion and recommends (1) that the median established as provided by law and published by the Bureau be considered final and that the taxpayer is not entitled to consideration under the provisions of section 328 of the statute; (2) that there is no warrant in law or the regulations which authorizes the Commissioner to allow a larger percentage in this class of cases than that established by the median for the purposes of computing the war profits credit; and (3) that the instant case does not fall within any class of cases enumerated in section 327, therefore, relief can not be granted under section 328.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended in the case of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in limiting the deduction to 8 per cent. as provided in section 204 of the Revenue Act of 1917 be sustained.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing claim for percentage deduction under section 205 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

The M Company is a foreign corporation organized September —, 1914, and, accordingly, was not in existence during any of the prewar years determined by section 203 of the Revenue Act and article 6 of Regulations 41. The company, however, contends that the application of 8 per cent. on invested capital, in accordance with section 204 of the Revenue Act, works an undue hardship on the company since the Commissioner has determined a "median" rate in excess of 9 per cent. for representative companies engaged in the particular business of the corporation.

Section 204 of the Revenue Act reads, in part, as follows:

That if a corporation or partnership was not in existence, or an individual was not engaged in the trade or business, during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, the deduction shall be an amount equal to eight per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year, plus in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000 and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000.

Section 205 of the Revenue Act reads, in part, as follows:

(a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period a domestic corporation or partnership, or a citizen or resident of the United States, had no net income from the trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the percentage, which the net income was of the invested capital, was low as compared with the percentage, which the net income during such period of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, was of their invested capital, then the deduction shall be the sum of * * *.

In the instant case, the Committee has no discretion but must construe the law in accordance with its plain language. Section 204 expressly provides for a deductible rate when a corporation was not in existence during the whole of any one calendar year of the prewar period while section 205 recognizes the existence of the corporation during the prewar year but, under such existence, having no income or having income that was low compared with the percentage of income to invested capital of similar representative corporations. Furthermore it should be noted that section 205 is applicable only to a domestic corporation, partnership, or citizen.

In the instant case, it is admitted by the taxpayer that the M Company, a foreign corporation, was not in existence during the prewar years and accordingly this Committee recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in limiting the deduction to 8 per cent., as provided in section 204 of the Revenue Act, be sustained.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in determining the "average deduction" under section 205 of the Act of October 3, 1917, by averaging the deductions allowed to representative concerns after the limitations provided in section 203 of the Act had been applied, be affirmed and the appeal denied.

The Committee has considered the appeal of the M Company in which it is contended that the method employed in determining the "average deduction" under section 205 of the Act of October 3, 1917, is erroneous. As the question raised by the appeal is entirely a question of law involving the construction of the statute, the case was referred to the Solicitor, Bureau of Internal Revenue, for an opinion. The contention of the appellant and the fact upon which it is based are sufficiently set forth in the Solicitor's opinion and therefore are not here repeated. The Solicitor's opinion is as follows:

Consideration has been given to the attached file wherein it appears that the Income Tax Unit had disallowed the claim of the M Company for the use of 9 per centum, rather than 7 per centum, in computing the deduction allowed under section 205(a)2 of the Revenue Act of October 3, 1917. The question, upon which the opinion of this office has been requested, is whether or not the construction contended for by the appellant in its brief of August —, 1921, is correct.

Briefly, the facts may be stated as follows:

The M Company in preparing its corporation excess profits tax returns for the calendar year 1917 determined its excess profits deduction by the use of 7 per centum of its invested capital and entered the amount so determined upon its return. Claim for abatement was duly filed for the amount by which the tax shown to be due upon the return exceeded the amount determined by the use of 9 per centum of the invested capital. During the prewar period the operations of the company had been greatly curtailed, and, for a portion of the period, had entirely ceased. Objection has been made to the method used by the Income Tax Unit in determining the average deduction under section 205 of the Act in cases (1) where taxpayers had no net income during the prewar period and (2) where the percentage which the net income was of the invested capital was low as compared with the percentage which the net income during such period of representative concerns was of their invested capital. It is the contention of the taxpayer that in computing the average deduction under section 205 the limiting provisions of section 203 are not to be applied until there has been an ascertainment of the percentage which the average net income bears to the average invested capital of representative concerns.

The portions of the Act which are material to the decision of the question involved are as follows:

SEC. 201. That in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this Act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the income of every corporation, partnership, or individual, a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax) equal to the following percentages of the net income:

Twenty per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the deduction (determined as hereinafter provided) and not in excess of 15 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year; * * *

SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title the deduction shall be as follows, except as otherwise in this title provided—

(a) In the case of a domestic corporation, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $3,000; * * *

SEC. 205. (a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint, finds either (1) that during the prewar period a domestic corporation or partnership, or a citizen or resident of the United States, had no net income from the trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the percentage, which the net income was of the invested capital, was low as compared with the percentage, which the net income during such period of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, was of their invested capital, then the deduction shall be the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of its invested capital for the taxable year which the average deduction (determined in the same manner as provided in section 203, without including the $3,000 or $6,000 therein referred to) for such year of representative corporations, partnerships, or individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, is of their average invested capital for such year plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000 * * *

The taxpayer contends that the following is the correct method of determining the average deduction to be allowed in those cases which are governed by the provisions of section 205:

(1) Determine the percentage which the average amount of the annual net income was of the invested capital for the prewar period of representative corporations.

(2) Apply the limitation imposed by section 203, to wit, "not less than 7 or more than 9 per centum."

(3) Apply such percentage to the statutory invested capital of the corporation whose tax is being computed.

(4) Add to the resultant product the specific exemption of $3,000.

It will be observed that in the above method no consideration or effect is given to the limitations prescribed in section 203 until there has been a determination of the percentage which the net income bears to invested capital. In so computing the deduction, the fact is completely overlooked that there is, in a great number of cases, a noticeable disparity between the percentage of deduction allowed and the percentage between net income and invested capital.

The following example, in which it is assumed that the corporations are properly comparable for the purpose of determining the deduction to be allowed to the fourth company, will illustrate the contention of the taxpayer:

Name of company	Average invested capital for prewar period	Average taxable income for the prewar period	Percentage of earnings	Percentage of deduction
A.....	$3,000,000	$450,000	15	9
B.....	2,500,000	225,000	9	9
C.....	3,500,000	210,000	6	7
Total.....	$9,000,000	$885,000	9½
Average.....	3,000,000	295,000	9½

In the foregoing example the percentage of average earnings to invested capital is 9½ per cent. The taxpayer asserts that the limitation fixed by section 203 should be applied to this percentage and no consideration be given to the actual deduction permitted to Companies A, B, and C, as shown in the column designated "Percentage of deduction."

With the contention of the taxpayer this office can not agree. Section 205 is a relief provision for those taxpayers who had no net income during the prewar period, or whose net income during the said period was low as compared with that received by representative concerns engaged in like or similar trades or business. Many taxpayers are thus permitted to take greater deductions from their net income for the purpose of computing their war excess profits tax than would otherwise have been allowed. In some cases, if normal conditions had prevailed during the prewar period, the earnings of the corporations would probably have been large enough to entitle them to the maximum deductions provided in section 203. In others, the earnings would probably have been so low that the corporations could only have taken the minimum deduction therein provided. What they might have earned, however, is a matter of speculation. To equalize the burden of the tax, and to prevent any discrimination in favor of those taxpayers engaged in similar trades or businesses who had a profitable prewar history, Congress enacted that in those cases covered by section 205 the deduction should be the sum of (1) "an amount equal to the same percentage of its invested capital for the taxable year which the average deduction * * * for such year of representative corporations, partnerships or individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, is of their average invested capital, for such year, plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000 * * *."

It must be observed that the term "average deduction" is used. There is nothing in section 205 which would justify the interpretation that the term means average percentage. Such is the construction placed upon the term by the present taxpayer when it contends that the limitation of section 203 should not be imposed in computing the deduction allowed under section 205 until after there has been a determination of the percentage which the average prewar net income of representative concerns is of their average prewar invested capital. The deduction allowed to some corporations in excess of the specific exemption is an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income, during the prewar period, was of the invested capital for the same period, but it does not follow that that amount is allowed in all cases. In many cases the deductions bear only a slight relation to the percentage of prewar net income to prewar invested capital. If the earnings of a corporation during the prewar period greatly exceeded 9 per cent of its invested capital, that fact will not assist it any in getting a greater deduction than the maximum provided in the Act. It is only permitted to take a deduction of 9 per cent plus the specific deduction for the purpose of computing the war excess profits tax. If, on the other hand, the corporation's earnings were less than 7 per cent during the prewar period, it is entitled to a deduction of 7 per cent.

The ascertainment of the percentage of income to capital is the starting point in the determination of the deduction, but in those cases where the income of the taxpayer is greater than 9 per cent or less than 7 per cent, the actual amount of the deduction can never be determined until there has been an application of the limitations imposed by section 203. This is a very essential and necessary step. The deduction is the amount finally allowed in the computation of the tax and may be independent of the percentage which the income of the taxpayer bears to its invested capital. The actual amounts which representative concerns engaged in similar trades or businesses are permitted to deduct from their income constitutes the basis for the computation of the deduction allowed to those taxpayers whose cases are covered by section 205 of the Act. Full force and effect must be given in every instance to the limitations of section 203.

It is therefore the opinion of this office that the construction placed upon section 205 by the taxpayer is erroneous, and further that the term "average deduction," as used in said section, means the average of the deductions allowed to representative concerns after the limitations provided in section 203 have been applied.

The Committee finds itself entirely in accord with the opinion of the Solicitor, and, therefore, recommends, in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in determining the "average deduction" under section 205 of the Act of October 3, 1917, by averaging the deductions allowed to representative concerns after the limitations provided in section 203 of the Act have been applied, be affirmed and the appeal denied.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

The question is presented as to whether the amount of the net incomes disclosed by the returns of a corporation for the prewar period, and upon which the taxes have been actually assessed and paid, should be accepted as correct in determining the average net income for the prewar period for use in computing the profits tax credit under the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918, or whether this average should be based on the correct amount of the income for each year of the prewar period, irrespective of the amount of the income shown by the return for such year.

Held, that both section 203(a) of the Revenue Act of 1917 as interpreted by article 29 of Regulations 41, and section 311(a)2 of the Revenue Act of 1918 as interpreted by article 781 of Regulations 45, contemplate that the average net income for the prewar period, when used for the purpose of the deductions provided for in these sections, shall be the correct average net income for such period, and that they do not contemplate that the net incomes shown by the returns for the prewar period shall be accepted in determining the average net income for such period in the event that the amount of the net incomes shown by such returns are found to be incorrect.

Where errors are found in the amount of the net income shown by a return for any year of the prewar period, such errors should be corrected before the amount of the average net income for the prewar period is determined, both with reference to the Revenue Act of 1917 and the Revenue Act of 1918.

With respect to the inquiry whether or not value appreciation of property taken up on the books of the taxpayer and returned as a part of his taxable income for the year in which the appreciation was written up may be included as a part of the income for the prewar period, a negative reply must be given. Appreciation is not and has not been at any time under the income tax laws proper taxable income, and where such appreciation has been taken up on the books of the taxpayer the item must be excluded in computing income, even though an income tax has been paid upon it.

12-21-1526: A. R. M. 116.

Articles 802 and 869 of Regulations 45 provide for the inclusion of the same corporate entities in prewar years for determining average consolidated prewar net income and invested capital that may properly be consolidated in the taxable years 1917 or 1918.

Consideration has been given to the request made by the Income Tax Unit for a ruling which would construe articles 802 and 869 of Regulations 45 for the guidance of the Unit.

Section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918 reads as follows:

Any asset of the trade or business in existence both during the taxable year and any prewar year is included in the invested capital for the taxable year but is not included in the invested capital for such prewar year, or is valued on a different basis in computing the invested capital for the taxable year and such prewar year, respectively, then under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary such readjustments shall be made as are necessary to place the computation of the invested capital for such prewar year on the basis employed in determining the invested capital for the taxable year.

Article 869 of Regulations 45 provides:

The invested capital of affiliated corporations for the prewar period shall be computed on the same basis as the invested capital for the taxable year, except that where any one or more of the corporations included in the consolidation for the taxable year were in existence during the prewar period, but were not then affiliated as herein defined, then the average consolidated invested capital for the prewar period shall be the average invested capital of the corporations which were affiliated in the prewar period plus the aggregate of the average invested capital for each of the several corporations which were not affiliated during the prewar period. Full recognition, however, must be given to the provisions of section 330 of the Statute, particularly the last paragraph thereof, and of articles 931-934.

Manifestly if the invested capital of affiliated corporations is to be computed for the prewar period on the same basis as invested capital is computed for the taxable year, there can be no greater number of corporate units consolidated in the prewar years than were entitled to consolidation in the taxable year. It is also noted that consolidation of similar corporate units is determined by the inclusion in the prewar period of the aggregate of the average invested capital for each of the several corporations not affiliated during the prewar period but affiliated during the taxable year. This further provision only emphasizes the intent of the regulation to determine affiliation of the prewar years by the affiliation of the taxable years.

Article 802 of Regulations 45 reads:

The consolidated net income of affiliated corporations for the prewar period shall be the average consolidated net income for the prewar years of such of the several corporations included in the consolidation for the taxable year as were affiliated during the prewar period, plus the aggregate of the average net income for each of the corporations not affiliated during the prewar period which were in existence during all of the prewar period or during at least one full year within the prewar period. The net income of a subsidiary corporation organized during the prewar period by an existing corporation shall also be included.

This article determining the basis of consolidated prewar net income is, in effect, the same in principle as article 869 above quoted, which determines consolidated invested capital for the prewar period. The expression "such of the several corporations included in the consolidation for the taxable year as were affiliated during the prewar period" identifies the affiliated corporations of the prewar period and clearly determines that the corporate entities of the consolidated unit for each of the prewar years are those corporate entities affiliated in the taxable year. This is only emphasized by the further provision for inclusion of the aggregate of the average net income of such corporations not affiliated during the prewar period but affiliated during the taxable year, thereby clearly determining, as above stated, that the consolidated unit of the prewar year must be composed of the same corporate units as are included in the consolidated unit of the taxable year. If this condition did not prevail, there would be no reason for disallowing any of the corporate units affiliated during the prewar years but operative as separate or otherwise affiliated units during the taxable years 1917 or 1918 from claiming the same consolidated condition for the prewar years to determine excess and war profits credits of each company or each group of companies properly affiliated during the taxable years.

The Committee is accordingly of the opinion that there can be taken into consideration in the prewar years only such corporate units for the purpose of determining average prewar income and average prewar invested capital as may be properly consolidated into one corporate unit for the taxable year 1917 or 1918.

A corporation acquired a contract and leasehold, paying therefor with an issue of stock in the sum of 500x dollars. There was no definite division or assignment of the amount paid between the contract and leasehold. At the time of acquiring these rights the amount paid was charged off against surplus; it is now sought to restore this sum to surplus and a ruling is desired whether the contract and leasehold are to be treated as tangible or intangible property.

Held, that an unperformed contract to furnish manufactured products represents no rights in tangible property which would entitle it to be regarded as deriving its value chiefly therefrom. On the contrary, the value of the contract is of an intangible nature, contingent upon the performance of its terms and the realization of the anticipated profit. The intangible rights under such a contract would, therefore, be subject to the limitation contained in section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918, in the case of intangible property purchased with corporate stock. On the other hand a leasehold is tangible property, and may be included in invested capital, under either the 1917 or 1918 Act, at its actual cash value when paid in for stock, such value in no case to exceed the par value of the stock paid therefor, subject to qualifications not relevant in this case.

Preferred stock, if in the records of the corporation it is declared to be part of its capital stock, though convertible into first-mortgage bonds of even date therewith, is inferior, on a distribution of assets to pay debts, to the rights of general creditors, and is to be treated as invested capital so long as it is not converted.

Opinion is requested as to the status of stock designated as "first preferred stock" under the following sections of the Revenue Act of 1918.

Section 325 (a) provides:

The term "borrowed capital" means money or other property borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, open accounts, or otherwise.

Section 326 (b) provides:

As used in this title, the term "invested capital" does not include borrowed capital.

The following facts are presented: The M Company, a corporation by an amendment to its articles of incorporation and pursuant to a resolution of its stockholders duly adopted, increased the amount of its capital stock from 18x dollars to the sum of 45x dollars, of which y shares were to be preferred. Certificates of "first preferred stock" were issued, which contained a provision that the shares of stock should be convertible at the election of the holder into first mortgage gold bonds. At the time the preferred stock was issued, the directors provided for an issue of coupon bonds, secured by a first mortgage or trust deed. Said bonds and trust deed were of even date with said certificates of preferred stock. The trust deed was executed, delivered to the trustee and placed on record. It contains the provision that "said bonds shall be held by said trustee and its successors until issued and shall be issued and used only for the purpose of being exchanged, par for par, for shares of preferred stock."

The specific question is:

Is first preferred stock which, at the election of the holder, is convertible into bonds, of even date therewith and secured by a first mortgage trust deed—such bonds to be issued only for the purpose of converting such preferred stock—to be treated as invested capital or as borrowed capital?

The rights of holders of preferred stock which represents a part of the capital stock of a corporation, and is secured by a trust deed or otherwise, are inferior to the rights of general creditors. (Westerfield-Bonte v. Burnett, Ky., 195 S. W. 479; Miller, executor, v. Batterman, treasurer, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 146; Booth v. Union Fiber Co., Minn., 162 N. W. 677; same case on rehearing, 171 N. W. 307; Spencer v. Smith et al., 201 Fed. 674; Armstrong v. Union Trust & Savings Bank, 248 Fed. 269.) Whether persons who contribute or make payments to a corporation are stockholders or creditors of the company is a question to be determined by the intention of the parties as disclosed by the circumstances. (Miller, executor, v. Batterman, treasurer, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496.) Persons who negotiate for and acquire preferred stock "designed as," and "declared to be," a part of the capital stock of a corporation are held to full knowledge of the character of their investments. From such facts it is conclusively presumed that the parties intend such persons to be stockholders—preferred stockholders—and not creditors (Armstrong v. Union Trust & Savings Bank, 248 Fed. 268).

In the case of Spencer v. Smith et al., 201 Fed. 647, the court held that the rights of general creditors were superior to those of a preferred stockholder, whose certificate contained an agreement by the corporation to redeem the amount thereof at a specified time, which agreement was presently secured by a first mortgage lien of the corporate property. Assuming, in the instant case, that the mortgage bonds and trust deed securing same were in effect a present security for such stock, the case would then be no stronger than that under consideration in Spencer v. Smith et al., above, at least until such stock is converted into bonds.

It appears that the taxpayer, by amending its articles of incorporation, fixed its capital stock at 45x dollars, of which y shares were to be preferred. The first preferred stock was therefore designed as, and was directly declared to be, a part of the capital stock of the corporation. These facts are identical, apart from the amounts stated, with the facts in the case of Armstrong v. Union Trust & Savings Bank, cited above. Upon a purchase of stock, under these circumstances, the intention of the parties is conclusively presumed to be that such purchasers become stockholders and, on a distribution of assets to pay debts, their rights are inferior to creditors.

It is concluded that the preferred stock under consideration in the instant case is part of the capital stock of the corporation and that the rights of the holders thereof are inferior to the rights of general creditors. Determined by the rule stated in article 812, Regulations 45, such preferred stock is, therefore, invested capital and not borrowed capital.

It is held that preferred stock, if in the records of the corporation it is declared to be part of its capital stock, though convertible into first mortgage bonds of even date therewith, is inferior, on a distribution of assets to pay debts, to the rights of general creditors, and is to be treated as invested capital so long as it is not converted.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held in the matter of the appeal of the O Company (Inc.), that the debenture bonds in the amount of 10x dollars can not be included in the computation of its invested capital.

The Committee on Appeals and Review has had under consideration the appeal of the O Company from a decision of the Income Tax Unit eliminating an item of 10x dollars from the invested capital of this corporation.

It appears that prior to 1911 the business was conducted as a copartnership. The copartnership transferred its assets to the O Company and received in payment therefor debenture bonds in the amount of 10x dollars, payable in 30 years, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The copartnership also received other good and valuable consideration in the form of common stock in the amount of 20x dollars, which was issued against good will, trade-marks, etc. The debenture bonds issued in payment for the assets of the copartnership were delivered to the partners pro rata. The common stock issued was distributed to the partners in the same ratio as the bonds. The debenture bonds were issued in payment for the tangible assets of the copartnership, which were worth approximately 11x dollars, as set forth in a schedule attached to the brief of the corporation, and the common stock was issued in payment for good will, trade-marks, etc.

The revenue agent, under date of August 21, 1919, submitted a report in which he recommended that additional taxes be assessed against the O Company for the years 1916 and 1917.

It was contended that since the resolution of acceptance of the terms of the sale by the O Company distinctly sets forth that the bonds should be "subject to all rights of creditors of said corporation now existing and at all times existing during the term of said bonds," such bonds are in fact no more than 6 per cent preferred stock and that the property for which the debenture bonds were issued was already invested in the business and fully paid for and, therefore, the situation was not one where the corporation borrowed money against the issuance of debenture bonds and subsequently purchased goods or developed its business.

It may be conceded that the provision of the offer of sale of the partnership property and the resolution of acceptance thereof, which provided that the bonds should be "subject to all rights of creditors of said corporation now existing and at all times existing during the terms of said bonds," was fully operative (because it constituted one of the conditions on which they were issued) as between the original bondholders having actual notice and knowledge thereof, and who it appears have always retained ownership thereof, thus eliminating from consideration the situation resulting if the bonds had been held by innocent third parties. The facts therefore appear in their most favorable aspects to the taxpayers. The attorneys submitted further to substantiate the contention that these bonds were nothing more than preferred stock, that the debentures were in 1918 turned in by the owners of the O Company and preferred stock was issued in lieu thereof to the respective owners of the bonds. This, it is urged, shows that the owners of these bonds recognized that they were subordinate both as to payment of principal and interest to the rights of the general creditors of the corporation.

Where a corporation purchased certain assets, paying therefor by creating a bonded debt drawing 6 per cent interest per annum, which, though a subordinate lien to claims of general creditors of the corporation, was nevertheless superior to the rights of stockholders of the corporation, so that on a dissolution such bonds would be first paid before the stockholders could be admitted to share in the assets of the corporation, the bonds represent borrowed money and not invested capital within the meaning of section 207, Revenue Act of 1917.

Article 44(b) of Regulations 41 provides that—

The term "money or other property borrowed" as used in section 207 and these regulations includes not only cash or other borrowed property which can be identified as such, but current liabilities and temporary indebtedness of all kinds, and any permanent indebtedness upon which the taxpayer is entitled to an interest deduction in computing net income. A corporation which under the income tax law is allowed to deduct only a part of the entire interest paid upon its indebtedness, may include in its invested capital such a proportion of its permanent indebtedness as the amount of interest upon such indebtedness which the corporation is not allowed to deduct is of the total amount of interest paid upon such indebtedness during the taxable year.

Section 325(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that as used in this title:

The term "borrowed capital" means money or other property borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, open accounts, or otherwise.

Article 812 of Regulations 45 provides that—

Any interest in a corporation represented by bonds, debentures, or other securities, by whatever name called, including so-called preferred stock, if with respect to the payment of either interest or principal it ranks with or prior to the interest of the general creditors, is borrowed capital and can not be included in computing invested capital. Any such preferred stock may, however, be so included if it is deferred with respect to the payment of both interest and principal to the interest of the general creditors.

In general, it might be said that it is always a question of fact whether a given amount paid or left in the business of a corporation constitutes borrowed capital or paid-in surplus. The general principle is that if interest is paid, or is to be paid, on any such amount, or if the stockholders' or officers' right to repayment of any such amount ranks with or before that of the general creditors, the amount so left with the corporation must be treated as borrowed capital.

In the instant case, the bonds were issued in payment for property, interest has been regularly paid each year and has been deducted by the corporation in computing its net income for each year up to and including 1916, but no interest deduction on account of this indebtedness was claimed for 1917, even though the corporation actually paid 6 per cent on the outstanding debenture bonds.

The Committee is of the opinion that the O Company is not entitled to include in the computation of its invested capital the item of debenture bonds on which interest was paid but not deducted in the computation of the invested capital for 1917. The corporation will, however, be entitled to a deduction in computing its net income of the interest so paid on these bonds within the statutory limitation with respect to the payment of interest for the year 1917.

The intent of the parties in this case was truly reflected in the form in which they organized their corporate business. They chose to organize and carry it on by creating a corporate debt to be repaid at a future date, plus a fixed rate of interest evidenced by the debenture bonds secured by a lien on corporate assets, subordinate to claims of its general creditors. Bondholders have different rights or interests in corporate business and assets than would preferred stockholders. True, preferred stock might have been issued in lieu thereof, but the parties elected otherwise, and they are bound by their act so long as the bonds in question are outstanding. The subordination of the lien of the bonds to claims of general creditors is not enough to render the bonds the equivalent of preferred stock. Nor is the mere fact that possibly in an effort to characterize the bonds as the equivalent of preferred stock the corporation did not deduct interest thereon in filing its return for 1917 sufficient to change or fix their status.

A memorandum supplementing the original brief has been filed in which the attorneys refer to and quote from certain court decisions to the effect that, as between the corporation and the original purchasers, the bonds were subordinate both as to the payment of principal and interest to the rights of the general creditors. The bonds in question are an obligation of the corporation to pay and in the judgment of the Committee should be classed as "borrowed capital."

The Committee therefore recommends that the decision of the Income Tax Unit disallowing the item of 10x dollars from the invested capital of the O Company be sustained and that the case be otherwise closed in accordance with this recommendation.

33-20-1142: A. R. R. 237.

Recommended in the appeal of the M Company that the decision of the Income Tax Unit holding that amounts received from the sale of so-called debenture stock constitute part of the invested capital of the corporation and that the interest paid thereon does not constitute an allowable deduction in the computation of net income, be reversed.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from a decision of the Income Tax Unit holding that the amounts received from the sale of so-called debenture stock shall be treated as part of the invested capital and that the interest paid thereon can not be deducted in the computation of net income.

The ruling in question was as follows:

It seems clearly to be the intent of the corporation to subordinate the payment of the principal of the debenture stock in question to the claims of the general creditors.

You are advised, therefore, that the amount received from the sale of these stocks constitutes a part of the invested capital of the M Company, and must be included in the computation of that item. The company is not permitted, in its option, to treat this amount as borrowed capital.

You are advised, further, that the payments of interest on these stocks in reality are dividends, and as such are not to be deducted by the corporation in computing its taxable net income.

It is from this rule that the corporation has appealed to the Committee. Since the questions raised by the corporation were questions of law and not of fact, the Committee requested advice from the Solicitor and under date of July 7, 1920, the following opinion was received:

The war profits and excess profits tax, being Title III of the Revenue Act of 1918, provides, in part, as follows:

"Sec. 325(a) That as used in this title—

The term 'borrowed capital' means money or other property borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, open accounts, or otherwise; * * *

Sec. 326(b) As used in this title the term 'invested capital' does not include borrowed capital. * * *

Elsewhere in the Act it is provided—

"Sec. 234(a). That in computing the net income of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230 there shall be allowed as deductions:

(2) All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on its indebtedness, * * *"

The M Company was duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware under a charter which provided that its capital stock should be divided into  $x$  shares without nominal or par value, and which authorized the corporation under the general power to borrow money to issue a form of obligation in the nature of certificates of indebtedness to the extent of  $100x$  dollars, which should be known as debenture stock. Pursuant to the latter named power the M Company issued for cash to the face value thereof  $100x$  dollars of such debenture stock, represented by certificates reading, in part, as follows:

"THIS IS TO CERTIFY THAT THE M COMPANY * * * HEREBY acknowledges itself indebted to . . . . ., in the sum of . . . . . Dollars, principal payable at the expiration of the corporate existence of the corporation, interest at the rate of  $y$  per cent per annum payable semiannually on the first days of . . . . . and . . . . . in each year in gold coin of the United States of America, of the present standard of weight and fineness, represented by . . . . . shares of debenture stock of the corporation, each of the par value of one hundred dollars.

"In the payment of their superior claims, all creditors, other than the stockholders of the corporation, shall rank pari passu to the holders of the debenture stock, but all holders of debenture stock shall rank pari passu with each other, and superior to the stockholders of the corporation, with respect to their share stock.

"The corporation shall, nevertheless, have the right, the interest on the debenture stock having been paid, from time to time to declare and pay dividends out of the net earnings, upon the stock or share capital of the corporation.

"The debenture stock shall be subject to redemption by the corporation upon any interest date, upon the affirmative vote of two-thirds in amount of the capital stock of the corporation then issued and outstanding, at the rate of one hundred twenty-five dollars per share for each one hundred dollars of the principal or par value, plus all unpaid accrued interest, including interest at the aforesaid rate of  $y$  per cent per annum up to the time of redemption.

"Neither the corporation nor its shareholders shall have power to mortgage the property or franchises of the corporation, except by the written consent of the then registered holders of at least two-thirds in amount of the debenture stock. * * *"

The company in its return of annual net income under the Revenue Act of 1918, deducted from gross income, among others, the amount of interest paid by it upon the above mentioned certificates of debenture stock. This deduction was disallowed by the Income Tax Unit on the ground that the holders of such stock were in reality preferred stockholders, and amounts contributed by them were part of the invested capital of the corporation and that interest paid was in reality in the nature of dividends.

Recognizing that the true character of an interest in a corporation is not determined solely by its name, article 812 of Regulations 45, provides:

"Any interest in a corporation represented by bonds, debentures or other securities by whatever name called, including so-called preferred stock, if with respect to the payment of either interest or principal it ranks with or prior to the interest of the general creditors, is borrowed capital and cannot be included in computing invested capital. Any such preferred stock may, however, be so included if it is deferred with respect to the payment of both interest and principal to the interest of the general creditors."

If the instrument in question creates or evidences a debt, it will be given the characteristics of such obligation, regardless of its name. Spencer v. Smith, C. C. A. 8th Circ. 201 Fed. 647; Heller v. Marine Bank, 89 Md. 601.

In the latter named case the court, passing upon the question whether certain so-called preferred stock was in fact entitled to priority, stated the general rule as follows:

"The question in such cases is, not what did the parties call it, but what do the facts and circumstances require the court to call it. Courts are not influenced by mere names. They look beyond these and give to the subject dealt with the character—the status—which its properties denote it possesses. The qualities and properties of a thing are its essentials—they define and mark what it is—the name is purely accidental—it is no part of the thing named."

The term "debenture" is well known in England to describe any instrument issued by a corporation which creates or acknowledges a debt. Cook on Corporations, 6th ed. 2709.

"Debenture stock is of the same nature as ordinary debentures, except that instead of each bond securing a definite amount, the whole sum secured is treated as a single stock, and bonds are issued declaring the holder to be entitled to a definite sum, part of this stock. This sum is not necessarily a round sum, but may be for any number of pounds, it may include fractions of a pound unless limitation is made in that respect. A debenture stock may be repayable at a fixed date, or may be irredeemable, according to the deed creating it, and may be secured in any manner in which a debenture may be secured." See Lindley's Company Law, 195.

As used in this country the term "stock" does not mean a debt, but simply an interest in the corporate enterprise.

Examining the provisions of the certificates of so-called debenture stock in question, it seems clear that the parties in interest intended to and did create or acknowledge a definite obligation on the part of the corporation to repay a specified sum of money. In other words, the certificates in question are more nearly related to bonds or notes or certificates of indebtedness than to certificates of preferred stock. It will be noted that the certificates state that the corporation is indebted in a specified amount to the holders thereof payable at the expiration of the corporate existence. Irredeemable notes or bonds are of comparatively common occurrence in England, although not so well known in this country. There are instances, however, of such perpetual debts, and courts have held that the character of such obligations is not affected by the fact that they are not redeemable at a fixed time. Thus, in Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company v. Stichter, 11 Weekly Notes of Cases, Pennsylvania, 325, it was held that it was not ultra vires for a railroad company to raise funds by issuing bonds at a large discount. It will be noted that payment of the principal is subordinated to other indebtedness of the company. This feature, however, does not preclude regarding the obligation as a debt, for I know of no principle of law which prevents corporations from creating priorities among creditors. It should be noted that some security is given to the holders of these certificates by the provision which prevents the corporation from mortgaging its property or franchises without the written consent of at least two-thirds of the holders of such debenture stock. As corollary there are no indications that the parties intended the holders of these certificates to be stockholders. In the first place, the certificates are issued under a power granted in the charter to borrow money, and not to issue stock.

It is elementary that a corporation cannot issue stock except under authorization of its charter. See Cook on Corporations, 6th ed. 268. Secondly, the certificates provide specifically for the payment of interest at a specified rate per annum. No qualification is found in the charter or in the by-laws limiting this obligation, and there is no reason why the holders of such certificates cannot sue for the interest if default is made in payment. This, of course, is foreign to the idea of preferred stock, for it is well settled that a preferred stockholder is not a creditor of the corporation. Warren v. King, 108 U. S. 389.

A preferred stockholder may not sue for dividends unless they are declared, and a provision guaranteeing the payment of dividends is absolutely void. Cook on Corporations, 6th ed. sec. 271.

Finally, there is nowhere to be found in the charter or in the by-laws any indication of an intent that the holders of such certificates shall share in the assets of a corporation over and above the face amount of their interest.

As stated by attorneys for the M Company:

"The holders of such debenture stock certificates do not have any share in the profits of the business in any way whatsoever, irrespective of the amount of profits made in any one year or over a score of years, and no dividends could be declared on these certificates of indebtedness. And in the event of the dissolution of the company if there should be assets remaining at that time, more than sufficient to repay the face value of the certificates of obligation called debenture stock, as well as the capital contributed by the holders of the ordinary capital stock, the debenture stockholders would not share in this excess. By the express terms of the charter the holder of a debenture stock certificate obtains no more at any time than the amount of the principal with interest thereon payable semiannually."

It is held, therefore, that whether or not amounts received by a corporation upon the sale of so-called debenture stock constitute invested capital or borrowed capital depends upon the rights and powers enjoyed by the holders of such stock and the obligations with respect thereto undertaken by the corporation; that where so-called debenture stock is issued by a corporation for cash or property under a power granted by the charter to borrow money, and the certificates of such stock contain an agreement on the part of the corporation to repay the face amount thereof upon dissolution, and to pay interest thereon from time to time, at a certain rate per cent per annum; and where it appears that the claim of such debenture stockholders will, upon dissolution of the corporation, be subordinate to the claims of general creditors but superior to the claims of the ordinary stockholders; and where it further appears that the holders of such certificates exercise no voice in the control or management of the corporation, the amounts received for the sale of such stock constitute borrowed capital, and the interest paid thereon, from time to time, by the corporation is properly deductible as a business expense.

In view of the foregoing advice from the Solicitor, the Committee recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit be reversed and that the amounts received by the M Company from the sale of the so-called debenture stock be treated as borrowed capital, and that the interest paid thereon be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income.

Excess profits tax—Surplus paid in by stockholders.

The M Company was organized in 1910 with a capital stock of 10x dollars. Such stock was subscribed for as follows: A, all but 2 shares; B, 1 share; and C, 1 share. All the capital represented by this stock was actually furnished by A; the other stockholders holding their stock for him. No change in stock ownership took place, and during 1915 A paid into the company 7x dollars. No action was taken by the corporation which would indicate the nature of this payment, except that it was entered upon the company's books as a contribution to capital and was never treated as an account payable. No stock was issued and no interest was charged on this amount. During 1917 this money was repaid by the corporation to A. No evidence is presented to indicate the nature of this payment or how it was treated by the corporation. The company contends that this sum should be included in invested capital for the proper part of the year 1917.

It is evident that the formalities of proper corporate action have in this case been disregarded. This makes a determination of the exact relation between A and the corporation with reference to the 7x dollars very difficult. Article 813, Regulations 45, contains the general principle:

That if interest is paid or is to be paid on any such amount, or if the stockholders' or officers' right to repayment of such amount ranks with or before that of the general creditors, the amount so left with the corporation must be considered as borrowed capital and be so treated in computing invested capital.

It is accepted legal doctrine that where stockholders voluntarily assess themselves to relieve the corporation from pecuniary embarrassment or for the betterment of their stock, whatever may be the occasion of the assessment, the advances thus made are not debts against, but assets of, the corporation. (Broderick v. Brown, 69 Fed., 497.)

It is the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board that this payment was in the nature of a voluntary assessment by the one who was practically the sole stockholder of the corporation, and that after it was paid to the corporation no obligation to repay it existed. The treatment of this payment by the corporation upon its books (undoubtedly with the knowledge of A) is highly significant and would undoubtedly postpone A to the general creditors of the corporation as to this amount. The repayment of this sum in 1917 to the stockholder must be deemed to be out of undivided profits or earned surplus so far as possible. (Section 31(b), Revenue Act of 1916, as amended.) While this distribution was informal, it can not be treated as a return of capital unless the undivided profits and earned surplus accumulated since 1913 are first distributed as dividends. Whether or not such repayments will reduce the invested capital will depend upon the amount of current earnings available for distribution at the time of such repayment.

It is therefore recommended that the M Company be permitted to include in its invested capital for the taxable year 1917 the sum of 7x dollars as a surplus paid in by the stockholders, proper adjustment being made for any distribution of dividends in excess of available net earnings.

Advice has been requested as to whether an amount paid into a corporation ratably by its stockholders under corporate resolution authorizing and making the assessment can be properly treated as invested capital of the corporation, even though its books indicate and show that the amount so paid in has been treated as a loan; that interest has been regularly paid to the contributing stockholders and that the corporation has regularly deducted the interest so paid in making its returns up to 1917.

A revenue agent submitted a report of his examination of the tax liability of this company and recommends the elimination of the amount so paid in from its invested capital for the reason that such amount has been treated on the books of the company as borrowed capital and further, for the reason that it has regularly each year in computing its net income deducted interest on this amount at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. No capital stock was issued for this amount of money paid in and no notes were given by the corporation acknowledging its indebtedness to the stockholders for this amount.

The amount paid in in accordance with the corporate resolutions was entered on the books of the company as a capital reserve fund and in 1917 it was carried as "Advances by stockholders."

The company urges strongly that this amount is not borrowed money. It is urged by the taxpayer that it makes little difference whether or not interest was paid on this amount and it submits that the payment of the interest is not determinative of the question involved. The payment or non-payment of interest, it is contended, does not change the character of this capital and whether such capital is borrowed money or paid in surplus must be determined by the facts and by the intentions of the parties. This can best be determined from the books and records of the company. The taxpayer submits that its records clearly show that the amount was paid in as assessments in pursuance of corporate resolutions duly passed by the board of directors and that the amount so paid in was set up on the books as "Reserve capital." The company further urges that inasmuch as no notes or other evidences of indebtedness were issued for this money, there was no obligation to repay same to the contributors other than that attaching with respect to the original capital.

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides that, as used in this title, "Invested capital" does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title, nor money or other property borrowed.

Article 44 of Regulations 41 provides, in part, as follows:

The term "money or other property borrowed" as used in section 207 of these regulations includes not only cash or other borrowed property which can be identified as such, but current liabilities and temporary indebtedness of all kinds, and any permanent indebtedness upon which the taxpayer is entitled to an interest deduction in computing net income. A corporation, which under the income tax law is allowed to deduct only a part of the entire interest paid upon its indebtedness, may include in its invested capital such a proportion of its permanent indebtedness as the amount of interest upon such indebtedness which the corporation is not allowed to deduct is of the total amount of interest paid upon such indebtedness during the taxable year.

The Committee has considered all the facts presented in this case and has reached the conclusion that the money paid into the company under corporate resolution for which no notes were given nor even authorized does not fall within the provisions of article 812, Regulations 45. It is not thought that any court of equity or law would permit the repayment of this money ratably to the stockholders and interest thereon before the general creditors had been satisfied. If this assumption be correct, then assessments paid in would be subordinated to the rights of the general creditors as to the payment of both the principal and interest thereon.

Therefore, after careful consideration of the brief submitted by the company, and the recommendations of the revenue agent in this case, it is the opinion of the Committee that in determining the invested capital of this corporation the minute books of the corporation showing the resolutions making the assessment against the stockholders, reflect more clearly the true nature of the transaction than do mere bookkeeping entries concerning the same transaction made at a later date by a subordinate officer of the corporation. Although the sums paid to the stockholders as a return on their capital on account of these assessments were noted on the books of the corporation as interest, the facts indicate that such payments were more in the nature of dividends. The books of the corporation treat the amounts paid by assessment as an obligation of the corporation. This is true, but so also are amounts paid in for capital stock carried as liabilities of a corporation. The resolutions authorizing the assessments do not provide that interest shall be paid to the stockholders, no notes or other evidence of indebtedness are given by the corporation, and the stockholders are not preferred over general creditors as to the amounts paid in assessments.

Held, that the corporation may include in its invested capital for 1917 the amount assessed against its stockholders and paid in by them.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held in the appeal of the M Company that the amount of 36x dollars standing upon the books of the company to the individual credits of three stockholders, at the beginning of business July 1, 1916, is not invested capital within the meaning of the Revenue Act of 1917

The M Company is a corporation, all of the stock of which was owned by three stockholders, A, B, and C. During the lifetime of these stockholders no distribution of profits was made and the earnings were allowed to accumulate from year to year.

At the death of A, in 1907, the board of directors passed a resolution ordering the reserve fund to be prorated and credited to the deposit accounts of the three principal stockholders.

In accordance with this resolution the accumulated profits were divided and placed to the credit of these various accounts. None of these profits was withdrawn; the business proceeded as before and the profits were allowed again to accumulate until 1909, when B died, and the same procedure was taken as in 1907; although it does not appear in the record that there was formal action on the part of the directors, nor is the rate of the division nor the total amount divided, shown.

From the inception of the business until the present day no dividend has been declared nor have any of the profits been withdrawn from the business or segregated from the surplus of the company except as hereinbefore stated; but against the accounts credited as above, comparatively small charges have been made from time to time to cover living expenses of two of these stockholders. It is contended and sworn to that substantially all of the profits thus credited to these three stockholders have been, by verbal agreement, left in the corporation funds for the conduct of its business and that on the amounts so credited no interest has ever been paid by the corporation nor have notes been issued therefor, for the reason that they never have been considered as obligations of the corporation; but, on the contrary, as funds left in the business to be used as capital; and deponents further declare that the banks and other large creditors of the corporation were, and are, cognizant of this verbal agreement, and by reason of it extend credit to the corporation on these funds considered as capital.

In support of this sworn statement there were submitted two identical affidavits of the presidents of two banks, to the effect that the amounts carried on the books to the credit of the stockholders were considered by their respective banks as capital left in the business of the corporation by those parties under a verbal agreement, and that on the strength of this agreement and the indorsement or guaranty given to these banks by the individuals named, credit was extended by these banks to the corporation; these credits amounting to 12x dollars and 25x dollars, respectively.

On this statement of facts, which is not contested by the Income Tax Unit, the taxpayer appeals to this Committee to have these credits to these individual stockholders, which on July 1, 1916, amounted to 36x dollars considered as invested capital of the corporation; the Unit having denied such consideration.

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides that—

* * * As used in this title "invested capital" does not include * * * money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, * * * and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, * * *.

In the consideration of this case no question of good faith or of fact is involved. There is no doubt that these amounts have been left in the business in accordance with the verbal understanding above referred to, to be used as capital, or that they have been so used as necessary contributions to the working capital of the business, which has expanded so rapidly that their withdrawal would at all times have rendered necessary some provision for the financing of the company upon some other basis.

It is contended in the taxpayer's brief and was reasserted at an informal oral hearing before this Committee on April 10, at which the taxpayer was represented by its president, that these amounts, which admittedly constitute a considerable part of the actual working capital of the business, should be, by reason of that fact, regarded as a part of the invested capital of the business within the meaning of the Revenue Act of 1917. In support of this contention the taxpayer advances the argument that these credits and the funds representing them have been regarded as a part of the capital of the corporation by the banks with which it does business and which loan it large amounts of money by reason of these credits as well as by its other large commercial creditors.

The taxpayer contends that the intent of these stockholder-creditors, rather than the letter of the law, should prevail in the consideration of this case and that the good faith behind such intent has been amply and conclusively demonstrated by the fact that these amounts have been left in the business over a period of more than 10 years, to the actual and material financial detriment of these creditors by reason of the fact that the funds representing these amounts have been actively and continuously used in the conduct of the business and in earning profits for the stockholders, from which profits these creditor stockholders derive no advantage beyond the general pro rata participation in the earnings enjoyed by all the stockholders alike.

The taxpayer further contends that it should not be penalized in 1917 merely because of its failure to have made a "book entry," converting these credits into capital stock.

The Committee has given due and earnest consideration to all the facts in this case and to the arguments presented by the taxpayer; but it can not see its way clear to accept the taxpayer's views.

Under section 207 as quoted above, these credits are, in law, obviously either borrowed money or earned surplus and undivided profits. The very purpose for which and the circumstances under which they were created excludes them from consideration as "surplus and undivided profits." It was to determine exactly the equities of these three stockholders in the profits or surplus, until that time undivided, that these credits were established. The president of this corporation vigorously denies that they are "surplus" of the company in the sense that all the present stockholders have a right to share in them ratably, and admits that these rights of these three stockholders would be asserted as against the other stockholders, though not against the general creditors. That being true, they form no part at all of the "surplus" of the corporation, and the alternative that they are borrowed money can not be escaped.

Article 813 of Regulations 45 provides that—

Whether a given amount paid into or left in the business of a corporation constitutes borrowed capital or paid-in surplus is largely a question of fact. Thus, indebtedness to stockholders actually canceled and left in the business would ordinarily constitute paid-in surplus, while amounts left in the business representing salaries of officers in excess of their actual withdrawals, or deposit accounts in favor of partners in a partnership succeeded by the corporation, will be considered paid-in surplus or borrowed capital according to the facts of the particular case. The general principle is that if interest is paid or is to be paid on any such amount, or if the stockholder's or officer's right to repayment of such amount ranks with or before that of the general creditors, the amount so left with the corporation must be considered as borrowed capital and be so treated in computing invested capital.

These credits unquestionably rank, in law, with the claims of other general creditors; even though by the good faith and honor of these three stockholders, they would be voluntarily deferred until the claims of the other general creditors had been liquidated in full.

The Committee, moreover, can not concede the corporation's contention that it is being penalized merely because of its failure to have made a "book entry" converting these credits into capital stock; because there can be no doubt that these credits being a direct and fixed obligation of the corporation, have not at all the same status among the corporation's liabilities as would have been the case had they, by formal action of the board, been converted into capital stock and certificates issued therefor, or had the interested stockholders waived all proprietary rights to them and thus actually contributed them to surplus.

Therefore, the Committee is of the opinion that the Income Tax Unit was correct in disallowing as invested capital this amount of 36x dollars and the action of the Unit is confirmed.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that special accounts in a corporation, represented by interest-bearing notes in the hands of certain stockholders, cannot be included in invested capital, even though such notes carry a condition that demand for payment will not be made until all general credits are satisfied.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M

Company, a corporation, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing an item of 3 dollars as invested capital, this amount having been paid into the corporation by certain stockholders and held, at interest, under certain conditions as working capital of the corporation.

This company was incorporated July, 191-, with an authorized capital stock of 4x dollars of which only 3x dollars has been paid in. Its business is conducted on the same general plan and by practically the same individuals who were copartners in the predecessor company. Prior to the incorporation, the partners had allowed a portion of their earnings to remain in the business, such amounts being credited as "Special Accounts" of partners. When the partnership was liquidated certain partners returned their pro rata share in distribution to the corporation and on the books of the corporation amounts so paid in were again credited to certain "Special Accounts." Since the incorporation certain other amounts, acquired by declaration of dividend, have been credited to these accounts. It is stated that it was the intention of the stockholders, as it had been the custom of the partners, to allow this fund to be used in the business of the company so long as it was necessary, subject to all the debts of the corporation as fully as though it had been paid in for capital stock.

It is accordingly contended by the corporation that the entire amount so credited to the special accounts is "Surplus accumulated during the existence of the partnership and the existence of the corporation—while technically the amount received from the partnership cannot be treated as a surplus of the corporation, still so far as the individual interest of the stockholder is concerned, it is the same thing as though the entire amount was an accumulated surplus of the corporation."

These special accounts of the corporation are now covered by notes, the pertinent part of which reads as follows:

By mutual agreement and consent, demand for payment of this note is not to be made by ....., his heirs or assigns, until all of the indebtedness of the M Company, for money borrowed, merchandise bought and delivered, together with unfilled contracts for merchandise bought which may be outstanding when notice is given that payment is desired, has been fully paid and satisfied. This note is nonnegotiable.

The Income Tax Unit has denied the inclusion of these special accounts for invested capital for the following reasons:

1. They represent advances made by the stockholders from time to time but not in proportion to stockholdings and, therefore, do not represent paid-in surplus.

2. They were secured by notes which were payable on demand provided all obligations outstanding at the time demand was made were satisfied, and accordingly the obligation of the notes is inferior to claims of general creditors only until the date when notice is given that payment is desired.

3. The notes contain an absolute and unconditional promise to pay interest every six months, which promise is not modified by the provision subrogating the principal of the notes to the general creditors, and accordingly the notes could not be considered in the light of preferred stock.

The Committee finds this case quite analogous to that covered by its recommendation No. 102. (Cumulative Bulletin No. 2, page 277.) The following exceptions of importance, however, are noted:

1. The special accounts, as indicated, represent loans only by special stockholders.

2. Interest is paid on such loans.

3. An agreement in the notes to the effect that demand for payment is not to be made until all indebtedness of the corporation is liquidated.

4. The guarantee of certain stockholders to be individually responsible for the entire debts of the corporation to the extent of the private resources of such stockholders.

The stockholders are ten in number. Of this ten, five are owners of the so-called "Special Accounts" for which the above-mentioned notes were given. The liability, therefore, is not to all of the stockholders, pro rata according to the shareholdings. It is not an undivided amount which may be distributed pro rata in liquidation. The amounts so retained in the business are subject to interest charges and interest is actually accrued but it is apparently credited to the special accounts in part or in whole. There is an obligation on the part of the stockholders directly interested in the special accounts, not to demand payment of the notes supporting these special accounts until the indebtedness of the corporation is fully paid and satisfied but this agreement does not preclude the corporation as a distinct entity from liquidating these liabilities at such time as it may be deemed proper and in accordance with the tenor of the notes—not pro rata according to shareholders in the corporation. Furthermore, as stated by the Income Tax Unit: "The notes contained an absolute and unconditional promise to pay interest every six months, which promise is not modified by the provisions subrogating the principal of the notes to the general creditors and accordingly the notes could not be considered in the light of preferred stock."

It is further stated in affidavit submitted by the five stockholders, who financially give independent support to the corporation, that they are "guarantors of the debts of the corporation on guarantees given by the corporation to our banks and brokers and each and every one of us is individually liable on these guarantees for the entire debts of the corporation up to the extent of our private means as fully as though we were members of a partnership." This obligation establishes a right of action against the stockholders individually and not against the corporation. As against the corporation it would not be enforceable at law, which limits the liability of the stockholder to his share of paid-in capital.

Briefly, it may be stated that capital in a corporate enterprise is:

1. Cash or property paid in by subscription to capital stock or as paid-in surplus.

2. Borrowed money for which obligations of the corporation may be issued.

3. Undivided increment of income resting in the surplus of the corporation.

Manifestly these "Special Accounts" do not represent either stock subscriptions or undivided increment of income. In the latter the shareholder's interest is measured by his pro rata share interest in the corporation. This undivided increment of income is not a vested right. Borrowed capital is not invested capital under section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917, which reads:

* * * As used in this title "invested capital" does not include * * * money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership:

Supplementary Bulletin Rulings.

- (1) Actual cash paid in, * * * and
- (3) Paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business * * *

It seems pertinent at this point to quote from the recommendation of this Committee (102), supra:

Under section 207 as quoted above, these credits are, in law, obviously either borrowed money or earned surplus and undivided profits. The very purpose for which and the circumstances under which they were created excludes them from consideration as "surplus and undivided profits." It was to determine exactly the equities of these three stockholders in the profits or surplus, until that time undivided, that these credits were established. The president of this corporation vigorously denies that they are "surplus" of the company in the sense that all the present stockholders have a right to share in them ratably, and admits that these rights of these three stockholders would be asserted as against the other stockholders, though not against the general creditors. That being true, they form no part at all of the "surplus" of the corporation, and the alternative that they are borrowed money cannot be escaped.

Accordingly the Committee recommends that the conclusions of the Income Tax Unit in denying these "Special Accounts" as invested capital, be sustained under section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Recommended, in the case of the M Company, that treasury demand notes drawn by order of the president of a corporation payable to its stockholders, but not in proportion of shareholdings, do not constitute a liability of the corporation even though such notes are charged against surplus on the books of the company.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing the item of  $x$  dollars as invested capital in the taxable year 1918 on the ground that the item constituted notes of the corporation in the hands of its stockholders.

The facts, as submitted, are as follows:

The company had prior to December 31, 1910, acquired a paid-in and earned surplus of  $x$  dollars, represented by increased inventory stock, capital expenditures on machinery, plant, and equipment, and accounts receivable and notes receivable, thus absorbing the whole of this amount in the conduct of the business.

At this time the president of the corporation instructed the secretary of the company to make demand notes out in the names of the stockholders for their respective interests in the  $x$  dollars, merely as a memorandum of the amount representing such interest, and not as an obligation of the company.

The board of directors never authorized the issue of these notes, and there is no resolution on the records of the corporation authorizing the issue of these notes; said notes were never issued to the respective stockholders, but were retained by the treasurer of the corporation, and are to-day in his possession. The notes were made without any reference to payment of interest, or principal, and no interest has been paid, or credited to the accounts of the respective stockholders, and furthermore it was not the intent when these notes were made out to pay either the principal or interest, as the company was never in a financial position to liquidate this amount.

No entry was ever made on the books of the company apportioning this amount to the respective stockholders, the amount reading "undivided surplus."

These facts are not disputed by the Income Tax Unit, but the Unit contends that the demand notes in the amount of  $x$  dollars issued to the stockholders of the corporation in effect represent borrowed capital and, therefore, should be disallowed as statutory invested capital in accordance with Article 813 of Regulations 45.

The Unit has evidently overlooked the fact that a corporation can not, without consideration, issue notes to its stockholders for the amount of its surplus, except by declaration of dividends prorata according to stock-holdings, for the stockholders have no vested right in the surplus of a corporation. If this transaction was intended as a dividend with the accrued liability covered by demand notes, it was not sanctioned by formal resolution of the directors.

It is manifest the issuance of the notes was not for the purpose of setting up a dividend liability, because the company states, and its statement is not controverted, that no apportionment of the  $x$  dollars was made prorata according to shareholdings of the stockholders. The action taken by the secretary of the company was on instructions from its president, and the only entry made was to debit surplus to the credit of notes payable.

Furthermore, delivery of demand notes by the maker is essential to negotiability, and as long as these notes remain in possession of the corporation without formal declaration of distribution of surplus prorata according to shareholdings under formal action of the corporation, they can not be held to constitute a liability.

The Committee accordingly is of the opinion that the action of the Income Tax Unit in considering this amount as borrowed capital should be reversed.

34-21-1786: O. D. 1006.

A Massachusetts corporation declared dividends as follows: November, 1916,  $x$  dollars; December, 1916,  $x$  dollars. These dividends were credited to the respective accounts of the shareholders with the understanding that they were not to be drawn against, and were not to bear interest, since the corporation needed the capital and it did not possess the cash with which to make actual payment. These dividends have been treated as liabilities of the corporation from 1916 down to date, and no interest has been paid or accrued thereon. The first dividend was formally declared by the board of directors, but the second dividend was credited to the stockholders, under an agreement that it was to be like the first dividend, although its declaration was not recorded in the minutes book of the corporation.

The corporation requests permission to use these amounts credited to the stockholders' accounts as a part of its invested capital.

Held, in view of Massachusetts court decisions that the dividend formally declared by the board of directors and credited to the accounts of the stockholders on the books of the company was a distribution of part of the corporation's surplus. From the date of its declaration the corporation became a debtor and the stockholders became creditors, ranking with general creditors in their right to reduce to possession the amounts credited to their accounts.

The amounts of surplus agreed to be credited to the stockholders' accounts by all the stockholders without formal action on the part of the directors was equivalent to a dividend. Its effect on the corporation's surplus and the rights of the stockholders are exactly the same as though the dividend had been formally declared.

While the corporation may have had the use of the amounts credited to the stockholders, it was at all times liable to them for payment. Viewed in this light, the corporation's surplus must be reduced from the date the first dividend was formally declared and from the date the agreement was made informally to further credit stockholders' accounts with profits.

A corporation filed a return for 1920 showing a loss of  $2x$  dollars. At the close of the taxable year the corporation owed its officers  $4x$  dollars, which it was unable to pay. The officers agreed to a reduction of  $x$  dollars each, which, after the permission of this office had been granted, the officers deducted in reporting their salaries on their individual returns. A total of  $3x$  dollars was waived by the three officers. This amount was credited to surplus in January, 1921, thus wiping out the deficit which existed at the close of 1920. While this book credit was actually made in 1921 it is contended that it was really an offset to the losses of 1920, and if so regarded, the corporation would show a credit balance for 1920 of  $x$  dollars.

It is held that the amounts waived by the officers did not constitute income to the corporation. Such amounts are paid-in surplus and should be so treated in making a return for the year 1921. Therefore no amended return is required for the year 1920.

This ruling is based on the principle that there was in fact a valid obligation on the part of the corporation to pay the amounts waived by the officers. If no such obligation existed, an amended return should be filed in which the amounts claimed as a deduction on account of the salaries of the officers should be reduced, which would result in there being additional taxable income disclosed by the corporation's return.

I ('22)—22-322: I. T. 1334.

Revenue Act of 1918.

In November, 1919, the stockholders of the M Company, by proper resolution, voted to increase the capital stock of the company. In pursuance of such resolution, the officers of the company issued to everyone entitled thereto a certificate called a "stock subscription warrant" setting forth the terms upon which subscription to the stock of the new issue would be received. If such person accepted the offer to subscribe, his acceptance was indicated by signing a printed acceptance on the back of such warrant. It was provided that such warrant should be surrendered to the M Company on or before January —, 1920, accompanied by an installment payment of.... per cent of the par value of the stock subscribed for. Upon such surrender and payment the company issued to the subscriber a stock subscription certificate which read as follows:

This certifies that.....has subscribed for.....shares of the capital stock of the M Company, of a par value of $100 each, in accordance with resolutions adopted by the stockholders on November, 1919, and has agreed to pay therefor the par value thereof, and has paid the first installment of.....per cent thereon, and that subsequent installments will be payable * * * as follows:

Second installment on or before April —, 1920.

Third installment on or before July —, 1920.

Interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum will be allowed from January —, 1920, to June —, 1920, on all payments made on or before January —, 1920, and interest at said rate will be allowed from April —, 1920, to June —, 1920, on all payments made after January —, 1920, and on or before April —, 1920. And the stock subscribed for will participate in dividends from and after July —, 1920.

Upon full and final payment as herein provided, and the surrender of this certificate, and as soon as may be practical after July —, 1920, certificate for full paid stock will be issued, and adjustment of interest will be made.

In the event of a failure to pay any of said installments when due, the company may sell the stock subscribed for at public or private sale without notice, and apply the net proceeds to the payment of the amount still payable under said subscription, accounting to the subscriber for any surplus, he to remain liable for any deficit.

This certificate may be transferred by assignment as indorsed hereon, but no transfer hereof will be valid until this certificate is surrendered and the transfer is recorded on the books of the company.

The payments made by the subscribers were credited on the general books of the company to an account called "Received on stock subscriptions, new issue," but on the books of the transfer department an account was kept with each subscriber, crediting him with payments made and showing the amounts of interest paid him.

The M Company is a corporation organized under the laws of Texas.

Article 1145 of the Revised Statutes of Texas (See Vernon's Sayles' Texas Civil Statutes, 1914) governing increases in capital stock provides as follows:

Art. 1145. May increase its capital stock, how.—A corporation may increase its authorized capital by a two-thirds vote of all its stock; provided, that no stock shall be issued except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received. And when such vote is given in favor of the increase, the same may be done by the board of directors, trustees or managing board of such corporation; and, upon such increase of stock being made in accordance with the above provisions and certified to the secretary of state by the directors, together with satisfactory proof, which shall be the affidavit of the directors showing that the full amount of the increase has been in good faith subscribed, and 50 per cent thereof paid, and in other respects conforming to the proof required as on original application for charter, or showing that such portion thereof has been subscribed, or subscribed and paid, as is required for the corporation thus increasing its stock, and, if the secretary of state is satisfied that the increase of stock has been made in accordance with law and that the requirements of law have been complied with as to the subscription and payment of stock and in other respects, as on an original application for charter, he shall file such certificate of increase; and thereupon the same shall become a part of the capital stock of such corporation. Such certificate shall be filed and recorded in the same manner as the charter.

The certificate of increase, with the necessary proof to support the same, was not filed with the secretary of state until August, 1920, whereupon such increase was approved. Thereafter the subscription certificates were taken up and canceled and certificates of stock were issued to the holders thereof.

The question presented in the case is whether the payments made in accordance with the agreement evidenced by the stock subscription certificates should be treated as a part of the capital stock of the company from the time of the receipt of each such payment or should be treated as borrowed capital until the increase in the capital stock of the company was properly authorized.

Payments received by a corporation for which it is obligated eventually to issue stock, which it has no present power to issue, meanwhile paying interest, may be treated as constituting a loan until the stock is issued rather than as a payment into the capital stock of the company. (Associated Pipe Line Co. v. United States, 258 Fed., 800.) The nature of the agreement under which payments are received is dependent upon the intention of the parties. Under article 1140 of the Revised Statutes of Texas, every private corporation, as such, has power "to enter into any obligation or contract essential to the transaction of its authorized business." Such power includes the power to borrow money. An agreement entered into by a corporation having power to borrow money is prima facie a loan agreement if it contains provisions for the payment by such corporation of interest upon money received by it thereunder. Interest is compensation for the use of money.

Under article 1145 of the Revised Statutes of Texas, quoted above, an increase in the capital stock of a company does not become effective until a certificate of such increase has been filed with the secretary of state. This provision is very similar in its operation to article 1132 of such statutes, which provides that the existence of a corporation shall date from the filing of the charter in the office of the secretary of state. In Bank of De Soto v. Reed (50 Texas Civil Appeals 102, 109 S. W., 259) it was said that performance of all the prerequisites short of filing the charter with the secretary of state is not sufficient to bring a company into existence as a corporation de jure, nor are such acts sufficient to create an association a corporation de facto. The court said that the filing of the charter in the office of the secretary of state was a necessary act to bring the corporation into existence. The requirements of article 1145 with respect to an increase of capital stock are expressly placed upon the same basis as an original application for a charter. Articles 1132 and 1145 are provisions of law in pari materia, and if the charter of the proposed corporation is not effective until the filing thereof in the office of the secretary of state, a proposed increase in the capital stock of a company is likewise not effective until a certificate of increase has been filed with the secretary of state. It follows that prior to complete compliance with the provisions of article 1145 a corporation has no power to increase its capital stock. The issuance of share-stock by the company before such compliance would be ultra vires. An unauthorized increase of capital stock is void and a subscriber to such increase incurs no liability by reason of his subscription, nor can he derive any benefits from it. The contract fails for lack of consideration to support it. (Kampmann v. Tarver, 87 Tex., 491; 29 S. W., 768, 769, citing Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S., 143, and Insurance Co. v. Kamper, 73 Ala., 325.)

The M Company had no power, therefore, to issue, prior to August, 1920, new shares of stock pursuant to the increase of its capital stock voted by the stockholders. The contract set out in the certificate quoted above evidences an understanding by the parties of this fact. It was provided that shares of stock would be issued as soon as practicable after the final payment upon the subscription was made, which may fairly be construed to mean that share-stock would be issued when the authority to do so was procured. Meanwhile the subscriber was not, of course, a shareholder or member. The company had no authority to bring him in as such. His relations with the corporation could not extend beyond his contract, which, under the circumstances, was one of purchase of share-stock to come into being in the future. Since he was not a stockholder or member he could not share in the earnings of the company. He was in all fairness, of course, entitled to a return upon the money paid in and for this reason the company agreed to pay him interest in the manner set out in the subscription certificate. There is no qualification of the subscriber's right to interest for the period specified. It was payable whether or not the company had earnings on hand when it fell due. Such interest payments can not, therefore, be considered to be distributions of profit. While the subscription contract does not contemplate a repayment of the money paid by the subscriber, the company's right to such payments was not complete until it was properly authorized to increase its capital stock. In view of this fact, together with the considerations outlined above, it is believed that the payments made to the M Company under the subscription contracts here considered should be treated as borrowed capital until the authorization to increase the company capital stock was properly secured.

It follows that the interest payments made are properly deductible as such by the company. Such payments, in the hands of the holders of the stock subscription certificates, constitute interest received and are subject to both normal tax and surtax. This is so, even if such payments were made by way of a credit to the price of the share-stock to the subscriber, in which case such interest payments are to be treated as if received by the subscribers and immediately reinvested by applying them to the purchase price of the new stock.

Section 207, Revenue Act of 1917. Section 326, Revenue Act of 1918.

Recommended in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that certain items of earned surplus distributed upon appellant's books and placed to the credit of individual surplus accounts standing in the names of the stockholders do not constitute a part of invested capital under section 207, Revenue Act of 1917, and section 326, Revenue Act of 1918, be sustained, and, accordingly, that the appeal be denied.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that certain items appearing on its books on January 1, 1917, and January 1, 1918, do not constitute earned surplus within the meaning of section 207, Revenue Act of 1917, and section 326, Revenue Act of 1918, and therefore are not to be included in invested capital for those years.

The appellant through its representatives, both by brief and in oral conference, has submitted arguments in support of its contention that the items involved should be treated as earned surplus used and employed in the business and as such included in the computation of its invested capital.

The facts as they appear upon the record are substantially as follows: The taxpayer was incorporated in Connecticut in 189—. The outstanding capital stock is  $x$  dollars. Prior to 1917 there were but three stockholders, two of them, A and B, owning substantially the entire capital stock in nearly equal proportions. In 1917 and 1918 there were four stockholders. A holding 52 per cent, B, 45 per cent, and two others each holding  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. Until 1918 the taxpayer was engaged in manufacturing. During 1918 it was engaged in the manufacture of certain devices for the Government. Its net income for 1917 was  $10.4x$  dollars, and for 1918,  $2.3x$  dollars.

For many years prior to 1917 it was the custom of the board of directors to pass a resolution annually authorizing a distribution of the year's net income to the stockholders pro rata to their stockholdings. On January —, 1917, the directors passed the following resolution, differing from those passed annually for many years prior thereto only in the designation of the year to which it applied:

It was moved and voted that the net profit for the year ending December 31, 1916, be divided pro rata with the stockholders as the individual holdings appear and credit the amount to the individual surplus accounts standing in the names of the stockholders.

On January —, 1918, the following resolution was passed, referring to the division of profits for the year 1917:

It was moved and voted that the net profits remaining after deducting salaries, expenses, and war-profits tax be divided in the following proportions and the amounts credited to the individual surplus accounts of the stockholders:

	Per cent.
A.....	52
B.....	45
C.....	$1\frac{1}{2}$
D.....	$1\frac{1}{2}$

Pursuant to these resolutions, the amount of the surplus at the end of each year was credited on the corporation's books to the surplus accounts standing in the names of the stockholders. From time to time the stockholders withdrew a portion of the amounts credited to their accounts without further authority from the corporation, although this was done only after consultation between A and B, the president and treasurer, respectively. Such withdrawals were never in excess of current annual earnings, except in the year 1918, and were charged by the taxpayer to the special surplus accounts bearing the names of the respective stockholders. An examination of the individual returns of the stockholders shows, and this is admitted in the affidavit of the president, A, that they reported the income when credited to their accounts and not when actually withdrawn.

The entire profits credited to the stockholders' accounts were not withdrawn immediately or in any one year, but were allowed to accumulate from time to time, and remain in the business, without interest. The aggregate amount of the accumulated earnings remaining in the business on January, 1917 and 1918 was 18.8x dollars and 19.5x dollars, respectively. The current profits and withdrawals, which do not include salary, were as follows for the years which are material here:

Year.	Current profits.	Withdrawals.
	Dollars.	Dollars.
1916.....	7.7x	3.0x
1917.....	6.1x	5.8x
1918.....	1.9x	3.5x

In connection with the income and excess-profits tax returns for the year 1917 and income and profits tax return for the year 1918, the Unit has held that the earnings and profits, placed to the credit of the individual stockholders and voluntarily left in the business without interest, should be treated as borrowed capital no part of which can be included in computing invested capital. The Unit relies upon A. R. R. 102 (C. B. 2, p. 277) and A. R. R. 133 (not published).

A computation of the tax under sections 201 and 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 301 of the Revenue Act of 1918 indicated a tax liability in excess of — per cent of the net income of the corporation for these years. The taxpayer, therefore, was granted relief under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

The taxpayer has declined to accept the relief granted and appeals. It contends that the surplus of the taxpayer credited to the surplus accounts in the names of the stockholders and used in the business constitute earned surplus and not borrowed money, and, therefore, is a part of its invested capital. It contends that the resolutions referred to do not constitute a legal declaration of a dividend. The taxpayer concedes that the withdrawals by the stockholders reduced the invested capital by the amounts thereof from the date of such withdrawals.

The question at issue has been considered by the Solicitor of Internal Revenue upon the basis of the facts just stated and under date of May —, 1922, he submitted to this Committee an informal opinion the pertinent portions of which are here quoted:

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917, in defining invested capital, limits it among other things to the following, subdivision (a) (3):

Paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year.

The corresponding provision of the Revenue Act of 1918, section 326(a)3, reads:

Supplementary Bulletin Rulings.

* Paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year.

The questions involved here rest on whether the proportionate amounts of annual earned surplus credited to the respective individual surplus account of the several stockholders were dividends, or in whole or in part earned surplus.

Article 858, Regulations 45, in so far as pertinent here reads as follows:

A dividend other than a stock dividend affects the computation of invested capital from the date when the dividend is payable and not from the date when it is declared, except that where no date is set for its payment the date when declared will be considered also the date when payable for the purpose of this article. * * * From the date when any dividend is payable the amount which the several stockholders are entitled to receive will be treated as if actually paid to them, whether or not it is so paid in fact, and the surplus and undivided profits, either of the taxable year or of the preceding years, will in accordance with the foregoing provisions be deemed to be reduced as of that date by the full amount of the dividend.

The statute of Connecticut as to dividends follows the general form as that of most States. It prohibits a corporation from paying any dividend or from making any other distribution of its assets except from its net profits or actual surplus, unless in accordance with the law as to the reduction of stock or upon dissolution.

While the resolutions referred to do not specifically refer to the amounts credited to the so-called individual surplus accounts as dividends, the purpose is clear that it was intended to make available to each stockholder at least a large part if not all of the amounts so credited. This is evidenced by the large withdrawals without any further corporate action. While the usual and proper way to appropriate corporation profits to stockholders is by formally declaring a dividend, it has been very generally held that there may be a division of profits among stockholders without the formality of declaring a dividend, and that such a division is the equivalent of a dividend. (Smith v. Moore, 199 Fed., 689; Hartley v. Pioneer Iron Works, 73 N. E., 576 (N. Y.)) And it has been held that if the directors ascertain the profits and set apart the portion thereof that is to be divided, a failure to observe the forms prescribed by law as to the time, place and manner of declaring them is immaterial. (Breslin v. Fries-Breslin Co., 58 Atl., 313 (N. J.)) This is the law in Connecticut. (Cogswell v. Second National Bank, 60 Atl., 1059, affirmed in 204 U. S., 1.)

In the instant case the directors having ascertained the profits, and set apart certain sums which were actually credited to the individual stockholders, all matters of form are immaterial. The evidence shows that at stated times the specific things necessary to warrant a declaration of dividends were done and that the profits actually made were set apart for distribution among the stockholders. This is the essence of the declaration of a dividend, so far as it results in segregating a portion of the property of the company for the use of the stockholders. Thenceforward the corporation, as such, had no property interest in the money thus set apart. (Breslin v. Fries-Breslin Co., supra; Barnes v. Spencer & Barnes Co., 127 N. W., 752 (Mich.); Cogswell v. Second National Bank, supra (Conn.)) The effect of the declaration of a dividend is at once the establishment of a debt due from the corporation to each stockholder. (Boardman v. Mansfield, 66 Atl., 169 (Conn.); Bishop v. Bishop, 71 Atl., 583 (Conn.))

The amounts credited to the accounts of the respective stockholders were freely drawn upon and the amounts so credited reported as income by the individual stockholders when credited to their accounts. These are circumstances which are of great persuasive force in reaching a conclusion as to how the individual stockholders themselves considered the amounts so credited.

It is, therefore, the opinion of this office that the proportionate amounts of the annual earned surplus credited to the respective individual surplus accounts of the several stockholders were dividends, and that such surplus accounts were in effect debts owing at all times by the corporation to its stockholders, any withdrawal by individual stockholders merely being a debit against the proper individual surplus account. It follows that for the years 1917 and 1918 the net credit balances of individual surplus accounts can not be included in the invested capital of the M Company.

In accordance with the above opinion of the Solicitor, in which the Committee concurs, it is recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that certain amounts standing as credits to the individual surplus accounts of stockholders on January 1, 1917, and January 1, 1918, represented dividends owing to its stockholders and not, as contended by the appellant, earned surplus which could properly be included in invested capital, be sustained, and, accordingly, that the appeal be denied.

Revenue Act of 1918.

A corporation succeeded a partnership on January 1, 1918, and took over the assets and liabilities of the partnership at their book value. One of the items taken over was a reserve for taxes which represented the amount of the excess-profits tax due by the partnership and the amount of the income taxes due by the individual partners. The corporation, in opening its balance sheet on January 1, 1918, set up this reserve for taxes and claimed it as a part of its invested capital as of January 1, 1918.

Held, that the reserve for taxes when transferred from the partnership to the corporation represented borrowed capital in the possession of the corporation and that, in accordance with the provisions of section 326(b) of the Revenue Act of 1918, it could not be included in the invested capital of the corporation.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION BONDS—"ADMISSIBLE ASSETS."

Interest on an amount of bonds of the War Finance Corporation, the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000, is exempt from Federal income and excess-profits taxes. Corporate funds invested in such bonds are inadmissible assets to the extent that they are invested in bonds of a face value of not more than $5,000, but funds of a corporation or an association invested in such bonds are admissible assets so far as they are invested in such bonds beyond a principal or face value of $5,000.

Opinion is requested as to whether War Finance Corporation bonds are admissible or inadmissible assets of a corporation, within the meaning of section 325(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918. That subsection includes the provision that—

The term "inadmissible assets" means * * * bonds and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income * * *. The term "admissible assets" means all assets other than inadmissible assets, valued in accordance with the provision of subdivision (a) of section 326, section 330, and section 331.

Therefore, if funds which would otherwise be a part of the invested capital of a corporation are invested in War Finance Corporation bonds, no exclusion of funds so invested from invested capital will be necessary unless interest on such bonds is not included in computing net income. As shown below, the interest on so much of the principal of such bonds as exceeds $5,000 is included in net income, and no funds so invested are to be considered inadmissible assets, by reason of being invested in such bonds, except as are invested in bonds having a face value of $5,000, the interest on which is exempt.

This conclusion has the following basis:

War Finance Corporation bonds, held in excess of $5,000 principal, are subject to surtaxes, although not to normal taxes, under the provisions of section 213(a) (4) Revenue Act of 1918—

In the case of bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective Acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from taxation to the taxpayer both under this title and under Title III.

That is, if, under the Acts authorizing the issuing of such bonds, they are not wholly exempt from taxation, such interest may not be excluded from gross income. These bonds are issued under the authority of the Act of April 5, 1918, which provides, in section 16—

That all such bonds shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States * * * except (a) estate or inheritance taxes and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess profits and war profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations. The interest on the amount of such bonds the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000, owned by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association shall be exempt from the taxes referred to in clause (b).

Recognizing that a taxpayer may be required to include a certain amount of interest upon such bonds in gross income, section 216(b) of the Revenue Act of 1918 allows a credit for—

The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States and bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, which is included in gross income under section 213.

It is therefore held that interest on an amount of bonds of the War Finance Corporation, the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000, is exempt from Federal income and excess profits taxes. Corporate funds invested in such bonds are inadmissible assets to the extent that they are invested in bonds of a face value of not more than $5,000, but funds of a corporation or an association invested in such bonds are admissible assets so far as they are invested in such bonds beyond a principal or face value of $5,000.

Inquiry if made whether 4 per cent bonds of the Government of the Philippine Islands are to be considered admissible or inadmissible assets in computing invested capital.

Section 325 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that:

The term "inadmissible assets" means stocks, bonds and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income * * *.

It is further provided in section 213(b) 4 of the Act that interest upon obligations issued by a possession of the United States is exempt from Federal income tax.

The bonds referred to are not obligations of the United States, but on the contrary are obligations of a possession of the United States. Accordingly, it is held, that 4 per cent bonds of the Government of the Philippine Islands are inadmissible assets within the meaning of section 325 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1918.

The M. Company, a corporation with a fiscal year ending April 30, 1922, owned on May 1, 1921, y shares of the capital stock of the O Company which were carried as an asset at x dollars, representing their cost price.

In June, 1921, the O Company was dissolved. The general corporation laws of the State under which it was organized provide that a corporation continues in existence for three years after the date of its dissolution for the purpose of closing its business and distributing its assets, but not for the purpose of continuing its business, and that during this period the directors or governing body of the corporation are its trustees with power to settle its affairs, convey its property, pay its obligations, and divide its remaining assets among its stockholders.

Inquiry is made whether the undivided interest of the M Company in the liquidation of the assets of the O Company is an admissible asset from and after June, 1921, the date of the dissolution of the latter company.

Held, that the interest of the M Company in the assets of the dissolved corporation is represented by its stock in that corporation until such time as the assets of that corporation are actually distributed. It accordingly follows that any interest the M Company has in such assets prior to their distribution must be classed as an inadmissible asset.

Inquiry is made whether bonds issued by Porto Rico and Hawaii are inadmissible assets.

The Revenue Act of 1918 provides, in part, as follows:

Section 325(a). That as used in this title the term "inadmissible assets" means stocks, bonds, and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income * * *

It is further provided in paragraph 4, section 213(b), of the Act that interest upon obligations of a possession or territory of the United States is exempt from Federal taxation.

The foregoing provisions of law are here applicable. The bonds referred to are not obligations of the United States within the meaning of the parenthetical clause embodied in section 325(a) of the Act. Therefore, they fall squarely within the general language of that section and must be held to be inadmissible assets.

A corporation sold inadmissible assets consisting of stock at a profit and so brought itself within the provisions of article 817 of Regulations 62, to the effect that where the income derived from inadmissible assets consists in part of profit from the disposition thereof, a corresponding part of the capital invested in such assets shall be deemed an admissible asset.

The question was submitted as to whether under these conditions a corporation should deduct only the cost of the stock sold from its inadmissible assets for the period after the sale or whether it is permitted to deduct an amount equal to the amount which is added to admissibles as a result of the sale of the stock.

Held, that under the conditions stated, a corporation can decrease its inadmissibles only in an amount equal to the cost of the stock sold, for the period after the sale, as the value of both admissible and inadmissible assets employed in determining the invested capital of a corporation is represented by their cost of acquisition. In other words, when inadmissible assets are eliminated through sale, the total value of the inadmissibles is reduced by the cost price of the inadmissibles sold.

A corresponding increase equal to the cost of the inadmissibles sold should be made in admissibles effective only from the date of the sale, unless such proceeds are reinvested in admissibles. Any profit realized during the year on the sale of inadmissibles is a current profit and can not, under the provisions of the statute (section 326(3)), be included in invested capital until the succeeding year.

A bank is in possession of certain warrants drawn by a school district on the superintendent of schools for a county. These warrants are in the nature of drafts drawn in favor of the teachers in the public schools of a particular district. They were cashed by the bank as a matter of accommodation only for the teachers of the district. These warrants have been returned by the superintendent upon whom they were drawn with the notation thereon that no funds were available with which to meet these obligations. The warrants are carried by the bank without any remuneration in the shape of interest or discount.

Advice is requested as to whether these school warrants are admissible or inadmissible assets for the purpose of computing invested capital.

The definition of "inadmissible assets" as laid down in the different revenue Acts implies that stocks, bonds, and other obligations must be potentially interest-bearing or dividend-producing securities to come within the classification of an inadmissible asset. In the instant case it appears that the drafts, or school warrants, were cashed for the accommodation merely of the school teachers in whose favor they were drawn. No discount was received by and no interest is payable to the bank.

Held, that the noninterest bearing warrants drawn by the particular school district on the superintendent of schools for a county are admissible assets capable of being included in the invested capital of the bank in computing its assets. VALUATION OF INVESTED CAPITAL IN CASE OF CONSOLIDATION PRIOR TO MARCH 3, 1917.

Where two corporations are engaged in different branches of the same business, and the certificate of incorporation of one of them is amended so as to change its name and increase its capital stock, which new stock is issued in exchange for the stock of the original companies, and this exchange is made prior to March 3, 1917, to determine the invested capital of the new organization there should be added to the invested capital, as defined by Section 207 (a), Revenue Act of 1917, of the company whose certificate has been awarded the fair value of the assets of the other company, this latter valuation to be made as of the date of the exchange of stock, and not of a later formal transfer of the tangible assets. (Revenue Act of 1917, secs. 201, 207, and 208.)

Opinion is requested as to the method of determining the amount of the invested capital of the Z Company for the year 1917.

In the year 1916 the M Company and the Y Company were engaged in the manufacture and sale of certain commodities. The M Company had a capitalization of 8x dollars; the Y Company of 5x dollars. It was decided to consolidate the business of the two companies, and to this end the certificate of incorporation of the M Company was in 1916 amended so as to change its name to "Z Company," and to increase its capital stock to 67x dollars. The stock of the Z Company was in that year issued to the stockholders of the M Company and of the Y Company. The assets of the Y Company were formally transferred to the Z Company by a bill of sale and by deed in 1917. A valuation was made in 1916 of the properties of the two companies which indicated that the net assets of the M Company were 12x dollars and of the Y Company 10x dollars. The Z Company seeks to have this valuation of the assets of the two companies, a total of 22x dollars, accepted as the basis of its invested capital for the year 1917.

It is assumed from the statement of facts that there was no change of corporate entity as between the M Company and Z Company, a theory which seems fair to the taxpayer by reason of the statement in the brief presented in its behalf that the certificate of incorporation of the M Company was amended, changing its name to "Z Company," and increasing its capital stock, etc.

The question presented is whether a "reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership" under these facts was effected before or after March 3, 1917, within the meaning of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917; and if before March 3, 1917, how far the valuation of the assets of the two companies made in 1916 may be accepted as the basis of the invested capital of the Z Company for 1917.

The original M Company dealt in raw product, and the Y Company bought and manufactured it. It was, however, decided that the entire business could be better conducted under one management; and with this end in view the M Company increased its capital stock and issued it in exchange for the stock of the other two companies. The result was to vest complete control of the entire business in the Z Company, and to transfer to that company the control of the property of the Y Company as of the time when such merger so became legally effective, which was in 1916.

The Revenue Act of 1917 imposed a tax called the "War excess profits tax" upon "the net income of every corporation, partnership, or individual," in so far as such income exceeded certain percentages "of the invested capital for the taxable year" of the taxpayer (Revenue Act of 1917, sec. 201). "Invested capital" is defined as consisting of (1) actual cash paid in; (2) the cash value of tangible property paid in; and (3) surplus and undivided profits, exclusive of those earned in the taxable year (sec. 207). The statute further provides:

That in case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business of 50 per cent or more remains in control of the same persons, corporation, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received, unless such asset was paid for specifically as such, in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment. (Sec. 202.)

The general rule indicated in the statute is that the value of invested capital is to be determined at the time when it is "paid in." It must now be decided when such payment is deemed to be made in cases where there has been a transfer or substitution of stock made in 1916, followed by a formal transfer of tangible assets in 1917.

Restating the rule of section 208, Revenue Act of 1917, for the determination of invested capital:

A. By express provision where there is a reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership, (1) after March 3, 1917, and (2) 50 per cent or more of an interest or control remains in the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then as to assets transferred or received from the prior trade or business, no greater value shall be allowed therefor than if there had been no transfer, unless paid for in cash or tangible property.

B. In cases not covered by the provision quoted, that is, cases where the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership occurred before March 3, 1917, or after March 3, 1917, with less than 50 per cent remaining in the same control, the invested capital will be determined under the general rule. But where there is no change of identity of the absorbing organization, its prior assets must be valued under section 207 and not at the time of the reorganization, consolidation, or transfer, since there was no transfer of its assets at that time.

Applying the rule to the present case, the mere change of name by a nendment with an increase of stock did not involve a change of identity as to the M Company, and there could not have been therefore, a transfer of the assets of that organization within the meaning of the statute. As to the Y Company, there was a transfer of control, and under the facts this transfer was consummated before March 3, 1917, and its assets may therefore be valued as of the time of such transfer.

It will be necessary, therefore, in determining the invested capital of the Z Company to add to the valuation of the assets of the Y Company made in 1916 (assuming such a valuation to have been fair) such a sum as represents the invested capital of the M Company as defined by section 207(a) of the Revenue Act of 1917. The valuation of the assets of the latter company made in 1916 will have to be disregarded, and its assets valued on the basis that no change of ownership or control has occurred as to those assets. There was no transfer or receipt from "a prior trade or business" as to such assets.

It appears that the Y Company went into the hands of a receiver, the plant being worth, on the basis of cost less depreciation, approximately 8 $\times$  dollars. The creditors acquired the assets at a receiver's sale at a nominal figure in order to cover loans. They turned the business over to the Z Company, a new corporation formed for the purpose of taking over the property. The conditions of this latter sale were: (1) the Z Company was to supply  $\times$  dollars working capital; (2) the Z Company was to assume the unpaid liabilities of the Y Company and pay them off within a period of years; (3) the Z Company was to have the assets of the Y Company in return for meeting the liabilities.

Upon these conditions the Z Company was duly incorporated with a capital stock of  $\times$  dollars subscribed. It is claimed that the stockholders of the new corporation are the same as those of the defunct Y Company, and for that reason the new corporation requests to be permitted to set up an invested capital equal to that of the defunct corporation.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the  $\times$  dollars actually paid in to the Z Company in return for their stock should be considered the total invested capital of the new corporation or whether the view should be taken that the new business is substantially a reorganization of the old, and, therefore, the invested capital be fixed upon that basis.

It would appear that the first of these views is correct. The Y Company went into the hands of a receiver and its property was sold to its creditors who were not the stockholders of the corporation. The title to this property passed absolutely to the purchasers, who were in nowise connected with the old corporation, except as creditors. The transaction was closed and completed as far as the old corporation and its stockholders were concerned.

The new corporation which was formed to take over the property could have been incorporated by stockholders of the former company or by entire strangers; the situation so far as it affected the creditors would have been the same. There may have been a community of interest between the stockholders of the old corporation and its creditors, and such interest would be a proving factor in the creation of the new corporation to salvage the property, but this would not change the legal status of the transaction. The new corporation having been formed, it took over the property which had been taken by the creditors in satisfaction of their claims on the following conditions:

They were to furnish  $\times$  dollars working capital, to raise which they sold stock; and they were to assume the unpaid liabilities of the old corporation in exchange for the property taken over by the banks.

The invested capital of the Z Company, therefore, would appear to be the  $\times$  dollars received for the stock sold. The value of the property received on condition of the assumption of the unpaid liabilities of the Y Company can not be included in invested capital because it is borrowed capital.

Reasonable commissions or other forms of compensation lawfully paid by a corporation for the sale of its capital stock not to be deducted in computing invested capital.

The opinion of the Advisory Tax Board has been asked as to whether commissions paid by a corporation for the sale of its capital stock are to be deducted in computing invested capital. Upon this question section 326(a) states that invested capital means (1) "Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares." * * * These words signify the actual cash paid in to the corporation or to its duly authorized agents by the shareholders. Moreover, the treatment of this question and that of the deductibility of such commissions from gross income as ordinary and necessary expenses should be correlative. Under all Federal income tax laws corporations have been denied the right to deduct such commissions either as current expense or as a deferred charge to future years. As it is a fact that such commissions are "ordinarily" paid—and in the organization of many corporations "necessarily" paid—the position of the department with respect to the deductibility from income of this expense can rest only on the ground that it is essentially a capital expenditure, balanced by the acquisition of a permanent capital asset of equivalent worth.

Such payments must, like other compensation for personal service, be "reasonable" in amount. The payment of any unusual or disproportionate commission should, in the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board, be examined for the purpose of ascertaining whether the cash subscription has been "bona fide paid in" and whether under the circumstances of the particular case the commission was reasonable.

Held, that the M Company is entitled to include in invested capital only the amounts which have actually been paid to the company for the shares of stock issued and sold to officers and employees of the company under an installment agreement.

A meeting of the stockholders of the M Company authorized the setting aside of a sufficient number of shares of its common stock for the benefit of such employees as desired to purchase stock under prescribed conditions, and in pursuance of this authority a certain number of shares were so set aside, part of which were taken by an officer of the company and the balance of the stock by other employees. The officer's stock was charged to his personal account, which draws interest. The stock sold to the employees was subscribed for under agreement which permitted payment in cash, part cash and part deferred payments, or all deferred payments, subject to conditions that payment of subscriptions should be in weekly installments; that deferred payments should bear interest; and that the agreement might be canceled either upon request of the employee, failure to make payments, any attempt of the purchaser to sell his stock or agreement, or resignation or dismissal of the employee prior to the expiration of five years; in the event of any cancellation the employee to receive from the company the full amount of all payments with interest, and, dependent upon the time held more than one year, certain percentages of the difference between the subscription and market price of the stock. Dividends on the stock were to be credited to the subscriber's account as additional payments. In case of cancellation, however, the dividends were not to be credited and the subscriber is not to be charged with interest upon deferred payments.

Upon this statement of fact only so much of the subscription payments as have been actually received by the company may be recognized as invested capital from the date of such receipt. In the case of the officer's stock only so much of the stock as canceled a credit balance in his personal account or was actually paid for by him can be recognized.

National banks at times declare dividends which instead of being paid to stockholders are carried with the consent of the stockholders to a stockholders' liability account in the name of a trustee and the amount invested in deals not countenanced by the Comptroller of the Currency. Such stockholders' trustee account, however, is a liability to the individual stockholders, and the assets in which the reserve is invested are the property of the trustee for the stockholders. Therefore, from a technical viewpoint, no part thereof should be included in the invested capital of the bank even though it includes the income from the reserve in its gross income.

Since shares in the bank and in this reserve are on the same pro rata basis, and the stockholders are in fact an association, a consolidated return could be required of the bank and the association, the practical effect of which would be to include the amount of the reserve in the consolidated invested capital and the income from the reserve in the consolidated income. The Committee therefore recommends that the returns as made, including the stockholders' reserve accounts in the capital of the banks, and the income therefrom in the income of the banks, be allowed to stand.

At the request of the taxpayer the Committee has reconsidered Recommendation 10, dealing with the question of whether or not an issue of stock sold to officers and employees of the M Company can be regarded as invested capital, the taxpayer urging that the conclusion of the Committee is not consistent with article 833 of Regulations 45, which holds that enforceable notes or other evidences of indebtedness, either interest bearing or noninterest bearing, of the subscriber received by a corporation upon a subscription for stock may be considered as tangible property and included in invested capital.

The Committee requested advice from the Solicitor as to whether or not the subscription agreements under which it was originally understood all of this stock was issued can be regarded as enforceable notes or other evidences of indebtedness within the meaning of this regulation, and is in receipt of a memorandum from him expressing the opinion that such stock agreements are not evidences of indebtedness and concurring in the conclusion reached by the Committee on Appeals as to these subscription agreements. It now appears, however, that the stock issued to the president was not issued in accordance with the conditions of the subscription agreements, but was a straight-out unconditional subscription charged to his account, bearing interest and subsequently converted into a note.

The Committee therefore recommends that so far as stock issued under subscription agreements is concerned the conclusion in A. R. R. 10 should stand, but that the stock issued to the president, not issued under subscription agreement, should be recognized as invested capital under the provisions of article 833.

A domestic corporation has a branch office in London which keeps a separate set of books in English currency and renders a report at the end of the year as to the profits, making remittances to the home office from time to time as they accumulate in excess of the amount required for regular expenses.

In order to obtain the correct invested capital as at the beginning of the taxable year 1919, it is necessary to consolidate the balance sheet of the branch office with that of the home office. It is assumed that the net profits earned by the London branch during the year 1918 represent surplus; therefore in determining the amount of earned surplus attributable to the London branch, the amounts remitted by it to the home office should be taken into earned surplus at their value in American currency at the time when such remittances were made, and the balance of the net profits expressed in English currency should be converted into United States money at the rate of exchange as of the end of the taxable year, regardless of the fact that the profits may not have been remitted to the home office.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, a Georgia corporation, from the audit of the company's returns for the years ended August 31, 1917, and August 31, 1918, resulting in additional assessments for those years.

In determining the invested capital of the corporation the field agent undertook to establish values as of 1898, on the theory that the company has been in continuous existence since that date. It appears, however, that the charter of the original corporation expired in 190-, which fact was not called to the attention of the officers or stockholders until 190-, at which time a new charter was secured. The question at issue, therefore, between the Unit and the taxpayer is whether the present company was in fact organized in 190-, or has been in continuous operation at least since 1898. As this was a question of law involving the scrutiny of the Georgia statutes, an opinion of the Solicitor upon the point involved was requested and the Committee is in receipt of an opinion from him as follows:

The Revenue Act of 1917, on the subject of invested capital of corporations provides as follows:

SEC. 207. That as used in this title, the term "invested capital" for any year means the average invested capital for the year, as defined and limited in this title, averaged monthly.

As used in this title "invested capital" does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title nor money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stocks or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, the actual cash value of such property as of January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor); and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year: Provided, That, (a) the actual cash value of patents and copyrights paid in for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment, shall be included as invested capital, but not to exceed the par value of such stock or shares at the time of such payment, and (b) the good will, trade-marks, trade brands, the franchise of the corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, shall be included as invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, the value of such good will, trade-mark, trade brand, franchise, or intangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment; but good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, bona fide purchased prior to March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, for and with interests or shares in a partnership or for and with shares in the capital stock of a corporation (issued prior to March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen), in an amount not to exceed, on March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, twenty per centum of the total interests or shares in the partnership or of the total shares of the capital stock of the corporation, shall be included in invested capital at a value not to exceed the actual cash value at the time of such purchase, and in case of issue of stock therefor not to exceed the par value of such stock.

Its terms, with some modifications not necessary to consider here, were extended and embodied in section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

The only other provisions in either of said Acts relating to invested capital are sections 204 and 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and sections 330 and 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918. Sections 204 of the first Act and 330 of the latter Act both are limited in scope to the determination of invested capital for the prewar period and not for the taxable year, the former relating to reorganization "on or after January 2, 1913," and the latter to reorganization "after January 1, 1911" (see article 22, Regulations 41, and article 931, Regulations 45). While neither sections 208 of the former Act nor 331 of the latter Act have any application to reorganizations prior to March 3, 1917, since in express terms both relate to companies reorganized "after March 3, 1917," it is considered that the fair inference to be drawn from them is that assets, in case of reorganization prior to March 3, 1917, should be valued as of the date of transfer to the new corporation for the purpose of determining the invested capital of such corporation for the taxable year.

The question is now asked in connection with the appeal of the M Company, a Georgia corporation, whether said company is a continuation of a predecessor corporation, of the same name, whose charter actually expired in 190-, or is it, under the Georgia law, a new entity entitled to consider the value of assets paid in in 190-, in the determination of its invested capital. The Income Tax Unit has taken the position that there was no reorganization in 190-.

It appears that originally the M Company was organized in 187-, as a Georgia corporation, the life of its charter being 30 years. During this period it built up a large business, and acquired control of, and in 1898 absorbed, the property and business of several other corporations. The charter expired by limitation in 190-. There was no renewal of the old charter. In 190- the stockholders discovered that the corporation's charter had expired, and they then organized a new corporation under the laws of Georgia known as M Company; issued new shares of capital stock and paid for these shares by turning over to the new corporation "all of the property and assets and all of their interest in the M Company chartered in 187-." The new company was authorized "to ratify and accept as its corporation action all acts and deeds of the plants of the M Company which was chartered in 187-."

Park's Georgia Code, par. 2241, provides that "Every corporation is dissolved (1) by expiration of its charter." And par. 2245 thereof provides: "Upon the dissolution of a corporation for any cause all of the property and assets of every description belonging to the corporation shall constitute a fund, first for the payment of its debts and then for equal distribution among its members."

The Supreme Court of Georgia has held that, where a corporation's charter expired "the corporation was as dead as if it had never been chartered": (Terry v. Merchants & P. Bk., 66 Ga. 177-8); that "after expiration of its charter, the corporation was no longer a legal entity" and a writ of error pending in the Supreme Court at the time of such expiration was dismissed, (Logan v. W. & A. R. Co., 87 Ga. 533), as (there being then no longer any law under which it could exist) no valid judgment could be rendered against it (citing Bertram v. Collins Mfg. Co., 69 Ga. 751, Ran v. Union Paper Mill Co., 95 Ga. 208); and that the remedy provided by the Georgia Civil Code, par. 1886, when litigation was pending against a corporation at the time of expiration of its charter, is to have a receiver appointed to administer its assets under the direction of the court, its debts to be first paid, and the balance, if any, distributed among its shareholders, "as the action of its stockholders (who were separate and distinct from the corporation) owning all the stock, in continuing to defend the suit after the expiration of the charter" did not operate to make the dead corporation a corporation de facto, or a corporation by estoppel, so as to authorize the plaintiffs to proceed to judgment against it. (Venable v. Southern Granite Co., 135 Ga. 508-9).

The rules in question are not peculiar to Georgia, but are of general application and have been variously stated as follows:

On the termination of the corporate life, either by lapse of time or decree of court or otherwise, stockholders are at least the equitable owners of its assets, and it seems that, after the debts are paid, the legal title to real property vests in them as tenants in common, where the title of the corporation or its officers is not continued by statute or where the time during which the corporate life is extended by statute has expired, or where the term of the statutory trusteeship of the corporate officers has expired. (8 Fletcher Cyc. Corp. par. 5591, 5593 (37); Stearns Coal and Lbr. Co. v. Van Winkle, (Ky.) 221 Fed. 590.)

Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 356, 36 L. Ed. 732.

When the charter expires, the corporation ceases to be a corporation either de jure or de facto and can thereafter exercise no corporate powers. (1 Fletcher Cyc. par. 285.)

A deed made by a corporation after its charter has expired is a nullity. (2 Cook on Corporations, par. 641, p. 1829).

Furthermore, "the stock cannot be transferred." (8 Fletcher Cyc. Corp. par. 5587). It is said that "a dissolution of a private corporation entirely changes the character of the property interest of the stockholders; it destroys their stock as such and under the modern equitable view substitutes the thing which their stock represented, that is, an interest in the corporate property." (7 R. C. L. par. 745).

Solicitor's Opinion 4 is consistent with the foregoing.

It is therefore held that for the purpose of determining invested capital for the taxable year a new and distinct corporation is created, where, upon the expiration of the corporate charter of the old organization, a new corporation is formed under a different charter, and property and assets of the old corporation are transferred by the old stockholders as legal owners thereof to the new corporation prior to March 3, 1917, in return for capital stock, and that the provisions of section 207, Revenue Act of 1917, and section 326, Revenue Act of 1918, embodying with some modifications its terms, are applicable in determining the invested capital of the corporation in question.

In this conclusion the Committee concurs, and it will be necessary for the Income Tax Unit to redetermine the invested capital paid in at the date of organization in 190-.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the claim of the company for assessment under the provisions of section 209 for 1917, and assessing tax under the provisions of section 210.

The facts appear to be that this company was organized with a small amount of capital stock, none of which was paid up, and later it secured a lease to wharf property, no bonus being paid for the lease. The business of the company is the subletting of this leased property.

It is clear that the income of the company is derived chiefly from the possession of a capital asset which is not capital in name only, but a real tangible asset, to wit, its lease upon the wharf property.

The Committee is therefore of the opinion that the company can not be construed to have had no capital or only a nominal capital in the sense in which nominal capital has been construed by the courts, that is, capital in name only, and that the action of the Unit in denying assessment under section 209 and assessing tax under section 210 was proper. It therefore recommends that the action of the Unit be sustained.

In 1912 a piece of property was leased by the M Company for 50 years to A, who assigned his interest to the X Company, of which he was president. In 1913 the X Company erected a theater building on the property, which building became part of the reversion, and in 1914 leased the building and its interest in the assignment for a period of 20 years to the Z Company, which agreed to pay certain expenses as well as all taxes of both corporations (X Company and Z Company) and distribute remaining profits in accordance with certain terms agreed on, the X Company and the Z Company being in no manner affiliated and having no stock holdings in common.

Held, that the X Company and the Z Company should each file a separate return and compute their tax on their own invested capital. In computing the income and invested capital of the X Company the erection cost of the theater building should be allocated over the term of its lease under the assignment from A, such amounts being deducted each year as business expenses. The value of the building may be included in invested capital to the extent that it was erected out of the original paid-in capital or surplus of the X Company. Any part of its cost which was borne by borrowing money can not be so included. In arriving at the amount of invested capital as of the beginning of the taxable year, the sum of such prorated amounts which were or should have been deducted from the gross income of prior years, should be subtracted from the original cost of the building

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in reducing an improvement account carried on the corporation's books to cover the cost of improving a leased property under the terms of a 10-year lease which expired April, 1915, through depreciation charges allocated over the term of such lease, and disallowing as invested capital any portion of such account for the taxable year 1917 and subsequent years.

It appears from the records that the M Company, a corporation organized for the purpose of conducting a restaurant, leased certain portions of a building from A for a period of 10 years and 3 months. Under a memorandum of agreement which formed a part of the lease between A and the corporation, the latter obligated itself to pay a monthly rental of  $x$  dollars for the demised premises plus certain contingent charges and to expend  $30x$  dollars or more in making certain specified permanent improvements to such premises. The amount expended in making these improvements was carried to an improvement account on the books of the corporation, which account is still maintained. It is this account which the Unit has disallowed as invested capital for the year 1917 and subsequent years, from which action the taxpayer now appeals for the reason that no depreciation on the improvements has ever been claimed and for the further reason that the premises with respect to which the improvements were made are still in the possession of the taxpayer, the original lease having been renewed.

The taxpayer has filed with the Unit a certified copy of the memorandum of agreement which formed a part of the original lease dated November, 1904, together with certified copies of the agreements covering renewal leases dated March, 1915, and April, 1920.

This memorandum of agreement specifically provides that the improvements therein provided for shall upon their installation by the lessee immediately become the property of the lessor. It contains no provision granting the lessee any right of renewal upon expiration of the lease and it is not shown nor claimed that the lessee had any such right under the lease itself. The lease was to run for a period of 10 years and 3 months beginning February, 1905, and ending April, 1915, on which latter date the lessee corporation was to surrender all right and title to the demised premises and the improvements which it was obligated to make. That the corporation did surrender all of such right and title is evidenced by the memorandum of agreement forming part of the renewal lease, dated March, 1915.

Article 109 of Regulations 45 as amended by Treasury Decision 3062, provides:

Where a leasehold is acquired for business purposes for a specified sum, the purchaser may take as a deduction in his return an aliquot part of such sum each year, based on the number of years the lease has to run. * * * The cost borne by a lessee in erecting buildings or making permanent improvements on ground of which he is lessee is held to be a capital investment and not deductible as a business expense. In order to return to such taxpayer his investment of capital, an annual deduction may be made from gross income of an amount equal to the total cost of such improvements divided by the number of years remaining of the term of lease, and such deduction shall be in lieu of a deduction for depreciation. * * *

Under the provisions of the above-quoted article the amount invested by the M Company in the said improvements, if paid for out of original capital or surplus, can be held to constitute invested capital for the taxable year during which expended, such invested capital to be reduced at the beginning of each subsequent year by an amount equal to the result obtained by dividing the total cost of such improvements by the number of years of the lease term. The lease under the terms of which the improvements were made expired in 1915, and subsequent to that year the taxpayer had no right or title under the lease to any asset which constituted a part of such improvements, not even the right of usage. The amount expended for the improvements and their installation may be considered as a bonus paid to secure the execution of the lease, or as additional rental for the leased premises to be charged off as expense ratably over the term of the lease. Whether or not such amount was so charged off, any right or title which the taxpayer ever possessed in the investment was exhausted upon termination of the original lease in April, 1915, and subsequent to that date it possessed nothing therein which can be said to constitute invested capital for the purpose of computing excess profits tax under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1917 or 1918.

The Committee, therefore, recommends that the action of the Unit in disallowing as invested capital any portion of the amount expended for improvements by the M Company under the terms of the lease dated November, 1904, be sustained.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that values claimed for "contracts, brands, and good will" can not be allowed as invested capital when it is not conclusively shown that such values represent paid-in capital of a partnership, and that in reorganization no greater value can be given to corporate assets than existed before reorganization, the interest in the corporation being substantially the same as that in the partnership.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M partnership, and the N corporation, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing certain items as invested capital.

The action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing, in the taxable year 1917, 7x dollars as invested capital of the M partnership is explained in the following language:

This decrease is due to the disallowance of 7x dollars claimed as the value of contracts and good will not shown on the books of the partnership. No evidence has been submitted as to the value of these intangible assets, the methods of acquiring them, and the cost. (See Regulations 41, articles 57-60, 64.)

The action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing as invested capital for the N corporation an item of 10x dollars is explained in the following language:

The amount at which these intangible assets were included in the invested capital of the M partnership, in its return for the five months' period ended May 31, 1917, has been excluded from the invested capital of the partnership in a letter addressed to it by this office. The corporation succeeded the partnership as of June 1, 1917. The excess profits tax return filed by the corporation shows that an interest of 50 per cent or more remained in control of the same persons. In such case no asset transferred from the partnership will be allowed to be included in the invested capital of the corporation, at a value greater than would have been allowed in computing the invested capital of the partnership if no transfer of assets had taken place, unless such asset is specifically paid for in cash or tangible property. (See Regulations 41, article 50.)

The facts on which the appeal has been taken may, therefore, be said to be definitely stated in the exceptions above quoted.

The partnership was of more than 40 years' standing and on June 1, 1917, its affairs were incorporated as the N Corporation with capital stock of 40x dollars. In the year 1917, just prior to this reorganization, there was set up on the books of the partnership an item of 7x dollars for "contracts, brands, and good will," but in the reorganization by incorporation the said account "contracts, brands, and good will" was set up on the books of the corporation as of the value of 10x dollars. It is contended that two contracts, recorded in this accounting, were worth at least 10x dollars, but it is noted, these contracts dated as far back as the year 1908. It is further contended that as the result of an examination and audit of the books of the M partnership, for the years 1908 to 1912, inclusive, the average net earnings on invested capital of said partnership were more than 52 per cent. It is noted however, that at December 31, 1916, the financial statement of the partnership showed a deficit of  $\frac{1}{4}$ x dollars. It is not in evidence that the value of "contracts, brands, and good will," either in the amount claimed as set up on the partnership books or in the amount claimed as set up on the corporation books, was actually paid into the partnership or corporation.

Article 42 of Regulations 41 provides, in part, as follows:

The basis, or starting point, in the computation of invested capital is found in the amount of cash and other property paid in, the original values of such other property being determined in accordance with the rules laid down in these regulations. * * * If value appreciation of a kind not subject to income tax (other than that allowed under article 55) has been taken up in the accounts, a deduction must be made in respect of such appreciation so taken up.

This Committee, in its Recommendation 17 published in Bulletin 3-20, said, in part, as follows:

The fact remains, however, that the law expressly provides what may be regarded as the invested capital of a corporation or partnership, and that is, as affects the question now at issue, the amount of cash or tangible property paid in to the corporation or partnership for stock or shares, the share evidently referring to the member's interest in the paid-in capital of the partnership.

The law and the decisions issued thereon by the Department have consistently stated that the basis or starting point in the computation of invested capital is the amount of cash or other property actually paid in, the original values of such other property being determined in accordance with the statute and regulations.

It is contended that the partnership was one of long standing and that the right to include this additional capital is entirely justified from figures and detailed statements of earnings as reflected by two contracts alone. The Committee can not concur in this contention. It can not recognize going concern value or appreciation growing out of the development and expansion of a business. There is no justification in the law or in the regulations for doing so. Furthermore, it has been conclusively pointed out by the Income Tax Unit, that under article 50 of Regulations 41:

If an interest or control in such trade or business of 50 per cent or more remains in control of the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under these regulations in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received, unless such asset was paid for specifically as such, in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment.

In this article no distinction is made between tangible and intangible assets so transferred.

The Committee accordingly recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing these items as invested capital of the partnership and of the corporation be sustained.

8-21-1471: A. R. R. 396.
REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that the value of certain patents for which stock of the M Company was issued must be measured by the cash consideration paid therefor by certain incorporators of the company just prior to incorporation:

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing as invested capital the par value of shares of stock of the said corporation issued specifically for patents at date of incorporation.

The M Company was incorporated in 1914, with capital common stock of 250x dollars. The articles of incorporation read, in part, as follows:

The amount of the capital stock of said corporation shall be 250x dollars divided into 25y shares.

It appears that in September, 1913, A assigned an undivided one-half interest in two patents to B in consideration of  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars in cash, and in June, 1914, A assigned his remaining one-half interest in said patents to C, D, E, and F, in consideration of 5x dollars cash and in further consideration of said assignees assuming the liability of A in all the debts and outstanding obligations of the A Company, a partnership, which debts and obligations amounted to  $3\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars.

The Income Tax Unit, based on the report of an examining revenue agent, allowed  $6\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars as the value of the patents acquired for 225x dollars of the total issue of capital stock of the corporation organized immediately thereafter. In addition thereto, there was allowed as invested capital 11x dollars, the said amount being the cash paid in at par (\$100) for 1 1-10y shares. There was also allowed as invested capital  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, the actual cost of patents subsequently acquired, making a total invested capital of 19x dollars.

Because the income of the corporation was disproportionate to the amount of invested capital, the tax was subsequently adjusted under section 210 of the Revenue Act.

The taxpayer contends that the full par value, namely, 225x dollars, should be allowed for the two patents first mentioned, and that on this basis of invested capital the tax should be assessed under section 207 of the Revenue Act. As above stated, the Income Tax Unit has rested its decision on the purchase price of the patents, as evidenced by sale when acquired by certain individuals, five of whom subsequently became incorporators of the M Company.

No evidence has been submitted by the taxpayer to show the value of similar patents, if indeed such evidence could be produced, but the record shows that for the fractional part of the year 1914 (the year in which the company was incorporated) there was a profit of  $\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars from operations; in 1915 a profit of 27x dollars; in 1916 a profit of 44x dollars, and in 1917 a profit of 43x dollars. In this latter year the corporation claimed a depreciation based on the life of the patents which, if disallowed, would leave a net income of 70x dollars. It is also a matter of record that the 1 1-10y shares of stock were sold at par to about 25 individual subscribers in various proportions and an affidavit has been submitted by a broker who says that he has been engaged in the brokerage business for several years and that in the course of his business he has sold a good deal of the stock of the M Company during the three years just prior to May, 1919, at a price uniformly something near par, the sales ranging between \$85 and \$105 per share.

The Committee has given careful consideration to the above facts, but it can not fail to recognize that the A Company, a partnership, which conveyed the patents immediately prior to the organization of the M Company, a corporation, to the principal incorporators for a cash consideration definitely known, was not successful in developing these patents. What efforts were made to do so are not recorded in the files before the Committee, but the fact is that after final sale of the patent rights to a group of successful business men there was immediately put forth an active, progressive, commercial plan which gave general recognition to the practical use of the patents. It was this development of an idea in a systematic, corporate way without the necessity of large financial investment by any one of the incorporators of the M Company that gave substantial return to the stockholders. The Revenue Act does not recognize as paid-in capital a value rising from development of an idea after incorporation. It may be said this value is reflected in the earned surplus and, as such, it is a part of the invested capital of the corporation.

That a cash value of 225x dollars for the patents at time of incorporation of the M Company was not recognized by the incorporators is indicated by failure of such incorporators to return as individual taxable income the difference between this amount, pro rata, and the cash purchase price.

On these conclusions the Committee recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in fixing a value of the patents by the cash consideration paid therefor just prior to incorporation of the M Company and the subsequent assessment of taxes by the Unit under Section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 be approved.

8-21-1468: O. D. 821.

Section 1764, Wisconsin Statutes (1915) provides that the corporate existence of a dissolved corporation shall be continued for the purpose of liquidating its assets and winding up its affairs. It is held, therefore, that profit resulting from the sale of assets of a Wisconsin corporation in process of liquidation is subject to income and excess profits taxes in the same manner as profits derived from the active operation of the corporation.

In such a case the invested capital to be used as a basis in determining the excess profits credit is arrived at in the same manner as invested capital of an active corporation, making due allowance for any amount of capital assets which have been liquidated and returned to the stockholders.

Section 1764, Wisconsin Statutes (1915) provides:

* * * and when any corporation shall become so dissolved the directors or managers of the affairs of such corporation at the time of its dissolution, by whatever name they may be known, shall, subject to the power of any court of competent jurisdiction to make, in any case, a different provision, continue to act as such during said term and shall be deemed the legal administrators of such corporation with full power to settle its affairs, etc.

Therefore, the responsibility for filing appropriate returns for the corporation and paying taxes shown thereby to be due devolves upon the trustees in liquidation of such other legal administrators as have charge of the property and affairs of the corporation during the period of liquidation. They must make returns of income for such corporation in the same manner and form as an active corporation. Conversely, they are not required to file returns as fiduciaries.

9-21-1487: A. R. R. 390.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, a corporation, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in adjusting the company's tax returns for the years 1917 and 1918. The points at issue are the valuation of the old plant of the company as of February 14, 1917; depreciation actually sustained in the years 1917 and 1918, and a proper compensation for officers.

As of January 1, 1917, the N Company had outstanding paid-in capital stock of 10x dollars, all of which was owned by A and B, but the buildings and the land on which the buildings were located were owned individually by A and B. During the month of January there was a reorganization. The name of the company was changed to the M Company and the capital stock was increased to 40x dollars and issued in equal amounts to A and B. The stock of the N Company was retired, and the additional capital of 30x dollars was written up on the books as good will. Under date of February 14, 1917, A and B, without further consideration, turned over to the corporation the buildings, which they individually owned, and the original bookkeeping entry was adjusted, crediting good will with 15x dollars to the debit of real estate and buildings. The revenue agent, who examined the books of the corporation, reduced the value of these buildings from  $15x$  dollars to  $6x$  dollars, and this deduction affected both depreciation and invested capital. This examination was made in 1919 and he based his reduction of this asset on a statement made by A that he would accept  $4x$  dollars in cash for the property, and on a statement made by B that they were holding the property at  $8x$  dollars on a trade for some other real estate. The taxpayer, in taking exception to the valuation determined by these statements, has submitted two appraisals, one by C, which places a going concern value on the property as of February 11, 1917, of  $15x$  dollars, and the other by D, which places the appraisal on a cost basis less depreciation as of December 22, 1919, at  $10x$  dollars, of which valuation  $9x$  dollars is for the buildings and  $x$  dollars is for the land. In a conference held with the Income Tax Unit the valuation of  $6x$  dollars placed by the revenue agent was increased by the Unit to  $8x$  dollars.

The Committee is of the opinion that the going concern value, as determined by the appraisal by C, is more or less speculative and that the value adopted by the revenue agent is without substantial foundation. The additional value allowed by the Unit appears to be more or less arbitrary in an effort to arrive at a compromise adjustment which, however, was not accepted by the taxpayer. Accordingly, the Committee is of the opinion that it can not fail to respect the appraised value (by D) of  $10x$  dollars, plus the depreciation on the buildings from February 14, 1917, to December 22, 1919, as most correctly reflecting the sound value at date of transfer.

This adjustment of value will change the amount of depreciation as adjusted by the revenue agent, but in addition thereto the taxpayer, through public accountants of good standing, has submitted a very elaborate schedule of depreciation on all other property values, basing the same on inventory of the values taken by the owners of the property in March, 1913. These were depreciated values but the taxpayer applied these rates of depreciation annually on reduced values. The revenue agent made no changes in this basis but accepted the taxpayer's figures as reasonable. The public accountants, however, have consistently, in the compilation of their statement, applied the rates annually on the appraised value or on cost when acquired subsequent to appraisal and it is understood that no substantial change has been made in the rates except in the year 1917 when, on account of the plant running at double capacity, an accelerated rate on machinery, based on 40 per cent of the normal rate, was used. The Committee has carefully analyzed this schedule of depreciation prepared by the public accountants and is of the opinion that it should govern in disposing of the question of depreciation, subject, however, to the valuation as above approved for the buildings taken over in February, 1917.

For three years prior to 1917, A and B, sole owners of the stock of the corporation, and its principal officers, were each paid  $x$  dollars annual salary. In November, 1917, by resolution of the board of directors, this salary was increased to a total salaried expense of  $5x$  dollars per annum. Of this aggregate amount for the two officers, the revenue agent disallowed  $2x$  dollars prorated for 1917 and for the year 1918, making the salary of each  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars per annum instead of  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars. This disallowance of  $2x$  dollars was reduced by the Income Tax Unit, in conference with the taxpayer, to  $x$  dollars, which gave each of the officers of the company an annual salary of  $2x$  dollars per year as against  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars per year as claimed in the returns and supported by the action of the directors of the company.

The average yearly sales of the company from 1912 to 1916, inclusive, amounted to  $45x$  dollars. In the year 1916 the sales were  $52x$  dollars; in 1917, 72x dollars; in 1918, 82x dollars. In the latter year the net income of the company was less than in 1917, but this is explained by the retirement of substantial parts of the old plant and to moving into the new plant. However, a salary deduction of 4x dollars for the taxable year is in fair comparison with that of similar industries and on this basis it was allowed by the Unit.

Summing up, the Committee is of the opinion that value of buildings acquired in February, 1914, should be accepted on basis of recognized appraised value; that depreciation should be adjusted on this value and on the appraised value as of March, 1913, of other units of equipment and at established rates to which the taxpayer conforms in his depreciation schedule and that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained in allowing compensation of the two principal officers at the rate of 4x dollars per annum.

27-21-1719: A. R. M. 134.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that the M Company should be allowed the full amount of  $3\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars expended by it in cash prior to the year 1909 and capitalized as a part of the cost of developing certain intangible assets which it had acquired for stock and cash.

The Committee has had under consideration the request of the Income Tax Unit for an expression of opinion whether an expenditure of  $3\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars by the M Company for advertising prior to the year 1909 can be capitalized and allowed as invested capital for the taxable year 1917.

The M Company was incorporated in 189-, at which time it acquired a trade-mark for a consideration of 2x dollars cash. This purchase included a contract granting to the corporation the exclusive right to sell this preparation. In 189- it acquired certain other trade-marks for 3x dollars, issuing therefor capital stock of the company in this amount. In another year prior to 1909, it acquired several other trade-marks and formulae, issuing therefor 2x dollars in capital stock.

In 1905, by action of the board of directors of the company, the sum of x dollars, expended for advertising, was capitalized by being charged to trade-marks, formulae, etc. In 1906 the board of directors ordered x dollars eliminated from expense and capitalized. In December, 1906, by order of the board of directors, following an advertising campaign, a credit of  $\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars was carried to profit and loss (thus decreasing expenses and increasing net income) and same was capitalized by charging it to trade-marks, formulae, etc. In April, 1906, by action of the board of directors, a further expenditure of x dollars, made as of a previous year for advertising, was capitalized and charged to trade-marks, formulae, etc. The items for advertising, capitalized as above indicated, aggregate  $3\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars and the corporation now contends that the capital stock issued against this intangible should be allowed in full as invested capital since the intangible was acquired for cash.

It is noted that all of these transactions occurred prior to the year 1909 and the case, therefore, as presented, is not unlike that on which the Committee passed its opinion under Recommendation 115 (not published in bulletin service), March 27, 1920. In that opinion it was said:

The Committee is not of the opinion that article 841 of Regulations 45 should be applied in the instant case. This regulation seems obviously to have been drawn for the purpose of preventing the inclusion in surplus or invested capital, for the taxable year 1918, of amounts charged to expenses prior thereto, when the intent was to evade taxation. But such intent in this case is not clear, nor can it even be inferred. Indeed, the facts absolutely prohibit such an inference, for the reason that the transaction by which this restoration to invested capital was accomplished was made effective on the first day of March, 1909, thus conclusively demonstrating the intention of the directors in regard to these expenditures, many years before the income and excess-profits tax law was placed upon the statute books.

In the opinion of the Committee, the regulation would be effective to prevent the restoration to invested capital in 1918 of amounts previously charged to expenses, but a careful reading of the regulation renders it exceedingly doubtful that it is subject to so broad a construction that it can, by any possibility, be applied to transactions accomplished and completed before that year. Attention is particularly directed to the last sentence of the regulation quoted above: "An election of this sort which was made concurrently with the transaction can not now be revised, and amended returns in respect thereof can not be accepted."

There is no intent on the part of the corporation now to revise an action taken years ago and no attempt has been made to file amended returns.

The Committee believes that this reasoning is strengthened by the following quotation from Article 843 of Regulations 45:

* * * Where a corporation has charged to current expenses the cost of developing or protecting patents, no amount in respect thereof expended since January 1, 1909, can be restored in computing invested capital. In respect of expenditures made before January 1, 1909, a corporation now seeking to restore them must be prepared to show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that all such items are proper capital expenditures.

While the opinion just quoted was applicable to the invested capital of a corporation for the taxable year 1918, there is no reason why the same principle should not be applied in determining the invested capital of the M Company for the taxable year 1917.

The Committee accordingly is of the opinion that the M Company should be allowed the full amount of  $3\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, expended by it in cash prior to the year 1909 and capitalized, as a part of the cost of developing certain intangible assets which it had acquired for stock and cash.

32-21-1765: O. D. 991.

In 1920 a corporation increased its capital stock by issuing  $y$  additional shares of stock of a par value of  $x$  dollars per share. Each stockholder registered on the corporation's book at the close of business March —, 1920, was given the right to subscribe for one new share of stock for each two shares of old stock held by him on that date upon payment of  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars per share, payable as follows:  $x$  dollars on May —, 1920,  $\frac{3}{4}x$  dollars on June —, 1920, and  $\frac{3}{4}x$  dollars on July —, 1920.

The company was to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on such payments from the date each payment was made. Interest on all payments ceased August —, 1920, the date when the certificates were exchanged for the stock of the company. Stockholders desiring to pay in full at one time were privileged to do so on May —, 1920, but at no other time. The right to subscribe for stock expired on May —, 1920.

The question raised is whether the payments made prior to August —, 1920, can be treated as invested capital from the date on which they were received, or whether the invested capital may be increased only as of August —, 1920, the date on which the subscribers received their paid-up stock certificates.

Held, that the subscription payments received by the company may be properly treated as invested capital from the date on which they were received, and that the so-called interest paid to the subscribers on the installment payments from the date of each payment to August —, 1920, was, in fact, distribution of profits from surplus, and accordingly is not a deductible expense.

34-21-1787: O. D. 1007.

The books of a corporation were kept according to the single-entry system of bookkeeping, and its income and expenses were recorded on a cash receipts and disbursements basis. At the end of the taxable year 1919 a statement of assets and liabilities was prepared in connection with its Federal income and profits tax return. There were reported on the statement as assets the cash balance, the fixed and intangible assets, and also such accounts receivable as were on the memorandum records, but the income from which had not been taken into the books. The statement also showed on the liability side the amount of outstanding capital stock and also bills payable and accounts payable which were shown by the memorandum records, but the expenses for which had not been taken into the books.

Held, that the corporation can not report its income on a cash receipts and disbursements basis and compute its invested capital on an accrual basis. As the corporation's income is reported on a cash receipts and disbursements basis, accrued items can not be taken into consideration in computing its invested capital.

It is the purpose of Treasury Decision 3220, in cases in which returns were filed contrary to section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918, and the regulations issued thereunder, to have amended returns filed and any tax shown to be due thereon paid immediately, rather than to wait until the returns are finally reached in the regular course of audit in this office. The fact that there may be no further tax shown to be due on the amended returns in such cases is not sufficient to waive the filing of such returns.

Where for the year 1918 returns were filed and the war and excess profits tax paid was equal to 50 per cent of the net income, relief having been requested under sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, or where for the year 1917 returns were filed under article 64 of Regulations 41, and full disclosure was made on the return of the inclusion therein of restorations to invested capital, amended return will not be required under T. Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

A domestic corporation, prior to March 3, 1917, transferred tangible property to a foreign corporation in exchange for over 50 per cent of the stock of the foreign corporation. Subsequent to March 3, 1917, the domestic corporation transferred certain other tangible property to another foreign corporation in exchange for over 50 per cent of the stock of the foreign corporation. Neither foreign corporation had income from sources within the United States.

Two questions are raised: (1) At what value may the domestic corporation include in its invested capital the stock of the foreign corporations under the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918? (2) In case the foreign corporate stock is recognized as invested capital only to the amount of the original cost of the property transferred, is it possible for any taxable income to accrue from the exchange?

These two inquiries may be considered together, as the same principles of law are involved. Section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918, relating to a determination of the invested capital of a corporation exchanging its stock for tangible property, are not here applicable.

A foreign corporation having no income from United States sources would be tax exempt, and consequently its stock in the hands of a United States corporation would constitute an admissible asset. The exchange being of one kind of property for another kind, a profit or loss would normally arise, as the values would ordinarily not be exactly equal. An exchange of one capital asset for another would not, however, affect the invested capital of the United States corporation, unless in the case of a loss the current earnings were insufficient to meet such loss, in which case the true or earned surplus would have to be reduced; but in no case should the original paid-in capital or surplus be reduced on account of such loss, it not being permissible to reduce those items except upon partial or total liquidation.

Accordingly, it is held that the stock should be included in invested capital at the same value that the tangible property exchanged therefor would have been entitled to be included therein had no exchange taken place, regardless of when the transaction was consummated, and that taxable income or deductible loss might result from the transaction.

A domestic corporation owning stock of a foreign corporation should treat such stock as an inadmissible for the entire taxable year if at any time during such taxable year the foreign corporation had income from sources within the United States.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

In determining invested capital for 1917 and subsequent years the taxpayer, an insurance company, used security valuations demanded and furnished by the insurance department of the State and, as required, filed a copy of its State report with this office.

Owing to its inability to furnish cost values of securities, advice was requested as to what action should be taken in order to comply with the provisions of Treasury Decision 3220 ('865 herein).

Held, that as the invested capital of insurance companies is adjusted by this office on the basis of cost from annual statements rendered to the insurance departments at the close of the previous year, it will not be necessary for insurance companies to file amended returns under the provisions of Treasury Decision 3220, if in the original returns securities or real estate have been valued on the basis of book or market as reported to the insurance department of the State

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918

The taxpayer company for several years prior to 1917 followed the consistent practice of adding taxes paid upon its real estate to the capital account representing such real estate on its books, and did not charge such taxes to expense, and did not make any deduction on account of such taxes in preparing its income tax returns for the years 1909 to 1916, inclusive.

During 1917 and subsequent years such real estate taxes were charged to expense and were not capitalized.

Held, that taxes on real estate are not properly chargeable to the real estate capital account for income and profits tax purposes, but are deductible as expenses for the year in which paid or accrued, dependent on how the taxpayer's books are kept. The taxpayer should eliminate from its invested capital the taxes formerly included in its real estate capital account, and the excess profits tax for 1917 and subsequent years should be recomputed.

I('22)—9-122: I. T. 1226

Revenue Act of 1917.

The terms current liabilities and temporary indebtedness, as used in article 44 of Regulations 41, which reads as follows:

The term "money or other property borrowed" as used in section 207 and these regulations includes not only cash or other borrowed property, which can be identified as such, but current liabilities and temporary indebtedness of all kinds, and any permanent indebtedness upon which the taxpayer is entitled to an interest deduction in computing net income. A corporation which, under the income tax law, is allowed to take only a part of the entire interest paid upon its indebtedness, may include in its invested capital such a proportion of its permanent indebtedness as the amount of interest upon such indebtedness which the corporation is not allowed to deduct is of the total amount of interest paid upon such indebtedness during the taxable year—are intended to apply to liabilities chargeable against profits as distinguished from indebtedness incurred for the purpose of raising capital. Such permanent indebtedness amounts to a capital investment. Therefore, while the amount of interest on current liabilities deductible against income for the year is included within the language of the Act limiting the amount of interest deductible as well as interest on permanent indebtedness, article 44 did not operate to make current liabilities includable in invested capital, since from their nature they were not includable. It does permit a portion of the permanent indebtedness to be included where the interest on such permanent indebtedness is not deductible by reason of the limitation contained in section 12 of the Revenue Act of 1916 as amended by the Revenue Act of 1917.

In case a corporation had no permanent indebtedness but the amount of deductible interest was limited, no amount may be included in invested capital on account of such limitation. But a corporation which has both temporary and permanent indebtedness may assume to the extent of its permanent indebtedness that any interest which it is not allowed to deduct has been paid upon such permanent indebtedness.

The term permanent indebtedness is intended to cover money and property borrowed to be invested in the business.

If the indebtedness is of a permanent character the term or nature of the particular obligation by which the indebtedness is evidenced at any time is not conclusive. Thus, notes used to acquire borrowed capital which the corporation plans to continue to use after the maturity of the notes (meeting the matured notes with the proceeds of other borrowings) may be regarded as permanent indebtedness within the meaning of article 44 of Regulations 41. So also in the case of bonds, mortgages, or other obligations about to fall due. If in the regular financial procedure of the corporation these obligations will be met by the proceeds of other indebtedness, such obligations may be treated as a part of the permanent indebtedness.

The computation of additions to invested capital must be based on permanent indebtedness as distinguished from temporary indebtedness and current liabilities. In case the permanent indebtedness is increased, diminished, or liquidated during the tax period the average amount of such indebtedness for the period should be used in applying the provisions of article 44 of Regulations 41.

Revenue Act of 1921.

Where a business owned by an individual is organized as a corporation under the provisions of section 229 of the Revenue Act of 1921, investments owned by the individual but not connected with his business can not be included in invested capital unless and until they are paid in and become assets of the corporation.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

In 1919 a group of men contributed 300x dollars in cash to a common fund which was placed in the hands of a trustee for the purpose of acquiring royalty contracts under certain patents which they desired to obtain for a proposed corporation which had not been incorporated at that time. Later this trustee obtained assignments of these various contracts and rights for a total consideration of 300x dollars in cash. A corporation was then formed and after its organization the trustee offered to transfer to the corporation all of the contract rights which he had acquired in consideration of the issuance of 300y par-value shares of its stock to the parties who were the original contributors of the 300x dollars cash with which he acquired these rights. This offer was accepted by the corporation and the agreement was carried into effect.

Held, that the facts stated show this to be a case where a corporation acquired intangible property for stock, and that as such it must be governed by the provisions of section 326(a)5 of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, and that the invested capital of the corporation represented by the patent rights is subject to the 25 per cent limitation imposed by that section. This is true, although the individuals who advanced the money for the purchase of the contract rights were the same individuals who became the stockholders of the corporation through a transfer of these rights in exchange for the corporation's stock.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

The procedure set forth in Office Decision 623 (C. B. 3, p. 105) to be followed by concerns which report profits from installment sales as realized at dates of payments does not contemplate adjustments of the capital investment account either for payments on such contracts or for the final transfer of title. It does, however, require the elimination from inventory of goods sold on installment contracts. No distinction is made between sales on condition, in which title remains in the seller, sales which involve transfer of title subject to a lien and sales in which title passes but is revested in the vendor by means of a chattel mortgage. (Article 42, Regulations 45.)

The following example illustrates the effect of this procedure:

Inventory, January 1, 1921.....	$100,000
Installment sales, 1921.....	100,000
Cash receipts from installments sales contracts, 1921.....	50,000
Gross profit percentage.....	50%
(a) Installment sales contract (1921).....	$100,000
Goods sold (at cost).....		50,000
Unrealized gross profit on installment sales contracts (1921).....		50,000
(b) Cash.....	50,000
Installment sales contracts (1921).....		50,000
(c) Unrealized gross profit on installment sales contracts (1921).....	25,000
Realized gross profits on installment sales contracts.....		25,000

It will be seen that installment sales contracts (1921) less unrealized gross profits at the time of the sale equals the value of goods sold and is substituted therefor. The installment sales contract account is decreased and replaced to the extent of cash payments thereon. At the same time that proportion of unrealized gross profits on installment sales contracts which represents the gain included in cash receipts is transferred to realized profits on installment sales contracts.

In the balance sheet as at December 31, 1921, the opening inventory of $100,000 is replaced by cash, $50,000; installment sales contracts less unrealized profits, $25,000; inventory, $50,000. These items reflect the original value plus a realized gain of $25,000.

I (22)-33-459: I. T. 1420.

Revenue Acts of 1917, 1918, and 1921.

In 1885 certain persons organized a corporation and a certificate of incorporation was issued to them. In 1911, in pursuance of the advice of an attorney, the company was reorganized in order to cure defects in its original organization, and the powers of the corporation were broadened, its capital increased, and its existence made perpetual. In 1914 the name of the corporation was changed and thereupon all of the assets standing in the then name of the corporation were transferred by a deed having a covenant of warranty to the corporation designated by its new corporate name.

Held, that the copy of the original charter of the corporation and of the renewed charter, and the other evidence submitted by the taxpayer, disclose that the amendmen of its charter and the subsequent change in its name did not create a new corporation, nor cause any change in its existing corporate organization. The invested capital of the corporation, accordingly, must be computed in the same manner as though the invested capital of the corporation originally formed in 1885 was being determined. The values of the assets on hand at the beginning of 1917 and later years must be determined by their values at the time of their original acquisition, as limited and defined by the Revenue Acts applicable to the taxable years involved, and their values at the date of the amendment of the corporation's charter or at the date of its change of name can not be considered for such purpose.

I (22)-49-628: I. T. 1523.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

If a corporation acquires patents or other intangible assets for cash, such assets may be reflected in its invested capital at an amount equal to the amount of the cash actually paid for them, but if they are acquired for stock they can be reflected in invested capital only to an amount not in excess of 25 per cent of the capital stock of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year. This limitation prevents intangibles purchased with stock from being included at their full cost only when such cost exceeds in amount 25 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year. No expenditures of capital made by a corporation in organization or advertising can be used to increase the value at which the patents owned by it may be reflected in its invested capital, as this amount is fixed by the cost of the acquisition of the patents, subject to the 25 per cent limitation in case they were acquired for stock.

In the case of the reorganization of a corporation which does not involve a change in corporate identity, no change takes place in the value at which its intangibles acquired for cash are to be included in its invested capital, and no change takes place in this value with reference to patents or other intangibles acquired for stock, unless the reorganization involves a change in the amount of the corporation's capital stock which is sufficient to cause a different result when the 25 per cent limitation is applied.

In case the reorganization involves a change of corporate identity through which the assets of an existing corporation are acquired by a successor, the rule applicable to the original corporation will apply in determining the amount at which the intangible assets acquired by the new corporation may be included in its invested capital. If such assets are acquired for cash, they may be included in computing invested capital at their cost price, while if they are acquired for stock they may be included to an amount not in excess of the par value of the stock issued for the same, subject to the 25 per cent limitation, as explained above.

The statements in the preceding paragraph, however, are subject to requirements of sections 331 of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

From the foregoing it is apparent that the reorganization of a corporation does not necessarily cause any decrease in its capital represented by patents or other intangibles.

II ('23)-2-723: A. R. R. 1300.

Section 2, Revenue Act of 1913; Section 12(a), Revenue Act of 1916; Section 207, Revenue Act of 1917; Sections 234 and 326, Revenue Act of 1918.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that no deduction from gross income be allowed in any year under review for amortization of the contract for services of A nor for redeemed theater passes; that in the computation of invested capital for 1917 and 1918 the options and leases acquired for common stock be treated as tangible property and allowed at a value equal to the par value of the stock issued therefor, and that the  $10x$  dollars common stock issued for services to be rendered be allowed only to the extent that services valued at  $x$  dollars per year have been rendered.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in adjusting its returns for the years 1915 to 1918, inclusive, partly in accordance with the revenue agents' report dated May—, 1920, and in assessing additional taxes for the year 1918.

The appellant company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Z in —, 1914, with a capital stock of  $53.3x$  dollars divided into  $w$  shares of 8 per cent cumulative preferred stock of the par value of  $y$  dollars per share and  $w$  shares of common stock of the same par value, for the purpose of erecting and operating a theater. The preferred stock was issued to incorporators, other than A, for cash and the common stock was issued to A for certain options to lease and leases on real estate for prepaid services and for cash.

During the years 1912 to 1914, inclusive, A purchased certain leases on real estate and secured options to purchase and options to lease other properties. After the organization of the M Company these properties were offered to the company for  $13.3x$  dollars of its common stock. The board of directors, by formal resolution, stated that the properties had been ascertained, adjudged, and declared to be of a fair value of  $13.3x$  dollars, that the acquisition of the same was necessary for the business of the company to carry out its contemplated object, and authorized the issuance to A of  $13.3x$  dollars full-paid common stock therefor.

The Committee has carefully examined all of the evidence submitted by the appellant to substantiate the value placed upon these properties by the vendor and the vendee and has reached the conclusion that such value has been fully established.

In the same agreement, under the terms of which the above properties were sold to the company, A agreed to direct and manage the new theater for a period of 10 years without salary for a consideration of  $10x$  dollars of the common stock. He also agreed to purchase the remaining  $3.3x$  dollars common stock for cash. These transactions were consummated and the stock was so issued.

In the audit of the case the Unit regarded the transactions under which the 23.3x dollars of common stock was issued (13.3x dollars for the leases and options and 10x dollars for prepaid services) as the purchase by the company of a contract, and in the computation of invested capital treated such contract as intangible property subject to the limitations prescribed by the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918. In the computation of net income the Unit allowed as a deduction in each of the years 1915 to 1918, inclusive, amortization at the rate of x dollars per year for that portion of the contract representing prepaid services, thereby treating the thing acquired by the company in consideration of the 10x dollars common stock as a deferred asset to be written off over the 10-year life of the contract.

In the opinion of the Committee such action was clearly in error. The resolution of the board of directors as recorded in the minutes clearly shows that the 13.3x dollars of common stock was issued for leases and options to lease certain definitely described real estate and such property is not subject to the limitations prescribed for intangibles. The 10x dollars of common stock was issued for services to be rendered in the future; that is, for an executory contract for the performance of services in the future. Courts have held that such a contract is not property within the requirements of the laws which provide that corporations shall not issue stock or bonds except for money, labor done, or property actually received. (See 125 N. Y. S., 572; 134 Fed., 341; 150 N. Y. S., 668.) Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918 provide for the inclusion in invested capital of the value of property paid in for stock or shares. The thing paid in must be property, and accordingly a promise to perform services in the future may not be taken into invested capital at any value. It appears reasonable, however, to treat A's agreement to serve the company as manager for a period of 10 years next ensuing, in consideration of the issue of common stock, as of the nature of a purchase of stock on the installment plan, and under this theory only that portion of the stock as represented services actually performed at the end of each year could be admitted as invested capital for the year next ensuing.

Nothing has been submitted to show specifically the fair value of the services rendered by A, although the earnings of the company for the first six years of its existence indicate that under his management it prospered exceedingly. The Committee feels, however, that the value per year fixed by agreement between A and the company is more controlling of the fair value of such services than the subsequent prosperity of the company. It is therefore recommended that x dollars be allowed in the computation of invested capital for each year's services as performed, and that in computing net income, no deduction be allowed in any year for amortization of the contract to render services.

Subsequent to the audit of the case by the Unit the Company requested permission to deduct from income for each year as a business expense of the year a percentage of the face value of redeemed theater passes issued for window display of posters, billboards, write-up in newspapers, personal services and rental of "props" for various acts. It is contended that the issue of passes for the purposes above named and the consequent necessity for the redemption of such passes with seats results in a loss to the company, because it frequently happens that prospective patrons must be advised that no seats are available, when the seats are desired are occupied by pass holders.

The Income Tax Unit takes the position that if gross income is to be charged with the value of the seats given for passes it should be credited with the same value when the passes are presented for redemption. The company admits that when the passes are redeemed income should be credited, but not for the full value of the seats, inasmuch as the passes are restricted and because of such restrictions can not be sold by the persons to whom issued for more than one-half price. In brief, the company requests that it be permitted to charge gross income with the full value of the seats occupied by pass holders and to credit income with only one-half of such value. The Committee finds no merit in such a contention. If the passes are worth the full value of a seat when given in payment for privileges, services, etc., it appears to be entirely unreasonable to assume that they have a less value when presented for redemption.

In view of the foregoing, it is recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that no deduction from gross income be allowed in any year under review for amortization of the contract for services of A nor for redeemed theater passes; that in the computation of invested capital for 1917 and 1918 the options and leases acquired for common stock be treated as tangible property and allowed at a value equal to the par value of the stock issued therefor; and that the  $10x$  dollars common stock issued for services to be rendered be allowed only to the extent that services valued at  $x$  dollars per year have been rendered.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

A bank refused to receive partnership funds for deposit and the partners deposited a part of the surplus each year in the names of the partners, A and B. Upon incorporation all the partnership assets were transferred to the corporation, and these individuals owned over 95 per cent of the stock. The accounts of the corporation contain no record of these deposits or accrued interest.

The deposits do not constitute assets of the corporation even though it received credit on the basis of them and the cost of liquidating the corporation was paid out of them.

The Committee has carefully considered the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in excluding from invested capital the sum of  $34.33x$  dollars, which represented cash in savings banks placed in the individual names of A and B instead of the corporate name of the M Company. In 1920 the Unit requested the advice of the Committee upon the issue involved, which was given in A. R. M. 109 (not published) under date of February —, 1921. Appellant has filed additional evidence and contends that the ruling contained in A. R. M. 109 should be reversed.

The N. Company, a copartnership, has engaged in the business of jobbers and commission merchants, and on February —, 1914, was incorporated under the name of the M Company, with an authorized capital of  $37.5x$  dollars. It took over the business of the partnership and all its assets. The appellant corporation in filing its return for the year 1917 set up on its books as an asset as of December 31, 1916, a good-will item of  $20.19x$  dollars. A revenue agent investigated the books of the corporation and reported that this was an arbitrary figure placed on the balance sheet in order to effect a balance of the books. The taxpayer could not explain why this was done, and accordingly this amount was disallowed as a capital item entirely. Amended returns were filed showing  $34.33x$  dollars, deposited in savings banks in the individual names of A and B, and a request was made to include this sum in the computation of appellant's invested capital. No claim was made, however, in the amended returns for the good-will item aforementioned. Upon the request of the Unit for advice on the subjects involving the good-will item, 20.19x dollars was disallowed as a capital item. The money in bank, 34.33x dollars, was also excluded from invested capital on the ground that it was not the property of the corporation.

It appears that the savings bank of the city of S as a matter of policy refused to receive partnership funds for deposit, and because of such refusal the partners deposited a part of the surplus each year in the names of the partners, A and B. After incorporation these individuals owned over 95 per cent of the stock of the appellant company, and from February 1, 1914, to the date of liquidation of the appellant company in 1920 the amounts in the savings banks credited to the above-named individuals were continuously increased. The accounts of the corporation, however, contain no record of these deposits or interest accrued thereon.

There is of record evidence showing that A and B wrote letters to mercantile houses stating that the amounts in the R Bank credited to their accounts were the property of the appellant company; that such statements were given to mercantile agencies; that, on May —, 1918, the appellant company borrowed from the R Bank the sum of 10x dollars, and later, on November —, 1918, the sum of 10x dollars, on the credit established by the savings deposits credited to A and B; that in 1920, when the business was liquidated, the cost of liquidation was paid out of these deposits, and the balance distributed among the stockholders.

The Committee is unable to agree with the appellant's contention that the deposits in savings banks in the names of A and B constituted assets of the corporation. As a matter of law, the corporation had no title to these deposits, and the fact that it may have received credit upon the basis of such deposits is immaterial. There is no basis in the law or regulations for the inclusion of these deposits in the statutory invested capital of the corporation.

The Committee therefore recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained and the appeal denied.

II ('23)-34-1209: I. T. 1848.

Revenue Acts of 1917, 1918, and 1921.

A corporation organized in 1917 used only borrowed money in acquiring its assets. It was not entitled to any statutory invested capital at the date of its organization.

For the purpose of computing depreciation the property should be valued at its cost price, in spite of the fact that it was purchased with borrowed money. In ascertaining the amount upon which depreciation is to be computed the purchase price should be allocated between depreciable and nondepreciable assets.

In 1917 a corporation, organized that year, acquired a mill from another corporation. The purchaser obtained a portion of the money necessary for the purpose by borrowing on the security of a deed of trust; it obtained another portion by borrowing from a third corporation, and gave its notes to the vendor corporation for the balance of the agreed price. The purchaser then issued capital stock to its own incorporators in an amount greatly in excess of the purchase price of the property. This stock was watered stock, as the corporation received no assets in exchange for the same. The property was appraised during 1918 at an amount in excess of the purchase price but below the amount of the capital stock issued. The corporation thereupon balanced the amount of its liabilities, represented by its capital stock and notes payable, by assets representing the plant at its appraised value and an item designated as intangible property representing the excess of its liabilities over the appraised value of its plant.

Held, as the purchaser used only borrowed money in acquiring its assets it was not entitled to any statutory invested capital at the date of its organization. This fact, however, did not bring it within section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917, as it employed a substantial amount of borrowed capital in conducting its business. The appraisal of its assets in 1918 at a figure in excess of the amount paid for them did not entitle the taxpayer to any paid-in surplus or to any addition to invested capital.

For the purpose of computing depreciation the property should be valued at its cost price, in spite of the fact that it was purchased with borrowed money. In ascertaining the amount upon which depreciation is to be computed the purchase price should be allocated between depreciable and non-depreciable assets.

II(23)-39-1272: I. T. 1888.

Revenue Act of 1918.

There was a completely new corporation formed prior to March 3, 1917, which succeeded to the assets and rights of two corporations organized under the laws of two other States and dissolved after the consolidation. The capital stock of the new corporation was very much larger than that of either of the predecessor corporations and larger than the total of the stock of the predecessor corporations held by individual stockholders. The purpose of the reorganization was to effect a change of character enabling a distribution of dividends. The change of ownership was made. The new corporation would have a right on its application to assert values as of the date of reorganization.

Held, that there was a distinct new taxable entity both for the purpose of invested capital and income and that the stock of a fourth corporation may be included in invested capital only at the value which may be established as of the date of reorganization. Any deductible loss on account of the stock of this fourth corporation must be determined upon the basis of its value as of the date of reorganization.

A consolidation of the M Companies, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of X, and the N Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Y, was effected in 1916 by the organization of a new corporation under the laws of the State of Z, which succeeded to their assets. The merger was accomplished by exchange of the capital stock of the O corporation of Z for the capital stock of both the M Companies and the N Company, and the subsequent dissolution of the latter companies by the O corporation as sole stockholder, the assets of the dissolved companies being received by the new corporation on cancellation or retirement of the stock of the dissolved companies.

The outstanding stock of the M Companies at the time of merger was 50x dollars and the outstanding stock of the N Company at the time of merger was 34x dollars, whereof 18x dollars was held by the M Companies. The O corporation issued in exchange therefor 70x dollars par value of its stock. The new corporation, therefore, issued 4x dollars par value of stock in excess of the par value of stock of the predecessors outstanding in the hands of stockholders, other than the holdings of parent in subsidiary. This 4x dollars represented an adjustment as to preferred stockholdings in the predecessor companies partly on account of unpaid accrued dividends and partly on account of an adjustment of values as to holdings of the companies' preferred stock. The total issue of stock of the new corporation was 14x dollars less than the total outstanding stock, inclusive of holdings of the parent in the subsidiary, of the predecessors. It appears that the reorganization was effected with the purpose principally of transferring the business to a new corporation under the laws of the State of Z in order that there might be greater freedom in the administration of the affairs of the business, particularly in the distribution of dividends, it appearing that the predecessor corporations were unable to pay dividends under the laws of the States of their organization on account of the impairment of their capital.

One of the predecessor corporations, N Company, had at some time prior to March 1, 1913, acquired stock in the P Company at a cost of 10x dollars. The P Company failed in 1914. It appears that the revenue agent was unable to determine that the P Company stock had any value at the date of consolidation and formation of the new corporation.

The corporation now claims that its invested capital should be determined on the basis of the cost to the two predecessor merged companies—that is, on the theory of continuity of the taxable entity or entities, notwithstanding that there was a dissolution of the predecessor corporations and formation of a new corporation in 1916.

In the case of reorganization where a new corporation has been substituted for an old corporation as the owner of the assets, except in the case of reorganization after March 3, 1917, where 50 per cent of the interest or control in the business or property remains the same, it is the general rule that the assets acquired by the new corporation shall be valued for the purposes of invested capital of the new corporation at the cost of the new corporation of the value of the assets acquired for stock at the time so acquired, and the advantage of this rule has been almost universally claimed by such reorganized corporations and has been applied in the computation of invested capital.

In this case, reorganization was not a mere change of domicile, since the stock of the new corporation was nearly double that of either old corporation, and the stockholders had new rights represented by new interests, and the new corporation was not subject to the inability to declare dividends as were the old corporations on account of the impairment of their capital and the inability to declare dividends thereby involved under the laws of the States of their organization.

It appears that the courts have, in the construction of Federal taxation laws, uniformly observed the distinct entity of a corporation and have not departed from the strict observance of a legal entity and separate taxability of each legal entity whenever there are in fact different legal entities, without reference, however, to the situation where such distinctions under the consolidation requirements are in the years of consolidation for tax to be disregarded.

The courts in Eisner v. Macomber (252 U. S., 189); Meischke-Smith et al. v. Wardell (286 Fed., 785); United States v. Phellis (T. D. 3270; C. B. 5, p. 37); United States v. Rockefeller (T. D. 3271) consistently applied the separate legal entity doctrine for the purpose of taxation.

In United States v. Phellis (T. D. 3270), where there was a reorganization and a new and larger corporation was substituted for the old, the court said:

* * * In the light of all this, we can not regard the new company as virtually identical with the old, but must treat it as a substantial corporate body with its own separate identity, and its stockholders as having property rights and interests materially different from those incident to ownership of stock in the old company.

The findings show that it was intended to be established as such, and that it was so created in fact and in law. There is nothing to warrant us in treating this separateness as imaginary, unless the identity of the body of stockholders and the transfer in solido of the manufacturing business and assets from the old company to the new necessarily have that effect. But the identity of the stockholders was but a temporary condition, subject to change at any moment at the option of any individual. As to the assets, the very fact of their transfer from one company to the other evidenced the actual separateness of the two companies.

The facts in this case are not similar to the facts at issue in A. R. R. 16 [Sec. 331, Art. 941.—1, Ruling No. 3], where there was a mere change of domicile. In view of all the facts of this case—that there was a completely new corporation formed in another State; that this new corporation succeeded to the assets and rights of two corporations organized under the laws of two other states; that the capital stock of the new corporation was very much larger than that of either of the predecessor corporations; that the capital stock of the new corporation was larger than the total of the stock of the predecessor corporations held by individual stockholders; that the purpose of reorganization was to effect a change of character enabling distribution of dividends—and in consideration also of the fact that the change of ownership was, therefore, such that the Bureau could not refuse the corporation on its application the right to assert values as of the date of reorganization for invested capital, it is held that there was in this case, at the time of the reorganization, the creation of a distinct new taxable entity both for the purposes of invested capital and income, and that therefore the stock of the P Company may be included in capital only at the value which may be established as of the date of reorganization and that any loss deducted in 1919 or any period after the date of reorganization must be determined upon the basis of the value of the P Company stock as of the date of reorganization. Sol. Op. 4 [Sec. 330, Art. 931.—1, Ruling No. 1] indicates that the holding herein is in harmony with the principles heretofore established.

WAR PROFITS AND EXCESS PROFITS TAX—SECTIONS 325 AND 326, REVENUE ACT OF 1918. INVESTED CAPITAL.

Notes to be paid for only out of earnings accruing on stock for which they are ostensibly given should not be included in invested capital.

Section 325 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that the term "invested capital" as used in the Act shall include notes. The by-laws of the M Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, provide that no one shall be allowed to hold stock in the corporation who is not actually identified with and devoting his entire time and talents to the interests of the company, and it is the practice in that company when the services of a desirable person are secured to pay him a nominal salary and issue him shares of stock, for which his enforceable note is taken, the note being paid out of the profits accruing on the stock. The questions are as follows:

- (a) Do the laws of the State of Oregon allow issuance of capital stock for (enforceable) notes?
- (b) Can the amount of (enforceable) notes outstanding at the beginning of the year be included in invested capital?
- (c) Are the notes, given under the conditions named above, enforceable within the meaning of the law as enacted by Congress, and interpreted by the Commissioner to govern invested capital computations?

(a) It is not found that the laws of Oregon specifically recognize the issuance of stock for notes. They do, however, recognize issuance of stock without cash payment. They also recognize the issuance of stock for property, real or personal. Section 6694, Lord's Oregon Laws, provides:

Every corporation organized under this chapter shall keep a stock book in such manner as to show intelligibly the original stockholders, their respective shares, the amount paid, and the amount due thereon, if any * * *

See also sections 6696 and 6707. If stock may be issued for property or without any payment, it seems clear that it may be issued for notes.

(b) Section 326 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides:

That as used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means * * *

(a) Actual cash value of tangible property other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares at the time of such payment * * *

Under this language it is not sufficient that notes are enforceable. They must be bona fide paid in. This point is discussed more fully in dealing with the next question.

(c) While nothing is found in the statement submitted to show that the notes in question are not legally enforceable, it does not necessarily follow that they are such notes as were contemplated by the framers of the Act as to be treated as invested capital. The law limits includable tangible property to that bona fide paid in. The notes in question are taken from employees, and it is stated by the president of the concern that it is "clearly understood that the notes given as evidence of stock ownership were to be paid wholly from the earnings of such stock and in the event that such employee-stockholder severed his connection with the company, such stock immediately would revert to the company, and the net earnings accrued on same would be immediately paid to him." Notes given under such conditions are not bona fide paid in within the intent of the statute. As indicated by the regulations, article 833, Congress doubtless had in mind notes given in absolute and unqualified payment, notes which are practically equivalent to cash and might be sold for cash, which, in other words, work an increase of the assets of the concern. Here the notes are given only as "evidence of ownership" and no collection thereon is to be made from the employee until he receives or is credited with dividends on the stock for which the notes are ostensibly given. The notes, therefore, add nothing to the resources of the company. There is no increase in its invested capital until it is earned by the company. It would not be consistent with the understanding between the company and the employee to raise money by discounting the notes. Conceivably, the concern might achieve an increase of working capital by borrowing on the notes, but by the express terms of the Act, borrowed money is not admissible. Section 325 (a), section 326 (b). If such arrangements should be recognized as working an increase of invested capital, invested capital might, at least to the extent of the amount authorized by the company's charter, be increased practically at will. The conclusion reached is that a note to be paid for only out of earnings accruing on the stock for which it is ostensibly given should not be included in invested capital.

Held, that good will in a corporation can not be allowed as invested capital under a claim that a price paid to stockholders by certain individuals was in excess of corporate book value of the stock. Good will must be acquired by direct purchase; it can not be determined by a collateral transaction.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying an item of good will of 10x dollars, claimed by the corporation to have been purchased with cash in 1911.

In 1876, A established a restaurant business and continued to operate the same as sole owner until his death in February, 1901. After his death, the business was carried on under the terms of his will by certain trustees. The trust estate continued for a period of 10 years, but on account of contracts expiring in 1905 and 1906 requiring a renewal for a period of 10 years, thus extending beyond the trust, it was necessary to create some entity capable of contract. A corporation with nominal capital of 4x dollars was accordingly formed and, in keeping with the terms of the will, the stock was issued in the name of the trustees. All contracts were renewed in the name of A, except for certain business directly pertaining to the State of Y, which business was contracted in the name of the N Company, another corporation capitalized at 4x dollars to meet statutory requirements of the State of Y. It is the contention of the taxpayer that the business of the corporation was conducted substantially as a personal service corporation and that all bank accounts were continued in the name of A.

In 1911, in accordance with the provisions of the will, the trust terminated and it was necessary to make distribution to the six heirs. Under this distribution the widow was entitled to 50 per cent of the estate and the balance was to be equally divided among five children. In order to make satisfactory distribution, the trustees sold the stock which they held for 60x dollars in cash and this amount was distributed to the heirs in the proportions above indicated. It appears that the book value of the stock was only 50x dollars and in order to measure the value of the stock by the cash consideration that was paid to the trustees, there was set up an asset of good will in the amount of 10x dollars. This amount was subsequently, in the next succeeding five years, charged off at 2x dollars per annum.

In submitting the case for consideration by this Committee, B, president of the corporation, made affidavit in the following statement:

* * * in other words, there was paid in cash for 4x dollars par value of M Company stock (with which went the 4x dollars par value N Company stock), 50x dollars being the book value of the furniture, fixtures, supplies, etc., and also 10x dollars for good will, or a total of 60x dollars which was contributed as follows: B, 38%; C, 20%; D, 20%; E, 15%; F, 7% and the stock was distributed accordingly.

Of these purchasers, only B and D were beneficiaries under the will, each receiving 10 per cent of the estate. Subsequent to consideration of the case by the Committee but prior to the final approval by the Committee, B submitted an additional affidavit in which the statement is made that—

As representative of the corporation, I had agreed to sell to myself and the other four individuals, the entire assets of the business of the M Company and the N Company. This was my intention; it was what we did.

The matter of the transfer of this property to the new organization was never discussed, but what we were purchasing was minutely understood by all of us; that is to say, we were purchasing all of the assets of the business. No thought was given to the purchase of stock, and no thought was given as to the method of transfer.

This subsequent affidavit seems to have no material bearing on the case, since it is a matter of record that the corporation known as the M Company was never liquidated. A corporation can not sell its assets and at the same time retain them. The M Company is doing business to-day under the charter issued at date of organization, namely, June, 1906, and the same amount of capital stock is outstanding, namely, 4x dollars. It was, of course, necessary to cancel the certificates of stock that were outstanding at the time of purchase by B and his associates because, as above suggested, the certificates had to be issued in different proportions of ownership. The transaction, accordingly, was between stockholders and individuals, and, under such circumstances, where value in excess of corporate book value is the consideration for the acquisition of stock, the exchange value does not measure the value of assets of the corporation. It is admitted by the taxpayer that the 10x dollars in cash, in excess of the book value of the assets and forming a part of the cash consideration of 60x dollars was never paid in to the corporation but went to the trustees of the A estate and was distributed to the beneficiaries under the will. Hence, to include this 10x dollars in the assets of M Company, through a credit to the surplus account of the company, would be the recognition of appreciation based on going concern value.

The earnings of the business of the M Company undoubtedly justify establishing good will, but good will can only be set up on the books of a corporation and considered as invested capital for tax purposes when acquired by direct purchase. Article 57 of Regulations 41 reads:

If good will * * * of a corporation or partnership * * * has been purchased with stock or shares issued prior to March 3, 1917, the amount that may be included in invested capital must not exceed:

(a) 20% of the par value of the total stock or shares outstanding on that date, nor (b) the actual value of the asset at the date acquired, nor (c) the par value of the stock issued in payment for the asset.

Article 60 reads:

Good will and other similar intangible assets purchased with cash or tangible property must be taken at a value not in excess of the cash or actual cash value of the tangible property specifically paid therefor.

These articles do not contemplate a value measured by a collateral transaction, and while, as above stated, this corporation has undoubtedly earned a good will value, there is no provision in the law for its inclusion in invested capital, except by purchase direct by the corporation or partnership. Appreciation arising from going concern value is not recognized in the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918 for invested capital purposes. The taxpayer has made reference in his contention to this Committee's Memorandum 21 wherein it is said:

If, upon the sale of the capital assets of a corporation to another corporation shares of stock are surrendered by the old stockholders to the vendee corporation, the nature of the transaction is not changed from one of the sale by the corporation to one of sale of stock by the stockholders.

In this transaction there was a sale of assets by several incorporated companies to another incorporated company, and as an incident of the transfer of the assets all of the stock of said companies was to be transferred and delivered at the time the sale and purchase was finally consummated. Accordingly, this was not a transaction between individuals.

The Committee finds no basis on which to establish a precedent by ignoring the corporate entity of the M Company and is accordingly of the opinion that the taxpayer's claim for good will of 10x dollars, measured by a transaction in the sale of stock of the corporation, by the stockholders to individuals, can not be sustained under the Revenue Acts of 1917 or 1918.

Section 207—Revenue Act of 1917.—Invested Capital.

Recommended in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit, in its adjustment of invested capital, be sustained, and accordingly that the appeal be denied.

The Committee has carefully considered the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit with respect to an increase of 50x dollars in invested capital as evidenced by an issue of capital stock having a par value of like amount.

The pertinent facts are related as follows: The appellant company was organized in 190— with a paid-in capital of 75x dollars and an authorized capital of 125x dollars. The company was organized for the purpose of purchasing the going business of the O Company, for which it paid 25x dollars cash and executed nine notes, eight for the sum of 10x dollars each and one in excess of 5x dollars (one note maturing June 1 of each year thereafter). These notes were all indorsed by the stockholders of the company. In 191— the company was embarrassed in the conduct of its business by reason of the heavy indebtedness which it carried and the consequent effect upon its credit. In order to relieve this situation, arrangements were made with A, the holder of the purchase money notes, to accept in lieu of five 10x dollar notes of the corporation, five personal notes of the stockholders of the company for similar amounts. The stockholders thereupon agreed to execute five 10x dollar notes in favor of the corporation in consideration of the balance of 50x dollars of the authorized and unissued capital stock of the company. Subscriptions for the unissued stock were duly taken in most cases and stock was receipted for, and all of it was left in the treasury of the company as collateral to the notes. These notes were immediately indorsed to A, and five of the corporation's notes of the same amount and of like dates, were taken up and canceled, thus reducing the indebtedness of the corporation by 50x dollars. Later, as these notes matured, they were taken up by the M Company in behalf of its individual stockholders, but the corporation still held the notes and the capital stock. When the notes were paid by the corporation, the entry was posted from the cash book to a special dividend account.

The Unit in passing on the point involved stated:

The new corporation from time to time paid off these notes out of its earned surplus. None of the notes were paid by the stockholders who had signed them. The certificates of capital stock of the new corporation were attached to the notes as collateral security. The new corporation paid off the new notes on which it was the indorser at the rate of about 10x dollars per year, plus interest at 6 per cent, and retained the notes in its treasury for the alleged purpose of increasing its credit with out-of-town banks. This seems improbable in view of the fact that some of the stockholders' notes became as much as seven years overdue, and in view of the further fact that as soon as the notes were paid they were charged on the books to "Special dividend account." The new corporation claimed that these notes paid by the corporation are still assets of the corporation and should be included in its invested capital, in addition to the amounts paid in satisfaction of these notes, even though none of the interest and principal was ever paid by the stockholders who signed them, and they were when paid charged to "Special dividend account."

In the case here at issue the notes of the stockholders were paid for assets of the old corporation, the new corporation merely being the original payee and an indorser. The notes were satisfied out of the earnings of the new corporation and then allowed to become overdue without any attempt having been made to collect from the makers of such notes. Therefore, as fast as such notes are paid, they should be eliminated from invested capital, and the stockholders should report as dividends received the amounts so paid.

In connection with the position taken by the Unit, that the payments actually made were in fact dividend payments, the taxpayer states the following:

The declaration and payment of a dividend by a corporation may be legally accomplished only by certain formal action on the part of the board of directors of a corporation, and no such action was taken.

The question involved has been considered by the office of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, which requested a brief from the taxpayer on the question as to whether the notes executed by the stockholders and indorsed over to A by the company, after having been redeemed by the company, constituted enforceable obligations against the stockholders under the statutes of the particular State, and further requested the corporation to submit for inspection its books containing the special dividend account, surplus account, regular dividend account, and its minute books of the directors' meetings. It developed that the capital stock books showed that the stock in question was in fact issued. Most of it had been receipted for, although certificates had never been removed from the stock book. The "special dividend account" and the "dividend account" shown on the ledger are identical with copies of book entries found in the file. The "Capital Stock account" on the ledger shows entries under date of June —, 190—, of 75x dollars, and February —, 191—, of 50x dollars, total capital stock issued 125x dollars. The "Surplus account" has been reduced by the amount of the regular annual dividend, but has not been reduced by the amount of the notes paid by the corporation. Copies of some of the notes were exhibited and the word "Canceled" appears in red ink across the face of the notes. Two notes were submitted in the sum of 10x dollars each, which were stated to be in renewal of notes which were barred by the statute of limitations. It developed, however, that these notes were renewed after the revenue agent made his investigation.

The taxpayer's brief on page 3, which was sworn to, states in part that:

Two of the notes as originally drawn were at the time of the revenue agent's investigation barred by the statute of limitations, their renewal having been overlooked. These two notes have been renewed in order that the obligation may be kept legally enforceable, and they will be exhibited at the hearing.

The minute books of the directors' meeting showed dividends regularly declared each year, a typical resolution being as follows:

On motion, a special dividend of 25 per cent on 75x dollars of capital stock be paid at once.

The minute books also show a resolution for each year from 1913 to 1917, inclusive, declaring a special dividend of 10x dollars to pay the stockholders' notes as they fell due. The typical record of such action is as follows:

A special dividend of 10x dollars to meet note for A, made by stockholders was ordered.

It is apparent, therefore, that the statements in the taxpayer's brief, that no dividend had been declared, is not in fact true.

The minute books also show that only z out of  $2\frac{1}{2}z$  shares of the stock were considered as voting stock, the z shares held as collateral for the notes evidently being treated as treasury stock.

The following is quoted from an informal memorandum written by the Solicitor under date of January 25, 1922, and the observations and opinion are subscribed to by the Committee:

It appears to this office in view of the additional facts gathered from the books that the capital stock of the corporation is 125x dollars and that the 50x dollars in notes issued for the 50x dollars stock in February, 1911, was an enforceable obligation against the stockholders of the corporation until the corporation paid each note by the declaration of a special dividend. It is not believed, however, that the notes can be treated as an asset of the company after they were paid out of the profits of the corporation in the form of a dividend to the stockholders. All of the stockholders signed the notes and were liable as between themselves in the same proportion as they held the stock of the corporation. A declaration of a dividend to pay the notes therefore was regular, and the earnings of the corporation were sufficient to pay the dividend regularly declared.

It is urged by the taxpayer that the action of the corporation and the stockholders is inconsistent with the theory that the declaration of a dividend was intended, but that the action taken should be construed to have been merely an authorization by the directors to the treasurer to take up these notes and hold them as an accommodation to the stockholders. The action of the directors and stockholders, however, does not seem to sustain this theory. The corporation's liability upon the notes was only secondary, and it was not obliged to take up the notes unless and until the stockholders had defaulted. It is affirmatively stated by the taxpayer and proven by other evidence that each of the stockholders is worth much more than his liability on these notes. The notes were interest bearing and in all the period since they were executed no stockholder has been called upon to pay any of the principal, nor has any stockholder paid any interest upon them. The notes were not due until June 1 each year, and without waiting for the due date or default of the stockholders the corporation declared dividends in February of each year to take up the notes when they became due June 1, and thus by its voluntary action legally obligated itself to the stockholders in advance to pay their obligation and charge it to their dividend accounts. Furthermore, when the notes were paid the cash entry was posted direct from the cash book to a special dividend account and the book-keeper who posted the entry is a stockholder, director, and secretary and treasurer of the corporation.

All further arguments of the taxpayer are based upon the fundamental error that the dividend was to be paid with the stockholders' notes, whereas at the time the dividends were declared and paid the corporation did not hold the notes of the stockholders which were being paid. Thus the taxpayer contends that if a dividend was in fact declared, it was never paid, whereas all the dividends in question were paid promptly, in cash, to A, the person to whom they were payable on behalf of the stockholders, according to the resolution declaring the dividend. It contends that the statute of limitations has now run against the stockholders and they can not enforce the collection of the dividends, whereas the dividends were paid on June 1 each year and the stockholders have no rights against which the statute may run. Again, it insists that the assets with which alone the dividends as declared might be paid were allowed to remain in the business and became paid-in surplus, when the dividends were payable, and were paid in cash from the earnings of the corporation; that the stockholders are estopped from claiming that dividends were declared, although they have received the payment of them in the payment of their notes.

No other conclusion can be reached than that the corporation did what its records indicate; that is, declared and paid a dividend out of its earnings each year in the sum of 10x dollars for the payment of these notes, and it should have reduced its surplus accordingly.

It might be, as between the stockholders and creditors of the corporations, that the stockholders would be held estopped from denying that they still owe these notes to the corporation, but that is extremely doubtful, and could be determined only upon the happening of that contingency. However that may be, such an estoppel would not set up these notes as valid and legal obligations, but would only estop the stockholders from claiming that they had already been paid.

It is suggested, therefore, that the surplus account of the corporation be reduced each year by the amount which it paid as a dividend in satisfaction of these notes as they fell due. This conclusion necessarily reduced the corporation's invested capital by 40x dollars prior to the year 1917, and requires an adjustment on account of the 10x dollar note paid on June 1, 1917.

In view of the foregoing quoted opinion, with which the Committee is in accord, it is recommended that the surplus account of the corporation be reduced each year by the amount which was paid as a dividend in satisfaction of these notes as they fell due, and that the corporation's invested capital be reduced by 40x dollars prior to the year 1917 and a further adjustment of invested capital be made as of June 1, 1917, on account of the note paid through the medium of a special dividend on that date. Accordingly, it is recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained and the taxpayer's appeal be denied.

Revenue Act of 1918.

Section 8632 of the Ohio General Code, which provides that at the time of making a subscription 10 per cent on each share subscribed for shall be paid, and which provides that the residue shall be paid in such installments at the times and places and to such persons as the directors require, has been construed by the Ohio courts as merely marking the time when the first installment shall be payable upon a stock subscription and as providing the mode for determining the time at which the residue shall become payable. (Chamberlain v. Railroad, 15 Ohio State, 249.) Stock issued without the payment of the first 10 per cent at the time of making the subscription is not invalid. (Smith v. Railroad, 15 Ohio State, 336, and Henry v. Railroad, 13 Ohio Reports, 187.) A note given for such 10 per cent is enforceable (Latham v. Insurance Co., 1 Bull., 127.)

In view of the above interpretation, it is held that, under the provisions of section 8632 of the Ohio General Code, promissory notes of subscribers may legally be received in respect of the entire amount of stock subscribed. Consequently, it follows that all the notes received by the M Company upon stock subscriptions may be included in the company's invested capital to the extent of their fair market value at the time paid in under the provisions of article 833 of Regulations 45, provided they were received in absolute payment and not as conditional payment only.

I ('22)-52-660: I. T. 1542.

Revenue Act of 1918.

Inquiry is made whether under the laws of the State of New York notes may legally be received in payment for stock.

Section 326(a)1 of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides:

That as used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means (except as provided in subdivisions (b) and (c) of this section):

Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares; * * *

Article 833 of Regulations 45 provides:

Tangible property paid in: evidences of indebtedness.—Enforcible notes or other evidences of indebtedness, either interest-bearing or noninterest bearing, of the subscriber received by a corporation upon a subscription for stock may be considered as tangible property in computing its invested capital to the extent of the actual cash value of such notes or other evidences of indebtedness at the time when paid in, but only (a) if such notes or evidences of indebtedness could under the laws of the jurisdiction in which the corporation was organized legally be received in payment for stock, and (b) if they were actually received by the corporation as absolute, and not as conditional, payment in whole or in part of the stock subscription.

With regard to incorporation under New York laws, section 55 of the stock corporation law provides that stock may be issued only for money, property, or services, and where a subscription is payable in money, section 53 requires 10 per cent of such subscription to be paid in cash. Section 29 provides that no corporation or officer thereof shall "discount any note or other evidences of indebtedness, or receive the same in payment of any installment * * * due or to become due on any stock in such corporation." (Birdseys, Consolidated Laws of New York, p. 8205.)

Accordingly, under the laws of New York, any notes given for balances of stock subscriptions may not legally be discounted or received as payment for stock. Such notes, therefore, may not be included in invested capital under section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 833 of Regulations 45.

II ('23)-38-1267: I. T. 1884.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

A corporation which intended to extend its business increased its capital stock and issued the additional shares to its incorporators, who then executed their respective noninterest-bearing promissory notes for the amount of the stock received by each maker and placed the shares, with the notes attached in a bank, and entered into negotiations for a credit in case credit became necessary. Later the plan of extension was abandoned and this stock and the notes were recalled and destroyed, and the additional machinery and materials which had been purchased were paid for from the general funds of the corporation.

Promissory notes given under the conditions described are not bona fide paid into the corporation as is required by section 326(a)2 of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

A corporation which contemplated building an additional plant obtained permission to increase its capital stock by  $x$  dollars for that purpose. Shares to that value were issued to the incorporators of the company in equal amounts. They then executed their respective noninterest-bearing promissory notes for the amount of the stock each maker received, and placed the shares of stock with the notes attached with a bank, and entered into negotiations for credit in case credit became necessary. Machinery and materials were ordered, but before their receipt the plan to establish a branch factory was abandoned and the stock and notes were recovered from the bank and destroyed. When the machinery and materials were received they were brought to the company's factory and paid for from the funds of the corporation, so that no money pledged to the new venture was used in any way, and the corporation, its assets and its capital stock, remained identically as they were prior to the proposed increase in the capital stock. Advice is requested whether the  $x$  dollars evidenced by the additional shares of stock and the promissory notes can be used as invested capital in computing the excess-profits tax for the year in which they were outstanding.

The item of  $x$  dollars increase in capital stock can not be included in computing the statutory invested capital of the corporation for any year or portion of a year. Section 325 (a) of the Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921 defines tangible property as including notes and other evidences of indebtedness. Section 326(a)2 of these Acts states that invested capital means actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares. It is perfectly plain that promissory notes given under the conditions stated are not bona fide paid in to the corporation. The Bureau always considers the bona fides of any transaction through which the invested capital of a corporation is sought to be increased, and makes that feature one of the determining factors in deciding whether the invested capital may be increased, even though shares of stock were actually issued by the corporation to the extent of the increase claimed. While the citations given above are taken from the revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921, the same rule would apply should a case of this character arise under the Revenue Act of 1917.

In the instant case it was not necessary to consider whether the laws of the State in which the taxpayer corporation was organized permitted it to issue stock for notes. Ordinarily, however, this question is of primary importance when it arises in the determination of invested capital, and in such cases the rules announced in article 833 of Regulations 45 and 62 are controlling.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the O Company. This appeal is based on two grounds: One, the action of the Unit in rejecting the claim for assessment under section 210, and the other, the disallowance, in the computation of invested capital under section 201, of an amount of  $x$  dollars representing capital stocks of other corporations owned.

At the time of organization, the business having been conducted originally by a partnership, no attention appears to have been given to the actual value of the assets assumed by the corporation, which started business with a capital stock of  $y$  dollars, and one of the grounds for the claim under section 210 is this defective accounting. It is understood, however, that in 1912, and again in 1913, the value of these permanent assets was appraised and written up and stock issued therefor, all of which has been allowed as invested capital. The other ground is that the corporation's income in 1917 was the fruits of previous activities. It is claimed that a large part of the income for 1917 was from a contract undertaken in 1916.

The matter of the company's claim for assessment under section 210 was under consideration by the Tax Reviewers and by them rejected, and the Committee sees no sufficient reason for a reversal of this action. Furthermore, it appears from a statement of the special assessment section that the company's excess profits tax was 41.49 per cent of the income and that statistics obtained from comparison of other corporations engaged in a like or similar business reflect an average tax of 40.14 per cent of the income.

The disallowance of the  $x$  dollars of inadmissible assets appears to grow out of the strict interpretation and application of article 44 of Regulations 41. This article, following the provisions of section 207 of the excess profits tax law, provides that "Stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the excess profits tax" may not be included in invested capital. This is merely a statement of the general principle adopted in the Act that borrowed money, interest on which is an allowable deduction, may not be included in invested capital, nor may assets the income from which is not included in the income account be included. The framers of the Act, however, did not foresee or make specific provision for a situation where inadmissible assets are purchased with borrowed money. It was clearly not the intention of Congress, where, for instance, a corporation has $250,000 of admissible assets, $250,000 of inadmissibles, $250,000 of cash capital and $250,000 of borrowed money, to hold that the corporation has no invested capital, nor does the law so provide unless the cash capital is invested in inadmissible assets.

When Regulations 41 were in course of preparation the method of meeting this situation was given very careful consideration and full discussion. It was recognized that in many, if not most instances, it would be impossible to earmark the dollar paid for inadmissible assets and to say whether it represented invested capital or borrowed money. It was therefore determined to give the taxpayer the benefit of the doubt, and this was done by paragraph 129 of article 53, which, after specifying certain adjustments necessary to be made, provides that the sum so found shall be the invested capital at the beginning of the taxable year, "except that in any case where the admissible assets * * * are less than the amount of such adjusted total, then the invested capital must be further reduced to an amount equal to the sum of the admissible assets." In drafting the form to put into effect this provision it was found to be an awkward thing to accomplish, and precisely the same result was accomplished in the method prescribed by Schedule C 8, Form 1103, and the instructions covering same; that is to say, if the admissible assets are in excess of the adjusted capital and surplus, no further deduction is required because of inadmissible assets; in other words, only the excess of inadmissible assets over total indebtedness is to be deducted from the capital and surplus so found.

Therefore, giving the intended effect to article 53 and to schedule 8 (c) of the form, the deduction of  $x$  dollars for inadmissible assets, which is much less than the outstanding indebtedness of the company, was not required, and the action of the Unit in further adjusting the capital and surplus by a reduction for inadmissible assets was erroneous, and the Committee therefore recommends that the corporation be advised to file claim for abatement of the amount of the assessment based on this error, or if claim has already been filed that it be allowed to such extent; and that the action of the Unit in rejecting the claim for assessment under section 210 be sustained.

Article 835.—Tangible Property Paid in; Mixture of Tangible and Intangible Property (Reg. 45—¶756, ante): (Reg. 62—¶1191, post).

16-19-120: T. B. M. 5.

Where since the organization of a corporation its capital stock has been increased or reduced and such change represents an actual acquisition of new property for stock or an actual impairment of original properties, the 20 per cent limitation imposed by section 207, Revenue Act of 1917, will be based upon the par value of the total stock outstanding on March 3, 1917.

Article 59 of Regulations 41 is a reasonable interpretation of the Act of October 3, 1917, and where a corporation has acquired tangible and intangible property in exchange for its bonds and stocks it will be deemed, in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, that the intangibles were acquired by the stock.

In computing consolidated invested capital, where one corporation has acquired the stock of one or more subsidiary companies, such transaction should be treated in effect as though the assets of the respective companies had been acquired. In the case under consideration, the decision of the income tax unit in allowing a 9 per cent deduction is approved.

(1) The W Company was formed through the merger of the Y Company and the Z Company with the W Company as it existed before the merger. The new company issued the following securities:

Bonds	67 x dollars
Capital stock	59 x dollars
Total bonds and stock	126 x dollars

The company also assumed liabilities amounting to 9x dollars. For the above securities and the assumption of the liabilities just mentioned the company acquired total tangible assets of 84x dollars and intangible assets of 51x dollars. In computing its invested capital for 1917 the company claims that these securities were issued ratably for both tangible and intangible assets, and that, therefore, 46 per cent of the bonds were issued for tangible and 54 per cent for intangible property. These ratios apply also to the common stock. Is this method of computation correct?

The act of October 3, 1917, provides that, where intangible assets, such as good will, trade-marks, trade brands, etc., have been acquired by capital stock, the maximum amount that may be included in invested capital in respect of such intangibles is limited to 20 per cent of the capital stock of the corporation outstanding on March 3, 1917. This is a purely arbitrary limitation designed to prevent the inclusion in invested capital of excessive amounts of capital stock issued for intangibles in excess of their reasonable value. Where capital stock is issued directly for intangible property, the application of this rule is simple, but where, as in the present case, a mixed aggregate of tangible and intangible property is acquired for the total amount of securities, part of which are in the form of bonds and part of which are in the form of stock, it becomes necessary to determine how much of the tangible property was acquired by bonds and how much, if any, by the issuance of capital stock. Regulations 41, article 59, lays down the rule that—

In the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed in the case of a corporation that its stock was issued for the following purposes in the order named: (a)

Good will or other intangible property, (b) patents and copyrights, (c) tangible property.

Stating the rule conversely, bonds are to be applied first against tangible property, and any remainder only will be applicable to intangible property. There is no clearly stated rule in the statute; therefore the regulation is based upon inference, and to be sound must be a reasonable interpretation of what the statute requires. In any case in which a mixed aggregate of tangible and intangible property is acquired for a block of securities consisting in part of bonds of the corporation and in part of its capital stock, the allocation of the tangible and intangible property to the respective securities may be made upon one of three possible bases:

(a) That the stock was issued first against tangible property, and that the bonds were issued against intangible property;

(b) That the bonds and the stock apply ratably against the tangible and intangible assets; and

(c) That the bonds apply first against tangible assets, and that the stock was issued against any remaining tangible property and for the intangible property.

Considering briefly these possible bases, the first must be discarded as altogether unreasonable. Corporate securities are not and could not in any ordinary case be issued upon such a basis. The second basis is that claimed by the taxpayer, but it also must be discarded on the ground that it does not conform to the methods of corporate finance. Bonds are universally drawn in such a way as to rank senior to capital stock. A bond aims to give the maximum of security with a moderate rate of return, and this return, while limited in amount, is nevertheless a fixed obligation for the payment of which, together with the principal of the bond, tangible assets are specifically pledged. It is true that in some instances the mortgage or other instrument may cover not only tangible property but intangible property also, but even in such a case the satisfaction of the bond is first sought against the tangible property. The stock as the junior security is more speculative in character. It has no right of foreclosure and after satisfaction of the senior securities the stock must bear all losses. As against this, however, the stock is limited in its return only by the earning capacity of the corporation. Tangible property has an actual value resting upon its permanency and upon the variety of its possible uses. Intangible property is evanescent in its character, and its value rests upon its potential earning power and its use is limited usually to the trade or business in which it has its origin. It thus lacks the elements which make tangible property the accepted security for bonds, but because of its earning power it is a fitting basis for an issue of common stock. These distinctions are not merely theoretical but underlie the whole structure of corporate finance in this country, and are so interwoven with the practice and procedure in the issuance of securities that they have become, for all practical purposes, obligatory.

The rule laid down in article 59 of Regulations 41 is, in the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board, reasonable and fairly interprets the intent of the Statute. It is, therefore, recommended that the claim of the W Company to the right to compute invested capital upon the basis of prorating the bonds and stock issued by it over the tangible and intangible property be denied.

(2) In accordance with a court decree the W Company as it then existed was dissolved. Two new companies, the R Company and S Company, were organized and a certain portion of the tangible and intangible assets of the W Company was transferred to these new corporations. In this connection the W Company claims that the tangible and intangible property transferred at this time was acquired by it partly for bonds and partly for stock. This question is not material in view of the negative conclusion reached in (1) above. This applied, however, only in so far as it relates to property acquired at the time of the merger and it may be that some part of the intangible property in the form of trade-marks or trade brands so transferred may have been acquired for cash or tangible property since that date. Proper recognition should, of course, be given to the facts in such an event.

(3) The W Company acquired through the merger already mentioned the stock of certain subsidiary companies. In the computation of the consolidated invested capital the Income Tax Unit has treated the acquisition of the stock of these subsidiary companies in the same manner as if the tangible and intangible assets of the respective companies had been acquired. In some cases these subsidiary companies have since been dissolved and upon dissolution the assets have been taken up by the parent company and the liabilities assumed by it. In the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board the method of computation used by the unit as above stated is correct.

(4) The W Company makes claim for prewar deduction of 9 per cent, although its actual earnings during the prewar period amount to less than this percentage of its invested capital. Representative corporations, however, show more than 9 per cent, and the W Company would have shown more than 9 per cent except for a charge that occurred during this period by way of premium paid upon certain bonds of the company which it had called in and canceled pursuant to the dissolution decree.

In view of all these circumstances, the Advisory Tax Board concurs in the decision of the Income Tax Unit that the taxpayer's claim should be allowed.

44-20-1282: A. R. R. 307.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the N Company against the ruling of the Income Tax Unit disallowing an item of 50x dollars claimed as good will in its invested capital for 1918.

The facts appear to be that the N Company, a corporation, succeeded N and Company, a partnership, in 1897. The partnership had been very profitable prior to incorporation, its average earnings for the five years just prior to 1897 being approximately 100x dollars. As its tangible assets presumably were substantially the same as when turned over to the corporation in 1897, 200x dollars, it is clear that its earnings indicated a good will worth at least as much as the tangible assets. The deed transferring assets to the corporation specifically recited that the 200x dollars in stock was paid for the trade name and good will of the business and the physical assets. The amount of the net tangible assets taken up on the books of the corporation was 200x dollars, the good will not being carried on the books as an asset at all.

The denial of the item of 50x dollars claimed as invested capital appears to be based upon the assumption that if allowed at all it must be allowed as paid-in surplus, and the Unit has consistently and correctly, in the opinion of the Committee, taken the attitude that no paid-in surplus is permissible directly or indirectly as to intangible assets conveyed. However, this amount may be allowed without its inclusion as paid-in surplus. The tangible assets taken over were raw materials and stock in trade which were sold long prior to any income tax law. To distribute the purchase price of the tangibles and intangibles purchased as being 150x dollars for tangibles and 50x dollars for intangibles will have the effect of reducing the cost price of assets from 200x dollars to 150x dollars and consequently increasing the earned surplus by 50x dollars.

It is clear that this is a case of acquisition for stock of a mixed aggregate of tangibles and intangibles such as would justify the application of section 327 if satisfactory allocation of values can not be arrived at. In view of the history of the concern and the profits earned in excess of a return upon tangible assets, the Committee is clearly of the opinion that the intangible assets were as readily worth 50x dollars as the tangibles were worth 150x dollars. However, as 50x dollars in 1918 is the maximum value which can be included in invested capital by reason of the purchase of intangible assets for stock, the Committee recommends that the corporation be allowed to allocate the values at the time of purchase and to attribute to the tangibles a cost of 150x dollars and to the intangibles a cost of 50x dollars, and to adjust its books so as to increase its earned surplus by the sum of 50x dollars.

II('23)-11-944: A. R. R. 2564.

Revenue Act of 1918.

In 1909 the N partnership transferred all its assets to the M corporation for its entire authorized capital stock, par value 75x dollars. Their net worth, exclusive of good will, which was not set up on the books of the corporation, was more than 75x dollars. No portion of the good will can be included in the computation of invested capital. (A. R. R. 307 (C. B. 3, p. 344 [ruling No. 3, above] overruled.)

A corporation can not adjust the compensation paid to its officers during the prewar years 1911, 1912, and 1913 for the purpose of adjusting its war-profits credit for the year 1918.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that it can not now adjust its net income for the prewar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, on account of certain amounts paid to its stockholders during those years and in holding that an item of 18.75x dollars can not be included in the computation of its invested capital for the year 1918.

Upon thorough consideration of the evidence the Committee finds: That appellant corporation was incorporated during the year 1909 with an authorized capital stock of 75x dollars, par value, for the purpose of taking over the business of the N Company, a partnership; that during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913 all of the authorized capital stock was outstanding and held by the former partners in the copartnership of the N Company; that its book net profits for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913 were:

	Dollars
1911.....	77.99x
1912.....	39.16x
1913.....	47.71x

(see revenue agent's report, dated July —, 1918); that during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913 it paid dividends on its outstanding capital stock as follows:

	Dollars
1911.....	30x
1912.....	56x
1913.....	37.5x

that during each of the prewar years its directors passed a resolution providing that the respective amounts set forth below be distributed among its officers, who were also its sole stockholders, as salaries for that year:

	Dollars
1911.....	57.09x
1912.....	91.35x

that the amounts paid pursuant to the provisions of those resolutions were charged to expense; that the proportionate part of the total amount which was paid to each officer during the prewar years was based on stock ownership; that its officers did not receive during the prewar years any salary in addition to the amounts paid or accrued under the above-mentioned resolutions; that appellant corporation now desires to adjust the amounts paid to its officers as salaries during the prewar years "for the purpose of adjusting the war-profits credit on the return of net income for the year 1919 * * *"; that the entire authorized capital stock of the M Company, a corporation, was issued during 1909 to the N Company, a copartnership, in payment of its assets; that the capital stock was issued for "all the personal property of every kind and nature belonging to said copartnership, consisting substantially of the property mentioned in inventory sheets accompanying this offer; also all choses in action of every kind and nature, including all accounts and bills receivable, patents and patent rights, copyrights and trade-marks, all contracts and agreements and the entire good will of said business, at a price of 75x dollars; the corporation to assume the payment of all bills and accounts payable and all claims and demands of every kind and nature against said firm, and the performance of all executory contracts and agreements"; that it was stated in a letter to the board of directors of the M Company, dated February —, 1909, that "Our last inventory, dated January —, 1909, shows that the net worth of said assets, without considering the value of patents, trade-marks, copyrights, and the valuable good will of the business, and placing a low valuation upon the stock and fixtures, to have been on said day more than 75x dollars, and that the net value of said business has increased since the day of said inventory and the day of the date hereof"; that the corporation did not set up good will on its books of account; and that appellant corporation contends that good will, in the amount of 18.75x dollars, be included in the computation of its invested capital for the year 1918.

The Committee further finds that, under the circumstances in this case, appellant corporation can not now adjust the compensation paid to its officers during the prewar years 1911, 1912, and 1913 for the purpose of adjusting its war-profits credit for the year 1918 (see O. D. 184 (C. B. 1, p. 273 [ruling No. 2 under Sec. 311, Art. 781, herein]); and that the amount of 18.75x dollars under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918 and the Regulations promulgated thereunder can not be included in the computation of its invested capital for that year.

Accordingly, the Committee recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained.

Appellant corporation has stated that the principle laid down in A. R. R. 307 (C. B. 3, p. 344 [ruling No. 3, above]) ) is applicable in this case in connection with its contention that the amount of 18.75x dollars, good will, should be included in its invested capital for the year 1918. In the opinion of the Committee the conclusion reached in A. R. R. 307 was erroneous and should not be followed in other cases.

Paid-in surplus representing tangible property need not be reduced by reason of depreciation of the property in question. All adjustments necessary on account of inadequate or excessive depreciation should be made in connection with earned surplus or undivided profits.

How invested capital shall be determined in the case of the X company where bondholders purchased at foreclosure sale the property covered by the mortgage securing the bonds, and then transferred said property to a new corporation in exchange for its total authorized stock issue.

The bondholders of the X Company obtained judgment against the debtor corporation in the amount of 4x dollars. The property of the corporation was sold and bid in by the bondholders for 3x dollars. The memorandum states that the cash value of the property was probably less than the judgment and probably more than the bid. After the property was bid in by the bondholders a new corporation with an authorized stock issue of 2x dollars was organized, and the property bid in at foreclosure sale by the bondholders was exchanged for the total issue of the stock of the new corporation. The inquiry is, What shall be the amount of the invested capital of the new corporation?

Article 153 of Regulations 45 provides that where under foreclosure a mortgagee buys in the mortgaged property and credits the indebtedness with the purchase price, the difference between the purchase price and the indebtedness will not be allowable as a deduction for a bad debt, for the property which was security for the debt stands in place of the debt. Article 1563, Regulations 45, also provides that there is no gain or loss arising from the acquisition and subsequent disposition of property when as a result of a transaction there is not a change in substance but merely in form of ownership. It is provided that there must be a change into the equivalent of cash to complete or close a transaction from which income may be realized. These regulations deny to the stockholders the right of taking loss upon the basis of any estimated difference in value between their investment in bonds and the property taken to secure such bonds.

Article 836 provides that evidence offered in support of a claim for a paid-in surplus may consist among other things of an appraisal of the property; certification of the assessed value in the case of real estate; and proof of a market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares. It provides, however, that "generally, allowable claims under this article will arise out of transactions in which there has been no substantial change of beneficial interest in the property paid in to the corporation, and in all cases the proof of value must be clear and explicit."

In the case of the X Company there has been no change of beneficial interest of the stockholders, and the Advisory Tax Board is of the opinion that the corporation should be allowed to set up an invested capital equal to the value of the property transferred to the corporation as of the date of transfer, such value to be established by evidence acceptable to the Commissioner. The question of gain or loss to the stockholders who were the former bondholders and the invested capital of the new corporation are not concurrent as to time of determination in the above case. The gain or loss of stockholders will be determined on the basis of the price paid for the bonds and the price received for stock of the new corporation when sold.

Where a corporation exchanges its stock for the assets of a partnership, which are greatly in excess of the par value of the stock, and there is no written obligation to the partners as to the payment of the excess, the taxpayer is entitled to submit evidence in support of a claim for paid-in surplus; however, if the corporation is obligated to the partners for any portion of the excess, a claim can not be sustained.

14-19-440: T. B. M. 57.

The assets of a corporation can not be valued as of March 1, 1913, for the purpose of computing invested capital.

The X Company has appealed from a decision of the Income Tax Unit that it can not appraise its assets as of March 1, 1913, and use the values thus ascertained as a basis for determining invested capital. The company relies on Lynch v. Turrish (247 U. S., 221) and similar decisions, holding that appreciation prior to March 1, 1913, can not be considered net income for the purposes of the income tax.

An inspection of section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1918 with its reiteration of the phrase "value * * * at the time of such payment" clearly shows that with minor exceptions the statutory invested capital is based upon the value of property at the time it is paid in for stock or shares and not upon a valuation at some subsequent date. The law has been consistently interpreted to mean that the basis or starting point in the computation of invested capital is found in the amount of cash or other property paid in, the original values of such other property being determined in accordance with the statute and the regulations. (Art. 42, Regulations 41.) In enacting the Revenue Act of 1918, Congress advisedly continued and confirmed this general principle. (Senate Rept. No. 617, p. 11; sec. 326, Revenue Act of 1918.) This well-established rule must be applied in the present case. The fact that this particular company has defective accounting records and can not accurately compute its invested capital in the ordinary manner may justify assessment under section 210 of the 1917 Revenue Act or section 328 of the 1918 Revenue Act, but does not permit any appraisal of assets at a time subsequent to the date on which they were paid in for stock as a basis of a computation of invested capital.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX, REVENUE ACT OF 1917, SECTION 207 (a), REGULATIONS 41, ARTICLE 63.

Time of Valuation for the Purpose of Determining Invested Capital of Property Acquired by a Corporation by Gift.

Where certain commercial leases to oil lands are informally transferred to a corporation formed by the lessees for the purpose of taking over such leases, no consideration being paid for such transfer, it will be deemed that the transfer was made at the time of taking possession, and the addition to invested capital of the corporation upon such transfer is the fair market price or value of the leases at the time possession is so taken by the corporation.

Opinion is requested as to the time when certain commercial leases should be valued for the purpose of determining the invested capital of the M Company which leases were informally transferred to the corporation without consideration by its stockholders.

The Revenue Act of 1917 provides, section 207.

That as used in this title, the term "invested capital" * * * means * * *

(a) In a case of a corporation or partnership * * * (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year; * * *

Interpreting this section article 63 of Regulations 41 provides:

When Tangible Property May Be Included in Surplus.—Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value, accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus. The adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at the time.

Evidence tending to support a claim for paid-in surplus under these circumstances must be as of the date of conveyance, and may consist, among other things, of (1) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities, (2) the assessed value in the case of real estate, and (3) the market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares.

Prior to October, 1913, the M Company was a partnership. This partnership acquired leases to certain oil lands in consideration for its promise to begin drilling wells on the lands leased within a stated period of time, and to continue development. About October, 1913, the partnership instituted proceedings to incorporate. Immediately upon incorporation, and without formal record in any manner, the commercial leases held by the partnership were turned over to the corporation, which, thereupon, continued the work of drilling wells and developing properties. At the time of this formal transfer to the corporation the leases in question were of a value which can be determined with reasonable accuracy. A few months later, as a result of the development carried on by the corporation, the value of the leases became greatly enhanced.

It is the contention of the taxpayer that since the only way title to the leases could be acquired by the corporation was by fulfilling their individual requirements as to the developing of the properties, the leases were acquired on different dates, that is, the dates when permanent improvements were made by the corporation.

The excess profits tax law of October 3, 1917, authorizes a corporation to include in "invested capital" as paid-in surplus the actual cash value of tangible property made the subject of a gift. Construing this provision, section 207 (a) 3, Regulations 41, article 63, provides that where tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus. That article goes on to state that the adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at that time. Although not definitely authorized by this article, the practice of the Bureau has been to regard as paid-in surplus the entire value of property made the subject of a gift at the date of its "conveyance."

The term "conveyance" is not used in this article in its strict technical sense, but means simply a transfer of the interest of the donor to the donee. This is shown by the fact that the article is concerned with tangible property in general, whereas, as is well known, the term "conveyance" is, strictly speaking, applied only to the formal transfer of real property by deed.

In the instant case it is undisputed that the entire interest of the partnership or the individual members thereof in the leases in question was transferred to the corporation at its date of incorporation.

While it is true that after such transfer of interest the corporation was required to continue the drilling of wells and the developing of the properties in order to carry out the terms of the original leases, still, so far as the partnership, the donor, and the corporation, the donee, are concerned, the entire interest of the former was transferred at the date of incorporation. The conditions which had to be fulfilled by the corporation did not affect the transfer of interest in the leases from the partnership, but simply the maintaining of the property in the leases as originally made.

As a general rule a sale of an interest in real property is held to occur at the time a deed passes or at the time possession and the burdens and benefits of ownership are, from a practical standpoint, transferred to the buyer, whichever occurs first. (See Law Opinion 988; Solicitor's Memorandum 1267, and cases therein cited.) The rule as to the effective date of a gift of an interest in real property for purposes of valuation should be the same as in the case of a sale. Since only the original parties are concerned, this conclusion is not affected by reason of the fact that the transfer was oral. In the instant case possession of the lands covered by the leases was taken immediately by the corporation; in fact such taking of possession is the only evidence of the transfer. Even if there had been a subsequent written assignment of the leases, such assignment would, for the purpose of fixing valuation, be retroactive to the time when the parties intended the property to pass, i. e., in this instance to the time when the corporation took possession and dealt with the leases as the owner thereof.

It is, therefore, held that where certain commercial leases to oil lands are informally transferred to a corporation formed by the lessees for the purpose of taking over such leases, no consideration being paid for such transfer, it will be deemed that the transfer was made at the time of taking possession, and the addition to invested capital of the corporation upon such transfer is the fair market price or value of the leases at the time possession is so taken by the corporation.

28-20-1064: A. R. R. 161.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended that the claim of M. & Company for a paid-in surplus of 15x dollars on account of the excess value of properties in 1911 be allowed.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of M. & Company, a corporation, from the action of the Unit in disallowing a claim for 15x dollars as paid-in surplus in the determination of the corporation's invested capital for the purpose of adjusting excess profits tax.

M. & Company was organized in 1911 as a consolidation of two pre-existing corporations. Among other assets which were taken over by the present corporation and for which stock was issued were two pieces of real estate, the values of which are the basis of the present claim. One of these properties, the so-called warehouse property, was purchased by the original corporation at a cost of x dollars and on which a warehouse building was erected in the year 1902 at an actual cost of 2x dollars, this property having a book value of 3x dollars at the time of organization of the new company, at which value it was taken over, stock issued therefor, and the property set up on the books of the new corporation. The other, the main store building, was purchased by the original corporation at approximately 5x dollars, and there was erected thereon, in the years 1902 and 1903, a store building at an actual cost of 11x dollars, the property being carried on the books of the old corporation at 16x dollars, at which figure it was taken over and carried on the books of the new corporation. The claim for paid-in surplus arises on the alleged excess of value of the land on which these two buildings stand, in 1911. There was no substantial change of interest at the time of reorganization, the stockholders of the new corporation being practically the same as in the old.

Article 63 of Regulations 41 provides as follows.

Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value, accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid in surplus. The adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at that time.

Evidence tending to support a claim for a paid-in surplus under these circumstances must be as of the date of conveyance, and may consist, among other things, of (1) appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities, (2) the assessed value in the case of real estate, and (3) the market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares.

It will be noted that the properties were taken over in January, 1911, and it appears that some time during the late summer of 1912 an appraisal was made of these two properties and the value of the main store lot, exclusive of the building, was appraised at 17x dollars, while the value of the warehouse lot, exclusive of the building, was appraised at 4x dollars.

The last paragraph of article 63 requires that "evidence tending to support a claim for paid-in surplus * * * must be as of the date of conveyance," and the Unit has apparently rejected the claim on the theory that the appraisal, in order to be valid, must have been made on the exact date of conveyance. In the opinion of the Committee this is too narrow a construction. It is believed that the real meaning is that the appraisal must have been made as of that date; that is to say, in the light only of knowledge or facts ascertainable on that date and not in the light of subsequent happenings. Evidence was produced at the hearing to show that between January 1, 1911, the date of transfer, and the date of this appraisal there was no appreciable increase in the value of real estate in the locality. The appraisal then made has been substantiated by an appraisal subsequently made by two disinterested appraisers as of January 1, 1911, who find the values only slightly different from those reached by the first appraisers, the recent appraisal being 4x dollars for the warehouse lot and 18x dollars for the store lot.

At the time of the appraisal in 1912, 5x dollars of the increase shown thereby was carried into the books of the company and a tax of 1 per cent paid thereon under the Act of 1909, under the mistaken view, subsequently reversed in the Baldwin Locomotive Co. case, that appreciation written on the books constitutes income. It is stated that the reasons for not then carrying the entire appreciation on to the books were that, first, they were under the impression that they would have to pay tax on all the amount written on the books; second, that an increase in book values might lead to an increase in their local taxation; and, third, and probably most cogent of all, was the fact that the stock was issued under a stockholders' agreement, under which no stock could be sold unless first offered to remaining stockholders, and that in the event of the death of any stockholder, the corporation had the right to purchase stock from his estate at approximately 10 per cent in excess of its then book value.

The store is advantageously located in the business center of the city, while the warehouse property is only a few blocks away. The properties clearly had a value in excess of that at which they were taken on to the books of the corporation in consolidation, and it has been abundantly established to the satisfaction of the Committee that the real estate had a value not less than 15x dollars in excess of the figure at which it was taken over.

It accordingly recommends that the claim of the corporation to an addition of 15x dollars to its invested capital as paid-in surplus be allowed.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying to the taxpayer an invested capital as of January 1, 1913, based upon an appraisal of the taxpayer's property as of January 1, 1917.

It appears that the business which is now carried on by the M Company was organized by A in the year 1880. From that time until January 1, 1913, he carried on the business as an individual and was successful in building up a large business. During all this period, it is said that A kept practically no accounts beyond a few memoranda principally for the purpose of showing his current earnings from time to time. In the fall of 1912 he decided to incorporate the business, and as he was not dependent upon credit, he thought a corporation with a capital of 5x dollars would answer his purpose. Therefore on January 1, 1913, he turned over all the assets of the business to the new corporation, including cash and cash assets totaling 2x dollars, and machinery, fixtures, plant, and equipment valued, for the purpose of giving to the capital stock a book value equal to the par value thereof, at an arbitrary figure of 3x dollars. In return he received all the capital stock of the corporation.

After its incorporation few changes were made in the method of keeping the books of the company; and when early in 1917 it was discovered by the attorneys of the company that it was practically impossible to get from such books the necessary information for the proper preparation of income tax returns and also for the purpose of determining the amount of assets for insurance purposes, a thorough and complete inventory and valuation were made and certified to by the N Appraisal Company, which showed the valuation of the plant as of the date of January 1, 1917, in the sum of 8x dollars.

Following this appraisal another firm of certified public accountants was engaged to make an examination of the books of the company from the time of its incorporation and to restate the company's accounts as of January 1, 1917, using for the valuation of the plant and equipment the figures as determined by the inventory and appraisal.

When it became necessary in the early part of 1918 to make up the excess profits tax return of the company for the year 1917, the N Appraisal Company was again engaged to value the plant, this time as of January 1, 1913, at which time the company took it over. This valuation was arrived at by deducting from the plant valuation as of January 1, 1917, the additions to equipment which had been acquired after January 1, 1913, allowing for depreciation and other adjustments to value. This computation showed a valuation of the plant as of January 1, 1913, in the sum of 7x dollars, which amount was 3x dollars more than the nominal sum at which the plant had been valued at the date of incorporation; and this is the value which the taxpayer desires to include in its excess profits tax return for the year 1917 for the purpose of determining its invested capital.

In their argument for the inclusion of this amount in the invested capital of the taxpayer, its attorneys rely upon article 63 of Regulations 41, and upon Recommendation 161 of this Committee [Sec. 326. Art. 836.—5, herein], which was based upon the regulations above referred to.

Article 63 of Regulations 41 is as follows:

Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus. The adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at that time.

Evidence tending to support a claim for a paid-in surplus under these circumstances must be as of the date of conveyance, and many consist, among other things, of (1) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities, (2) the assessed value in the case of real estate, and (3) the market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares.

This Committee's Recommendation 161 (Bulletin 28-20-1064) was concerned with a claim for paid-in surplus on account of the excess value of properties in 1911, and in that case the Committee recommended the allowance of such excess valuation as invested capital; but the facts therein were quite different from those now under consideration.

In that recommendation the Committee held that in order to establish such excess valuation, it was not necessary that the appraisal should have been made upon the exact date on which the tangible property had been conveyed to the corporation; but only that the appraisal must have been made "as of that date; that is to say, in the light only of knowledge or facts ascertainable on that date and not in the light of subsequent happenings."

The tangible property, the value of which was then under consideration, was real estate and buildings, and the Committee held that inasmuch as the evidence was of such character that these values could be ascertained from all the surrounding facts at that time with an accuracy amounting almost to a certainty, therefore, the taxpayer was entitled to include that excess value in his invested capital, since the value, clearly and substantially in excess of the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, was accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance. It must be remembered that the Bureau was here dealing with real estate and buildings and that the appraisal was made within two years of the date of valuation.

In the instant case the Bureau is asked to accept not an appraisal as of January 1, 1913, but an estimated figure resulting from a computation which was based upon an appraisal made as of January 1, 1917, or four years later; and this so-called appraisal is not merely a valuation of real estate and buildings, the value of which might be definitely ascertained even after so long a lapse of time, but of machinery and equipment, by an entirely empirical process of adjusting valuations obtained four years later; so that it can not be asserted or successfully maintained that the valuation as of January 1, 1913, was made "in the light only of knowledge or facts ascertainable on that date and not in the light of subsequent happenings."

The appraisers and the accountants were without doubt justified, for commercial purposes, in establishing the valuations and recasting the books as of January 1, 1913, by the best method at their disposal, which may have been the one employed; but the Committee does not believe that either the appraisers or the accountants would certify to the rigorous accuracy of such a valuation or of accounts established upon such a basis without qualifications which would render the valuation and accounts worthless for the purpose of computation of invested capital.

As a matter of fact, the taxpayer himself admits the unreliability of valuations so arrived at when he says in his brief that—

Using the valuation of the plant as of January 1, 1913, as shown by the appraisal, adding to that value the additions to the plant between January 1, 1913, and January 1, 1917, and deducting the depreciation charged off during the same period, the plant had a valuation on January 1, 1917, as shown by the books of the corporation, in the sum of 7x dollars, as against the appraisal value at the same date of 8x dollars; and the taxpayer says, further, that—

Inasmuch as the books of the company had been restated by the accountants on the basis of the appraisement of January 1, 1917, it was evident that the item of plant had been entered on the books at x dollars in excess of the proper figures for invested capital, and accordingly in making up the company's return this excess amount was deducted from the invested capital appearing on the company's books; but while this tends to demonstrate the good faith of the taxpayer in making its claim, it shows conclusively the unreliability of the figures obtained by any such methods.

Therefore, the Committee recommends that the claim of the taxpayer for invested capital on January 1, 1913, based upon adjustments of an appraisal made as of January 1, 1917, be denied, and that the action of the Unit in disallowing such claim be sustained.

7-21-1457; O. D. 813.

The M Company was organized subsequent to 1919. Soon thereafter it acquired all the capital stock of the N Company by issuing to the stockholders of the N Company its own stock in an amount equal to the par value of their shares of stock. The M Company thereupon by merger absorbed the N Company and became the owner of all the property of the N Company, which consisted of real estate, buildings, machinery and equipment, stock on hand, and work in process. This property had been purchased by the N Company in the same year at a bargain, as shown by an appraisal made of the property about the time it was taken over by the M Company.

Held, that the company could not include in its invested capital as paid-in surplus the excess of the value of the property over the purchase price paid therefor. Any excess resulted from a successful bargain and is not paid-in surplus. Paid-in surplus as used in section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918 does not mean the excess value of property purchased in a bona fide sale over the purchase price thereof. To constitute paid-in surplus of a corporation there must, in effect, be a gift to the corporation.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

Recommended, upon the reconsideration of the appeal in the case of the M corporation from the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that the invested capital can not be satisfactorily established and that assessment of excess profits taxes for the year 1917 should be made under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and for subsequent years under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, be reversed; that Committee on Appeals and Review Recommendation 490 sustaining the action of the Unit be revoked; that retrospective appraisals be accepted as evidence of paid-in surplus when made upon the basis herein outlined and the facts upon which the appraisals are based have been established by proof; that the retrospective appraisals and the facts upon which they are based in the instant case be verified to determine the method of their construction and the truth of the facts upon which they are based; and that in this and in all similar cases where the law directs that the value of property at a given basic date be ascertained, the Unit be instructed to receive such proof of the facts as is ordinarily accepted in important business transactions of like character and that the practice which has obtained in the Unit in refusing to receive such proof on the ground that it consisted of so-called retroactive appraisals be discontinued.

The Committee has reconsidered its Recommendation 490 (not published) in the matter of the appeal of the M corporation from the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing excess profits taxes for the year 1917 under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and for subsequent years under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

In a memorandum from the Unit transmitting this case to the Committee the following statement is made:

The corporation was organized in 1914 and took over the assets and assumed all the liabilities of two going concerns, the O corporation and the P partnership, the entire capital stock of the new corporation, 4x dollars, issued to the stockholders of the old corporation and the members of the partnership. The evidence submitted in the form of various appraisals shows that the assets acquired had a valuation far in excess of the capital stock. The corporation, however, could not submit any data showing the cost of the assets, as the records had been destroyed by water. In January, 1921, appraisals of the different classes of assets were made as of 1914 by different individuals assisted by others who were employed by the corporation in 1914. In the conference the manager of the corporation first stated the method used in determining whether the assets listed were acquired in the consolidation in 1914 was by taking an appraisal made in 1917 and eliminating therefrom all items shown by the books to have been purchased and charged to the asset accounts from 1914 to the date the appraisal was made. Later he stated that the appraisal was made by the former employees going through the department and listing the assets which from their own knowledge were acquired in the consolidation and afterwards comparing these items with the appraisal made in 1917.

In the consideration of this case it is necessary to refer to the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1917 which deals with tangible property paid in for stock. The pertinent part of section 207 (a) reads as follows:

* * * (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January 1st, 1914, the actual cash value of such property as of January 1st, 1914, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year.

Article 63, Regulations 41, interprets the foregoing provisions of the statute and reads as follows:

Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value, accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus. The adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at that time.

Evidence tending to support a claim for paid-in surplus under these circumstances must be as of the date of conveyance, and may consist, among other things, of (1) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities, (2) the assessed value in the case of real estate, and (3) the market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares.

The pertinent part of the Revenue Act of 1918 reads as follows:

* * * (2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus.

Article 836, Regulations 45, interprets the foregoing quoted provision of the statute and reads in part as follows:

Evidence offered to support a claim for a paid-in surplus must be as of the date of the payment, and may consist among other things of (a) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities made on or about the date of the transaction; (b) certification of the assessed value in the case of real estate; and (c) proof of a market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares. The additional value allowed in any case is confined to the value definitely known or accurately ascertainable at the time of the payment.

The records in the case show that for several years prior to 1914 the P partnership had conducted a repair business. In 190— a corporation known as the O corporation was incorporated, its entire capital stock being owned by the P partnership. In 1914 this corporation and the P partnership, consisting of A, B, and C, were consolidated and incorporated under the name of the M corporation, with a capital stock issue of 4x dollars. This capitalization was nominal and was not based on any valuation of either plant, as it was not deemed necessary to set an actual value on the asset because of the fact that all the corporate stock was held by the three members of the partnership. During the lifetime of A the partnership's accounting system was very lax and, as shown by a number of affidavits filed in behalf of the M corporation, all the books, balance sheets, and other accounting records of the P partnership and the O corporation were rendered useless during a storm in 1918, so that at the present time no records exist from which might be obtained a complete statement as to the cost of the assets taken over by the M corporation in the consolidation of 1914. Under these circumstances the Unit holds that the statutory invested capital of the corporation can not be satisfactorily determined, and proposes to make assessment of excess profits tax under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918. The corporation has had various appraisals and estimates made in an effort to show the value of the assets in order to establish a claim for paid-in surplus, which appraisals may be classed as follows:

(1) Two appraisals were made by engineers versed in the particular line of business in 1917.

Each of the gentlemen who fixed upon the values shown above was undoubtedly well qualified to make appraisals covering the assets of the character owned by the M corporation, but it is to be noted that while there is a net difference of but 2x dollars between the totals of the two sets of figures no one unit was given the same value except in the case of automobiles, etc., the difference in the values given the other items ranging from  $\frac{1}{10}$ x dollars in the case of office furniture to  $2\frac{1}{2}$ x dollars in the case of other property, which in a measure indicates the difficulties experienced in fixing upon definite values.

(2) Three affidavits as to the value of the property taken over by the M corporation were submitted by persons familiar with values of such property.

Each of these gentlemen stated in his affidavit that of his own knowledge and belief the plant and equipment of the P partnership in 1914 was worth 60x dollars, while the fair value in 1914 of the plant and equipment of the O corporation as estimated by one of them was 241x dollars and by the other two about 240x dollars, although no value is placed upon any individual assets.

(3) Three affidavits similar to the next above made give a value of 291x dollars.

(4) A composite appraisal made in 1921—assets being divided into classes and itemized and each class appraised by men particularly qualified for the work, showing a total value as of 1914 of 304x dollars.

This last appraisal was taken subsequent to a conference held in 1920 between representatives of the taxpayer and members of the Income Tax Unit, during which the former were advised that in order to establish a claim for paid-in surplus evidence must be furnished showing the assets taken over upon consolidation, the cash value of the assets as of that date, the cost of subsequent additions by years, the proportion of such cost, if any, which had been included in the deductions claimed on taxpayer's returns, and the assessed value of the properties. To each individual appraisal which forms a part of this composite appraisal is attached an affidavit signed by the appraiser indicating the character of the work performed and the experience had by him in the past which would serve to qualify him to place fair and just values on the particular class of assets covered by his appraisal, but the appraisals contain little or no evidence of the facts upon which they are based and as to how they acquired their information or data to make up the appraisals, or as to how the appraisals were constructed. It was stated during a conference granted representatives of the taxpayer by this Committee that no assets were included in these appraisals except such as were positively known to have been in the possession of the P partnership and the O corporation and taken over by the M corporation at the time of consolidation except an item of "Hand tools," etc., valued at 4x dollars, with reference, to which the representatives of the taxpayer volunteered the information that such item was a mere estimate. No other proof is submitted to show how it was known that nothing was included except that which was in the possession of the company in 1914.

Accompanying this appraisal are statements taken from the books showing the amounts expended in the purchase of additional assets during the years 1914–1919, the amount of depreciation charged off during each of those years, and a summary showing the adjusted values of all lands, buildings, machinery, and equipment for the years 1914–1919 based on the appraisal made as of January 1, 1914.

As shown above, the appraisals forming the first set were taken in 1917 and show values as of that year. The affidavits forming the second and third sets contain nothing except general statements to the effect that in the opinion of the affiants the assets taken over upon consolidation were worth certain amounts in 1914. Neither of these appraisals or estimates, therefore, can be said to be of such a satisfactory and convincing character as to justify the acceptance of the values therein stated for invested capital purposes in the computation of excess profits tax liability without further investigation by the Unit to ascertain whether such values were computed upon the basis outlined herein.

The representatives of the taxpayer have stated to the Committee that their whole objection to assessment under the provisions of sections 210 and 328 of the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918, respectively, is on the ground that such a method of assessment affords no stable basis from year to year for a determination of the corporation's tax liability, for which reason they desire that the corporation be classed as one having a determinable statutory invested capital rather than as one entitled to relief under the provisions of the said sections even though its tax liability be greater under the first method than under the latter.

The values as stated in the four sets of appraisals mentioned above were apparently fixed by men who were well qualified for the work, but a different value is stated in each appraisal, which indicates the difficulties experienced in carrying out such a task and the practical difficulty in establishing cost. The first appraisal being taken at 1917 values, and the affidavits comprising the second and third appraisals, so called, being nothing more than general statements, can not be accepted.

The fourth appraisal, while stated in detail, shows in some cases approximations and not actual ascertainment of values. That part of this appraisal which covers fire protection system, plumbing and piping, indicates that the great majority of the items so covered was approximated, while that part which covers certain other property indicates that the quantity of material entering into the construction of such assets has been approximated. Errors in stated figures which affect the total value shown have also been made. While many of the assets covered by this appraisal are of such character and size, such as lands, large machines, etc., as to be easily identified as having been among the assets transferred, even after a lapse of years, by those who had worked with, around, and among them, and their value as of time of transfer more or less satisfactorily established, yet it is to be noted that this appraisal covers hundreds of very minor items which, because of their lack of size, importance, and cost, ranging in stated figures from a few cents to not more than $50, lack distinctive character, and the Committee finds it hard to believe that such assets would so firmly fix themselves in the remembrance of any man or men as to permit such persons to positively identify them in 1921 as having been the identical articles which were in the hands of the P partnership and the O corporation and transferred to the M corporation in 1914, especially when it is known that many of such items were removed from a plant and reinstated and rearranged in new buildings in another community. It is also shown by an appraisal made in 1917, by competent men, and before the loss of the book records, that the value of the assets at that time was a little less than 240x dollars and there is nothing to show why the assets were worth approximately 60x dollars more in 1914 than in 1917.

It was stated in conference that since the consolidation in 1914 accurate book records have been kept from which it is possible to accurately determine just what additions to the plant had been made in order that the appraisals as of 1914 might contain nothing acquired since consolidation, and yet, in a statement filed with the Unit, the cost of such additions made during the year 1917 was stated as  $1\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars, while in a later statement such cost is stated as  $1\frac{1}{6}x$  dollars, which fact throws doubt upon the accuracy of such book records as have been kept. In the said appraisal the value of all flat lands, regardless of location or character, is stated at a certain amount per square foot, but no statements have been submitted showing the values placed thereon for local tax purposes.

In the consideration of the case the Committee has pointed out certain discrepancies in the appraisals which it is sought to have the Income Tax Unit accept as a basis for the allowance of a paid-in surplus. These discrepancies raise a doubt as to the accuracy of the figures submitted in such appraisals and of the facts upon which such appraisals are based. The appraisals in question are apparently based upon the opinions of persons qualified to testify in a matter of this kind, but it does not appear that the inventory of the assets of this corporation, as enumerated in the appraisals, has been valued upon a cost basis. It is thought possible to so value the assets in this case when the appraisals have been modified in accordance with the method hereinafter outlined and to this end the Unit should make or have made an independent appraisal for the purpose of verifying or checking the amounts and values stated in the appraisals submitted by this company before accepting same as representing sound values of the assets at the time they were paid in to the corporation in 1914.

In the past it has been the policy of the Bureau to construe strictly the requirements of article 63, Regulations 41, and article 836, Regulations 45 (1920 edition). As a result of such construction of these articles numerous retroactive or retrospective appraisals have been rejected as a basis for a claim for paid-in surplus. The Committee has made an exhaustive study of appraisals and their relation to invested capital of corporations. It has also considered appraisals in connection with establishing March 1 values for purposes of depreciation and depletion, and for purposes of establishing certain values in connection with amortization claims, and has reached the conclusion that the Unit has been too strict in interpreting the provisions of the statute and the articles of regulations interpreting same quoted above, and that retrospective appraisals, if made upon the basis hereinafter outlined and proof is furnished of the facts upon which they are based, may properly be accepted as a basis for the allowance of a paid-in surplus. The Unit, as well as the Committee, is continually fixing values for one purpose or another. This is particularly true in fixing the March 1 values for the purpose of computing gain or loss upon the sale of an asset which has been held for some time and which is of a class not regularly dealt in by the public.

In the instant case it is not only necessary to determine the actual cash value of the tangible assets at the time paid in in 1914 for the purpose of invested capital, but it is necessary to determine the fair market value of the depreciable property so paid in as at March 1, 1913, for depreciation purposes and also for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the stockholders in the O corporation and the partners in the P partnership derived any profit from the sale of these assets to the M corporation. It is understood that the stockholders and copartners did not include any profit in the computation of their net income for the year 1914.

In making a retroactive or retrospective appraisal to show the actual cash value of tangible assets at the time paid in at some date in the past, care should be exercised in order to eliminate any appreciation written upon the books of the corporation since the date of acquisition, and also to value the assets in question at cost. In the case of the La Belle Iron Works v. United States (C. B. 4, p. 373), decided by the Supreme Court on May 16, 1921, it was held that any appreciation in value of property over its cost is not to be included in invested capital as paid-in surplus. Treasury Decision 3220 (Bulletin 37-21-1822) was promulgated subsequent to this decision and requires the filing of amended returns in all cases where taxpayers have written appreciated or inflated values upon their books and have used same in determining the amount of their invested capital. It would, therefore, appear that no appreciation over cost can be recognized in the computation of invested capital and that appraisals made for the purpose of establishing invested capital and for the purpose of allowance of a paid-in surplus should be based upon the actual cost of the tangible properties as they existed at the time they were paid in, giving particular attention and consideration to the original cost and depreciated reproduction cost as at the basic date and the remaining expectancy of life. In order to accomplish this result it will be necessary to inventory at cost as of the basic date (the date of acquisition) the property then on hand and in many cases to establish by historical investigation the date of original acquisition, date of renewal, and the cost of additions made subsequent to the date the property was paid in. Adjustments should be made for property scrapped or discarded and for depreciation.

The books of account, if available, should be considered the best evidence as to dates of acquisition and actual cost. The asset account showing the tangible property may be incomplete for many reasons and may include property still on the books that has been discarded as well as property in existence that has never been capitalized or entered on the books and certain arbitrary amounts charged off as depreciation which have no relation to the expired and remaining life of the property.

The tangible property actually in existence and in use should be considered as the basic evidence of the invested capital in existence and should be used as a basis for the proper correction of the accounts to correctly reflect the actual investment in the depreciable properties in existence during the taxable years.

The burden of proof is upon the taxpayer when a claim for a paid-in surplus is made, and in so far as the records of the taxpayer may be incomplete or the regulations permit values of the property at the date paid in should be established by proof. The regulations quoted above do not prescribe any specific method for ascertaining the facts, but only indicate some of the means by which appropriate proof may be furnished which would be acceptable to the Bureau. A retrospective appraisal is in substance the opinion of experts based upon the facts presented to them and as such is admissible as evidence of a paid-in surplus, but its value as proof of a paid-in surplus must depend upon the truth of the facts upon which it is based. Necessarily, if any of the facts presented to the experts are not accurate, the experts' opinion is inaccurate to the extent that such facts are inaccurate. In order, therefore, for the Bureau to accept as conclusive a retrospective appraisal, it must be satisfied under the regulations that the facts upon which the appraisal is based are true. In determining whether or not the facts are true the Bureau should accept such proof of the facts as is ordinarily accepted in business transactions of like character. In all such inquiries the Bureau is dealing with facts which themselves come within the control of human will or human caprice, and the evidence for which depends on the trustworthiness of human informants. Such evidence may range through every degree, from the barest likelihood to that undoubted moral certainty on which every man acts without hesitation in practical affairs. The Bureau must receive and consider such appraisals, therefore, with a sound and intelligent discretion as it considers much other evidence, and be content to accept them, without being able to prove their accuracy as mathematicians judge accuracy, if they convince the mind of their correctness to that moral certainty upon which practical men of affairs act.

In view of the foregoing, it is recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that the invested capital can not be satisfactorily established and that assessment of excess profits taxes for the year 1917 should be made under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and for subsequent years under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be reversed; that Committee on Appeals and Review Recommendation 490 sustaining the action of the Unit be revoked; that retrospective appraisals be accepted as evidence of paid-in surplus when made upon the basis herein outlined and the facts upon which the appraisals are based have been established by proof; that the retrospective appraisals and the facts upon which they are based in the instant case be verified to determine the method of their construction and the truth of the facts upon which they are based; and that in this and in all similar cases where the law directs that the value of property at a given basic date be ascertained, the Unit be instructed to receive such proof of the facts as is ordinarily accepted in important business transactions of like character and that the practice which has obtained in the Unit in refusing to receive such proof on the ground that it consisted of so-called retroactive appraisals be discontinued.

Excess Profits Tax—Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

Where water power is developed and applied on the same parcel of land by virtue of riparian rights of the owner of the land, its value is an element of the value of the land and should be treated as tangible property for the purpose of determining invested capital.

Where a number of small dams at a given point are acquired by a corporation and consolidated as one dam, the proper measure of value of the property thus acquired, for the purpose of determining invested capital, is the total value of all the powers thus acquired, valued separately.

Where water power is valued at a certain amount per horsepower, the valuation in such cases should relate to horsepower actually developed at the date of valuation and not to the estimated potential power.

The question has arisen as to whether water power should be treated as tangible or intangible property for the purpose of determining invested capital under the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

A claim was filed by the M Company for the abatement of  $8x$  dollars corporation income and excess profits taxes for the calendar year 1917, and  $8\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars corporation income and excess profits taxes for the calendar year 1918. A claim was also filed by the Q Company for the abatement of  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars corporation income and excess profits taxes for the calendar year 1917. The last-named company is a subsidiary of the former, and consolidated returns for the income of both corporations were made and the tax assessed upon the two corporations on that basis. Owing to the consolidation, this case will be treated as one involving a single claimant.

It is stated in a memorandum submitted to this office that the claims are based on additional information furnished in conference and with amended returns relative to an increase in depreciation deduction, and an increase in paid-in surplus for excess value of water power rights over the par value of capital stock issued therefor. It does not appear from the memorandum submitted with respect to what property deductions for depreciation are claimed, nor the amount of these items nor the basis upon which such items were adjusted. No opinion, therefore, is given relative to the adjustment of depreciation allowance.

In connection with the water power values, it appears that in 190- claimant acquired the property of several companies and individuals, which properties were used in the operation of wing dams on the Y River, issuing in payment therefor  $18\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars par value of its stock. In 190- claimant removed all the wing dams and constructed a dam across the entire river, hereinafter referred to as the O Powers. In 191-, claimant acquired the assets and assumed the liabilities of the P Company operating the R dam and issued its stock in payment therefor. In both cases claimant owns the land adjacent to the dam where the power is developed.

Claimant submitted evidence in support of the contention that the water powers in question were of an actual value of  $105x$  dollars at the time the purchase thereof was made with the capital stock of the corporation, and in computing its invested capital, included  $85x$  dollars as paid-in surplus. In the memorandum submitted to this office it is recommended that  $44\frac{2}{3}x$  dollars be allowed as paid-in surplus, for the reason that such amount represents the excess in the actual value (as accepted in conference) of the water power rights acquired over the par value of the capital stock issued therefor.

Under section 207(a) 2, 3, of the Revenue Act of 1917, and article 63 of Regulations 41, and also under section 326(a)2, of the Revenue Act of 1918, and articles 836 and 837 of Regulations 45, the value of tangible property clearly and substantially in excess of the par value of stock issued in exchange therefor by a corporation may be treated as paid-in surplus. Article 63 Regulations 41, provides:

ART. 63. When tangible property may be included in surplus.—Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value, accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus. The adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at that time.

Evidence tending to support a claim for a paid-in surplus under these circumstances must be as of the date of conveyance, and may consist, among other things, of (1) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities, (2) the assessed value in the case of real estate, and (3) the market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares.

Article 836 of Regulations 45 provides:

ART. 836. Tangible property paid in: value in excess of par value of stock.—Evidence offered to support a claim for a paid-in surplus must be as of the date of the payments, and may consist among other things of (a) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities made on or about the date of the transaction; (b) certification of the assessed value in the case of real estate; and (c) proof of a market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares. The additional value allowed in any case is confined to the value definitely known or accurately ascertainable at the time of the payment. No claim will be allowed for a paid-in surplus in a case in which the additional value has been developed or ascertained subsequently to the date on which the property was paid in to the corporation, or in respect of property which the stockholders or their agents on or shortly before the date of such payment acquired at a bargain price, as for instance, at a receiver's sale. Generally, allowable claims under this article will arise out of transactions in which there has been no substantial change of beneficial interest in the property paid in to the corporation, and in all cases the proof of value must be clear and explicit.

The questions arise in this case as to whether the items of water power involved are to be treated as tangible property, and if held to be tangible property, whether it has been established that they had a value at the time they were acquired clearly and substantially in excess of the par value of the stock issued in exchange therefor.

Section 325 of the Revenue Act of 1918 defines intangible property as "patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulae, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like property" and tangible property as "stocks, bonds, notes, and other evidence of indebtedness, bills and accounts receivable, leaseholds and other property other than intangible property."

There are two distinct and entirely different things which may be referred to as a water power. First, there is the natural condition consisting of a fall or rapid in a stream and which may be regarded as latent until some means are created to utilize it; second, when water has been accumulated in a dam so that the potential power has become a reality and is in condition so that it can be parceled out for use, this is also referred to as water power, and is the kind of a water power involved in the instant case. In either case, however, the power belongs to the riparian owner by virtue of his ownership of the riparian land.

Under the common law, every riparian proprietor is entitled to the natural flow of any stream through or along his land in the accustomed channels, undiminished in quantity and unimpaired in quality, except as may be occasioned by the reasonable use of the stream by other like proprietors. (Farnham on Waters, Vol. I, p. 63; 27 E. C. F. Waters, p. 11; Crawford Co. v. Nathaway, 67 Nebr., 325; 93 N. W., 781; Sanborn v. Peoples Ice Co., 82 Minn., 43; 84 N. W., 641.) In some States this rule is not followed, and there is what is called the doctrine of prior application, and then again in other States there is a mixed application of the two doctrines. The doctrine of prior application prevails generally in the Pacific States. According to this doctrine, the person who first appropriates the waters of a stream for a beneficial use has the first right thereto, whether he be a riparian owner or not.

In the State of Wisconsin the common-law rule is in force. (Lawson v. Mowry, 52 Wis., 219; 9 N. W., 230; A. C. Cann Co. v. Lumber Co., 74 Wis., 652; 43 N. W., 660; Kaukeums Power Co. v. Green Bay Co., 75 Wis., 385; 44 N. W., 638; Fox River Co. v. Kelly, 70 Wis., 387; 35 N. W., 744.) In the case of State v. Bancroft (148 Wis., 124), the court in speaking of the right of a riparian proprietor referred to it as "unquestionably a private right appurtenant to the land." Riparian rights are generally referred to as incorporeal hereditaments, appurtenant to the land through which the water flows, which will pass with a conveyance of the land without any designation. (27 R. C. L., 1340.) Farnham on Waters (vol. 2, p. 1567) states:

While the water right is incorporeal, it is not personal property, but is a parcel of the estate and therefore partakes of the nature of real estate and in so far a part of the estate to which it is attached that it is an incident of, and will pass with it.

Riparian rights are reflected in the value of the land to which they attach and often give the land its chief value. These rights are property rights and can not be taken from the owners without just compensation. State v. Bancroft, supra. The property of the owner consists not in the water itself but in the added value which the stream gives to the land through which it flows. While water power itself is simply energy generated by flowing water, we are here dealing with the ownership of that energy, which involves the ownership of tangible property inseparably connected therewith.

In valuing the land and physical property thereon necessary for power generation, no line can be drawn between the value of the land and physical property on the one hand and the water power on the other. It can be not said in placing a value upon an entire dam that the water rights are reflected in the value of the land only to a certain point and that any value of the dam in excess thereof must be valued separately as power. The combination of the water rights, the land, machinery, and equipment combined together make up the power which may be valued at so much per horsepower and the water power can only be valued as a separate item to the extent that it enhances the value of the land and the other physical property necessary for power generation.

Where, as in this case, a person owns the land upon which a dam is built and owns the water power developed by virtue of his riparian rights in the land, it is the opinion of this office that such power is so connected with the land to which it is appurtenant that it should be treated as tangible property to determine invested capital.

Having determined that water power should be treated as tangible property, we come to the question of whether or not it has been established in this case that the water powers in question had a value at the time of their acquisition in excess of the par value of the capital stock issued therefor,

This value in the case of the O Power must be as of 190-, and the P Power as of 191-, as those are the dates the respective properties were acquired. (Art. 63, Regulations 41, and art. 836, Regulations 45.) The computation in the memorandum is based on an estimated power at the O dam of  $3\frac{3}{4}x$  horsepower and at the R dam of  $2x$  horsepower, and while there is evidence upon which to base the findings of value as agreed upon in conference of  $r$  dollars per horsepower, the record does not disclose that this amount of power was ever developed at either of these dams at the date of their acquisition. The O Power was created through the consolidation of several small companies, each developing power by means of wing dams. The record does not disclose how much power each of these companies was developing or could develop. Claimant, after acquiring the properties of the companies operating the small wing dams, in 190- constructed a dam across the river and the estimates of power developed seem to relate to the power capable of being developed after the construction of such dam, as none of the companies could develop more than an  $s$ -foot head, while if combined, a head of  $4s$  feet could be developed.

The increase in power which could be developed by a consolidation of all the powers at this point was not a reality until after the acquisition of the property necessary to construct the entire dam. There was no doubt an appreciation in the value of the property purchased by claimant which could be measured by the increased power capable of development, but the appreciation arose by reason of the combination of several powers which necessarily could not take place until after their acquisition. The proper valuation, therefore, to be given to the O Power for the purpose of determining the invested capital is the total value of all of the powers acquired valued separately.

In the case of the R Power acquired in 191- it appears that it was necessary to expend the sum of  $11\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars additional after the purchase for the purpose of acquiring riparian rights, and since the acquisition of the property the claimant has obtained the permission of the water power commission to hold the water at  $3s$  feet, instead of  $2s$  feet, the limit of the franchise which had heretofore existed at the place. The allowance of invested capital in this case was based on  $2z$  horsepower, but it does not appear in the record that the 2x horsepower was developed at the R dam at the date of its acquisition and prior to the time the above changes were made. If a water power is to be valued by the number of horsepower developed, it must relate to the horsepower developed at the date of the valuation and not to the estimated potential power which may be developed at some future time under changed conditions. Article 836, Regulations 45, above quoted, provides that no claim will be allowed for a paid-in surplus in a case in which the additional value has been developed or ascertained subsequently to the date on which the property was paid in to the corporation. It is the opinion of this office that this provision has application to valuation of a water power, and that in valuing a power at a certain sum per horsepower, it should relate only to the actual power developed at the time of the acquisition of the property. Any other method would be too speculative and uncertain to meet the requirements of the law that the value must be established "clearly and substantially" in excess of the capital stock issued in exchange therefor. The record does not show that the amount of horsepower claimed by taxpayer, or as allowed in conference, was developed at the dams on the dates of their acquisition, and it is the opinion of this office that it has not been established by claimant that the power in question had any value in excess of the value of the capital stock issued in exchange therefor.

Revenue Act of 1918.

The M corporation acquired from a partnership a lease to certain property at a cost of 100x dollars, which amount represented the cost of the lease to the partnership, and paid for the lease in stock, so that the members of the partnership thereby became minority stockholders of the corporation. An appraisal was made, immediately after incorporation, of the value of the lease, which showed it to be worth in excess of 300x dollars, and thereupon the corporation made a book entry increasing its paid-in surplus by 200x dollars, representing the excess value of the lease over its cost price.

It is held, that the amount of 200x dollars added to the book value of the lease does not constitute paid-in surplus, and that the transaction should be considered as a purchase and sale between a vendee corporation and a vendor partnership which resulted in a substantial change of beneficial interest. The fact that the corporation may have acquired a bargain by the purchase of the lease does not authorize it to increase its surplus by reason of the alleged excess value of the lease over the amount which was paid for it.

I ('22)—18-258: A. R. R. 761

Revenue Act of 1918.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax unit in disallowing the claim for additional invested capital in the amount of 1,291 $\times$  dollars for the year 1919 be sustained and the appeal denied.

The Committee has carefully considered the appeal of the M Company, of L, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing a claim for additional invested capital for the year 1919 in the amount of 1,291 $\times$  dollars.

In 190— there was organized under the laws of the State of Z, the O Company for the purpose of manufacturing machines. In 190— the O Company reorganized under the laws of the same State as the R Company, with an authorized capital stock of 8,000 $\times$  dollars. The following year the N Company was organized under the laws of the State of L, with an authorized capitalization of 6,000 $\times$  dollars, and with practically the same stockholders, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling, within the United States and dependencies and Canada, machines under the patents held by the R Company. Working capital for the N Company was secured by the sale of preferred stock to the stockholders of the R Company. These two affiliated corporations continued business until October, 1913, when the N Company, being in financial difficulties, its affairs were turned over to a bondholders' committee. At the same time the R Company was dissolved and its properties were taken over by its directors as trustees (in dissolution).

In October, 1913, the aggregate outstanding capital stock of the two corporations was 9,449 $\times$  dollars and their net assets were 980 $\times$  dollars, divided as follows: Tangibles, 542 $\times$  dollars; intangibles, 438 $\times$  dollars. In June, 1914, a new corporation, known as the M Company, was incorporated under the laws of the State of L with an authorized capital stock of 1,500 $\times$  dollars, divided as follows: 2y shares of common stock of the par value of \$100 each and y shares of deferred stock of a like par value. The assets of the R Company were sold by the trustees (in dissolution) on March —, 1914, through A, as agent, to B at public sale. On October —, 1913, D, upon application of the bondholders' committee, was appointed receiver for the N Company of L, by the District Court, and in accordance with an order of that court he, as receiver, sold on April —, 1914, all the assets of the N Company to E and on the — day of April did assign, transfer, and set over to the said E all right, title, and interest in and to the assets and property of the said N Company. B and E, upon the organization of the M Company, assigned all the assets of the R Company and the N Company, purchased by them as above stated, to the new company for capital stock of the new company in the amount of 980 $\times$  dollars.

It is alleged by the M Company that the actual cash investments in the R Company and the N Company aggregated 2,271 $\times$  dollars, and it is contended that the excess of this amount over the amount of stock issued for the assets of the two companies, to wit, 1,291 $\times$  dollars, should be included in invested capital as paid-in surplus for the year 1919.

Section 326(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, provides:

That as used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means (except as provided in subdivisions (b) and (c) of this section):

- (1) Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares;
- (2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus; * * *

(4) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares prior to March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 25 per centum of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding on March 3, 1917, whichever is lowest. * * *

From the above statement of facts, it appears that the intangible assets of the R Company and the N Company were paid in for stock prior to March 3, 1917. The invested capital of the M Company, therefore, for the year 1919 must consist of the actual cash value of the tangible property paid in for stock or shares at the time of such payment (sec. 326(a)2) plus an amount of intangibles fixed by the limitations prescribed by section 326(a)4. The statute provides for a paid-in surplus only in connection with tangible property paid in (sec. 326(a)2) and by its terms (sec. 326(a)4) expressly excludes from invested capital any amount in excess of the par value of the stock or shares issued for intangibles. This has been the uniform holding of the Bureau. As the total value of the tangible assets paid in for stock or shares was less than the par value of the stock or shares issued, it is clear that a claim for paid-in surplus based upon the original cost of the assets to the original companies can not be allowed.

The taxpayer contends that the beneficial ownership in the new company and the former companies is substantially the same, and that, therefore, the new company is but a continuation of the former companies and entitled to the same invested capital. The soundness of this contention can not be conceded. The present company was organized as a new company under its own charter and is not a continuation of the N Company, which remained in existence. Neither did it acquire the assets of the N Company through succession to that company but by purchase at a receiver's sale authorized by the United States District Court. There is still less ground for contending that the present company is in any way a continuation of the R Company. The present company is organized under the laws of a different State and acquired the assets of the first-named company through purchase at a sale by the trustees (in dissolution) and its title is in no sense a continuation of the title of the former company. The identity of the stockholders does not destroy the separate entity of the corporations nor constitute one a successor of the others. As stated in the case of Pittsburgh and Buffalo Company v. Duncan (232 Fed., 584, 587):

The mere fact that the stockholders in two corporations are the same, * * * does not make either the agent of the other, nor does it merge them into one, * * * where each corporation is separately organized under a distinct charter.

This is but a statement of the principle which has been consistently recognized by the Federal courts. See Peterson v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad (205 U. S., 364); Conley v. Mathieson Alkali Works (190 U. S., 406, 409); Pullman Car Company v. Missouri Pacific Co. (115 U. S., 587, 597). And it is the position taken by the Bureau. Law Opinion 1062 (C. B. 4, p. 168).

The cases of Southern Pacific Company v. Lowe (247 U. S., 330) and Gulf Oil Corporation v. Lewellyn (248 U. S., 71), referred to by counsel for the taxpayer as involving a departure from this principle are, as pointed out by the Supreme Court, based upon their peculiar facts and are believed to be readily distinguishable from the instant case. As stated in Eisner v. Macomber (252 U. S., 189, 213, 214):

* * * looking through the form, we can not disregard the essential truth disclosed;

ignore the substantial difference between corporation and stockholder; treat the entire organization as unreal; look upon stockholders as partners, when they are not such; treat them as having in equity a right to a partition of the corporate assets, when they have none. * * * We must treat the corporation as a substantial entity separate from the stockholder, * * *

Upon full consideration the Committee accordingly recommends, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing the claim for additional invested capital in the amount of 1,291x dollars for the year 1919 be sustained and the appeal denied.

I ('22)—27-386: A. R. R. 944

Section 207, Revenue Act of 1917, Section 326, Revenue Act of 1918.
Section 203, Revenue Act of 1918.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in excluding from invested capital for 1917 and subsequent years approximately 300x dollars as paid-in surplus and in increasing income for 1918 by 2x dollars representing an adjustment of inventory at December 31, 1918, be sustained and the appeal be denied.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in excluding from invested capital for 1917 and subsequent years approximately 300x dollars claimed as paid-in surplus and in increasing income for 1918 by 2x dollars representing an adjustment of inventory as at December 31, 1918.

The M Company was organized in 190— and acquired the assets and business of the N Company under the circumstances briefly stated as follows:

The business conducted by the N Company had been in existence for a great many years and the stock of the company was widely scattered, being held mostly by small stockholders and trustees. Of the stockholders at date of organization, 76 per cent owned less than five shares each or were fiduciaries. The management of the affairs of the corporation seems to have been centered in the A and B interests, which actually owned a small minority of the stock.

Prior to 190— it appears that the business of the N Company had been steadily unprofitable. Accordingly, the stockholders at an adjourned special meeting held in 190—:

Voted, that the directors shall have authority to liquidate the company and to sell any or all of its plant and property, except its corporate franchise, at public or private sale from time to time in such manner, upon such terms, and for such considerations as shall seem to them to be for the best interests of the stockholders.

The A interest through C, an attorney and also son-in-law of A, in whose hands, as stated above, the management of the company seems to have been centered, immediately instituted a scheme of reorganization. Under date of January, 190—, the directors, under authority of the action of the stockholders above quoted, gave to C an option to purchase for 60x dollars cash, within 30 days, all of the assets of the company excepting the merchandise inventory on hand or in process. In order to raise the money necessary to exercise this option, C set about securing subscriptions to stock in a new company which he proposed to organize for the purpose of acquiring the assets and operating the business of the old company. Under date of February —, 190—, these subscribers entered into a so-called "underwriting agreement," wherein they pledged to pay into the new company, or to C for the company, the sum set opposite their respective names. The total amount pledged was 100x dollars, of which only 31x dollars represented subscriptions by stockholders in the old company. Several pertinent clauses of this agreement are here quoted:

Said C shall endeavor to acquire the plant and assets of said N Company at a price not exceeding 60x dollars for everything except the franchise of the company and except stock, raw, wrought, and in process, and articles of supply and repairs on hand; and he shall use subscriptions received hereunder for the purposes of such acquisition.

Should he so acquire the property, he is to cause a new corporation to be organized under the laws of Y, with a capital stock not to exceed 120x dollars (one class), and transfer all the said property and the cash capital herein provided for to such new company, taking such capital stock in payment.

The subscribers hereto shall be entitled to shares of the new company of a par value equal to the amounts of their respective subscriptions, or the proceeds thereof at par as herein provided.

All the stock so received by said C shall, however, be first offered by him, in such reasonable manner as he may determine (and with or without assignable rights), to the existing shareholders of said N Company for subscription at par within such time as he may limit.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the N Company held in February, 190-, the treasurer was authorized and empowered "to seal with the corporate seal, acknowledge and deliver at the present time or any future time in the name and on behalf of the corporation a deed or deeds and an assignment or assignments of" all of the assets of the company except those specifically named "to the M Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of Y." Pursuant to the stipulation in the "underwriting agreement," a part of which is quoted above, C, under date of February, 190-, sent a circular letter to each stockholder in the N Company, notifying him or her that he (C) had purchased all of the assets of the corporation and had caused the same to be conveyed to a new corporation known as the M Company; that the capital stock of the new company was 120x dollars (par value of each share $100); that each stockholder in the N Company was offered the unassignable right to purchase for cash at par stock in the new company in the proportion of five shares in the new company for each share in the old company, and that such offer must be accepted and the cash remitted before March, 190-, failing in which it would be conclusively presumed that the offer was declined. A few of the stockholders in the old company availed themselves of the opportunity thus afforded and purchased stock in the new company. After subscriptions were all in it is shown that the stock was taken as follows:

	Per cent.
By stockholders in the N Company.....	42½
By outsiders.....	57½

The new company thus had paid-in capital stock of 120x dollars represented by:

	Dollars.
Plant.....	60x
Cash working capital.....	58x
Organization expenses.....	2x

(C was paid 2x dollars for his services.)

The old company was then liquidated, the stockholders receiving in liquidation about 5 cents on the dollar invested.

A few months after the acquisition of the assets here in question the appellant (the new company) had an appraisal made for insurance purposes. This appraisal, a copy of which is in the file, shows a total asset value of approximately 440x dollars, and the company claims that after providing for proper depreciation, these assets had an actual cash value at date of acquisition of 365x dollars, and that inasmuch as only 60x dollars in stock was issued therefor, it is entitled to include in invested capital the excess value, or 305x dollars, as paid-in surplus.

The Committee has given very careful consideration to the elaborate arguments, oral and written, advanced by the appellant's representatives in connection with the provisions of the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918, and finds itself utterly unable to agree with their claim that a substantial compliance with the necessary conditions for allowing paid-in surplus has been effected. Both section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918 provide that invested capital means the actual cash paid in for stock or shares and (or) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in for stock or shares. In the opinion of the Committee, the facts in this case show conclusively that the M Company was organized with 120x dollars cash paid in, 57½ per cent of which was supplied by outside interests, and that 60x dollars of this cash was paid to the N Company for the assets of the latter. It is further shown that only approximately 20 per cent of the stockholders in the N Company became stockholders in the M Company. It seems fallacious, therefore, to argue that the assets of the N Company were paid in to the M Company for stock of the latter when 80 per cent of the stockholders of the former received none of this stock. For the same reason the argument that the N Company or the stockholders thereof contributed to the M Company value which was not paid for appears to be equally untenable. All of this only emphasizes the soundness of the provisions of article 836, Regulations 45, which lays down the rule that:

Generally, allowable claims under this article will arise out of transactions in which there has been no substantial change of beneficial interest in the property paid in to the corporation and in all cases the proof of value must be clear and explicit.

The Committee is therefore forced to the conclusion that the action of the Unit in rejecting this claim for paid-in surplus was correct and should be sustained.

The facts relative to the second point before the Committee on appeal are briefly as follows:

During 1918, due to war conditions, the company was obliged to take deliveries as they could be obtained. Storage facilities near the plant being inadequate, it was necessary to store some material outside the premises and about a quarter of a mile from the plant. In taking the inventory at December 31, 1918, the company deducted therefrom the amount of 2x dollars as the estimated expense of hauling this material from the place where it was stored to the regular storage space within the premises. The corporation states that it uses the cost or market, whichever is lower, basis for its inventories and contends that upon this basis it was correct to inventory the material stored outside the mill premises at cost, less the estimated expense of hauling it from the ground where it was stored to the regular storage space at the plant.

The Committee feels that this contention is entirely without merit and fails to meet the two essential tests to which inventories must conform as laid down in article 1582, Regulations 45, as amended by Treasury Decision 3296.

It is therefore recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in excluding from invested capital for 1917 and subsequent years approximately 300x dollars as paid-in surplus and in increasing income for 1918 by 2x dollars, representing an adjustment of inventory at December 31, 1918, be sustained and the appeal be denied.

I ('22)-51-650: A R. R. 1276.

Act October 3, 1917, Section 207. Act February 24, 1919, Section 326.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in reducing the appellant's invested capital as of July —, 1914, to 63.29x dollars be reversed and that the appraisal as of that date, now filed, subject to check as to individual items, be made the basis of the computation of invested capital.

The Committee has carefully considered the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in reducing its invested capital as of July —, 1914, from 158.35x dollars to 63.29x dollars.

The N Company, which had operated as a domestic corporation for a number of years, was declared bankrupt in 1913 and was in the hands of receivers in bankruptcy until July —, 1914. A creditors' committee was appointed and a proposed plan of organization adopted under date of September —, 1913. The plan of reorganization provided:

The new corporation shall issue such amount of first preferred stock as shall be necessary for the distribution to creditors as hereinafter provided.

The new corporation shall also issue approximately 20x dollars par value of common stock or such other amount as the committee may deem proper.

In order to raise additional working capital the committee may offer to preferred stockholders of the N Company a right to acquire, for each two shares of the preferred stock of the N Company now held by them, one share of first preferred stock and one share of 6 per cent second preferred stock (of the par value of $—) of the new corporation upon payment of an amount equal to the par value of the new first preferred stock so acquired. In such case the new corporation shall issue such additional amount of first preferred stock and such amount of second preferred stock as may be required for the above purposes. Such second preferred stock, if issued, shall not entitle the holders to voting rights in any event for five years, and thereafter only if dividends then accruing remain unpaid.

The reorganization plan further provided that each creditor who entered into it should receive an amount of first preferred stock equal in par value to the amount of his claim at the date of bankruptcy with interest at the rate of 6 per cent from said date to the date when dividends began to accrue on such preferred stock.

As to the common stock, the reorganization plan provided:

The committee shall itself hold the common stock of the new corporation, or cause the same to be held by such persons as it may deem proper under a voting-trust agreement, such voting-trust agreement to be continued for a period of not more than 10 years, or for such shorter period as they may deem proper. Such voting trust agreement may provide that the committee holding such stock may agree with A (subject to such other conditions and limitations as the committee may deem proper for the protection or benefit of first preferred stockholders or as such agreement may provide) that if the new corporation shall redeem all of said first preferred stock at par with all accumulated dividends within five years of the date as of which the same is issued, said common stock shall be delivered to him as his own property. If no such agreement is made, or if the common stock is not so disposed of, the committee holding the same shall within 10 years dispose of or use the same for the benefit of the first preferred stockholders, or for the protection or benefit of the new corporation in such manner as in the committee's sole discretion it may deem proper or as said voting-trust agreement shall otherwise provide.

Pursuant to the last quoted provision, voting trustees were appointed by the creditors' committee and an agreement was entered into between the voting trustees and the M Company, in which it was recited:

Whereas in pursuance of said plan, a new corporation has been formed called the M Company, which, in accordance with the direction of the committee, has issued all its capital stock (except w shares of common stock subscribed for in cash) for the purpose of acquiring substantially all the property (except $—) of said N Company, bankrupt, or of the trustees in bankruptcy thereof; and

Whereas nearly all the preferred stock of said M Company, has been or is to be transferred to the parties to said agreement of reorganization in proportion to their claims against said bankrupt, as provided in said agreement, any balance of the total authorized preferred stock of the company not so transferred to be held as treasury stock or otherwise for the benefit of the corporation; and

Whereas all of the common stock of said M Company, namely 50w shares of the par value of $—— each, is now held by B for the benefit of said committee and the persons whom they represent;

And in which it was agreed among other things that:

At any time before July —, 1919, the trustees may, in their absolute discretion, by an affirmative vote of or writing signed by four of their number, make an agreement with A (former proprietor of the N Company) that if the M Company, a State of U corporation, shall, before July —, 1919, redeem all of its outstanding preferred stock at par with all accumulated and unpaid dividends thereon, and if such other conditions and limitations as the trustees may insert in said agreement for the protection or benefit of said preferred stockholders shall be fulfilled, then, upon the fulfillment of all the conditions and limitations above referred to, the trustees will convey all the shares held in trust hereunder to said A upon his written request. Said agreement shall not extend in any manner beyond July —, 1919, and if not then performed shall immediately expire.

The agreement with A thus authorized appears to have been made.

Pursuant to the plan of reorganization, the assets of the N Company were on July —, 1914, taken over by the M Company, which assumed all the former corporation's liabilities and issued preferred stock for the amount of their claims proven in bankruptcy, aggregating in all 146.84x dollars par value of preferred stock and 1.51x dollars of preferred scrip, in all 148.35x dollars, and 10x dollars of common stock was issued to the voting trustees in pursuance to the agreement above stated.

From the statement of facts filed in support of the appeal it appears that:

Just prior to the reorganization, the books of the N Company showed total assets of 263.3x dollars and total liabilities, excluding capital stock, of 218.7x dollars. When the new corporation's books were set up, the plant was taken at a nominal valuation. Real estate carried on the former books at 79.58x dollars was set up on the new books at 35.6x dollars; machinery and equipment carried on the old books at 94x dollars was set up on the new books at 14x dollars; an inventory of finished goods carried on the old books at 11.1x dollars was set up on the new books at 5.55x dollars, one-half the former book value. The plant account was thus marked down 123.99x dollars and the inventory 5.55x dollars, making a total reduction of assets of 129.55x dollars. The preferred stock took the place of nearly all of the accounts and notes payable of the old corporation and the new corporation began business with a book deficit of 95x dollars, created by the process of writing down assets as before mentioned.

In its returns for 1917, the appellant increased the items of machinery and real estate taken over from 14x dollars to 60x dollars and from 35.6x dollars to 40x dollars, respectively. The increased values thus claimed were disallowed by the Income Tax Unit, only the amount of 49.6x dollars set up on the opening account of the new corporation being allowed on account of these items.

There has now been filed a complete appraisal of the assets of the appellant company made on January —, 1920, as of July —, 1914. This appraisal shows the cost as of July —, 1914, and accrued depreciation as of the same date as follows:

Assets.	Cost July —, 1914.	Accrued depreciation July —, 1914.
	Dollars.	Dollars.
Land.....	10. 24x	.....
Buildings.....	63. 26x	10. 5x
Machinery and equipment.....	88. 01x	15. 38x
Total.....	161. 51x	25. 88x

Sound value July —, 1914, 135.63x dollars.

The affidavit on behalf of the appraisal company states as to the method of making the appraisal:

The object of making this inventory was to determine the actual cash value of the physical property as of July —, 1914. A complete inventory of all items of plant and equipment on hand and in active use at January —, 1920, was taken. The date of installation of all items added since July —, 1914, has been determined from the records of the company, careful analysis of plant and expense accounts having been made by accountants. These items were further checked by information obtained from employees in the plant and the remaining items are, therefore, considered to be the items which must necessarily have been in place on July —, 1914. The prices applied to the items acquired from July —, 1914, to January —, 1920, have been actual cost prices taken from the records of the company by the accountants who worked in conjunction with the engineers.

It was then necessary to determine the value of the remaining items of equipment in the inventory as of July —, 1914.

The first step was to determine the reproduction cost of these items as of July —, 1914. This was done by using the records of the previous corporation and the records of the O Company. Preference was given to records of the previous corporation when these were available, with the exception of the buildings of the plant which were acquired at a bankrupt sale. Records of the O Company are made up almost wholly of actual sales to numerous corporations and are not based on quotations or prices given "for appraisal purposes" and are, therefore, we believe, the best evidence of the market price. Every effort has been made to have the prices applied conservative.

The reproduction cost having been determined, the next step was to determine the depreciated value and this was arrived at as follows: Competent engineers made careful examinations of each item of equipment to determine its actual condition and the accrued depreciation as of January —, 1920, was thus determined. Yearly depreciation rates were then determined and the entire plant worked back to January —, 1914, all as shown by accompanying schedules.

In explanation of the method adopted, the appraiser has sworn:

I have investigated the accounts of the predecessor corporation of the M Company and in my opinion it is impossible to correctly determine the plant value as of July —, 1914, from their books of account.

The method of accounting then in use does not show, and it is impossible to determine from the books, the expenditures made for rebuilding, renewals, replacements, and extraordinary repairs. Plant items also were charged to expense in some cases, and no consistent method of depreciating the property was ever used.

It is now contended by the appellant that the value of the buildings and machinery and equipment as of July —, 1914, as shown by the appraisal, should be employed in computing the invested capital and that in addition there should be included the par value of the 10x dollars common stock, for the reason that it represented the value to the company of the five-year agreement with A which was reasonably worth the par value of the stock.

Transmitting the appeal the Unit states:

The Unit has taken the stand that the values established by the corporation and set up on its book should be used in the absence of more definite proof of the value of the property involved. The values shown on the books can not be analyzed and it is a well recognized fact that the assets of bankrupt concerns are very often inflated.

With this in mind, we find that the officers of the new corporation revalued the assets and wrote them down to such an extent that a capital impairment of over 60 per cent resulted. The Unit contends that the officers of the corporation would not reduce the book values of its assets to a figure below the actual worth of the assets, if by so doing a substantial capital impairment was shown, unless the original values of the assets were inflated.

The Committee has carefully examined the appraisal submitted in this case and finds that it has been prepared in the manner stated by the appraisers, that the rates of depreciation used were liberal, and that it complies with the requirements of T. D. 3367 (Internal Revenue Bulletin I-30, p. 17) [¶1288 herein].

It is, therefore, believed that the appraisal constitutes sufficiently definite proof of the value of the property involved as of the date paid in for the purpose of computing invested capital, subject, of course, to check by the Unit as to the particular items and rates of depreciation.

The contention of the appellant, however, that the par value of the 10x dollars of common stock should be added in computing invested capital does not appear to be well taken. As shown by the above recitation of facts, all the capital stock, including the common stock with the exception of w shares which were issued for cash, was issued for the assets of the N Company and not in consideration of services rendered or to be rendered by A. It is expressly provided in the contract entered into between the creditors' committee and A that the common stock was to be turned over to him only upon the redemption of the preferred stock within a period of five years and not otherwise. In other words, it was to be used to pay him a bonus for retiring the preferred stock within the period stated. Until the stock was actually retired, no title whatever vested in A, and the only thing back of it was the assets of the N Company, the value of which as of July —, 1914, for the purpose of invested capital has already been allowed in full in this recommendation.

It is, therefore, recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in reducing the appellant's invested capital as of July —, 1914, to 63.29 $\times$  dollars be reversed and that the appraisal as of that date, now filed, subject to check as to individual items, be made the basis of the computation of invested capital.

II('23)-2-724: A. R. M. 192.

Act February 24, 1919, Section 326(a) (2) and (3).

In the matter of the allowance of a paid-in surplus under the provisions of section 326(a) (2) and (3).

The Committee has carefully considered the request of the Income Tax Unit for an opinion whether the "bargain price" clause of article 836 of Regulations 45 (1920 edition) applies with equal force in each of the four following cases where the property is acquired at a receiver's sale:

(a) When the purchasers are creditors who are in no wise connected with either the old or new corporation except as creditors of the old as in T. B. M. 49 (C. B. 1, p. 282 [Sec. 326. Art. 831.—3, herein.]).

(b) When the purchasers are creditors who are also stockholders in both corporations.

(c) When the purchasers are the stockholders (not creditors) of both the old and new corporations.

(d) When the purchasers are composed of both creditors and stockholders of the old and new corporation.

It is stated that the request is made for the reason that differences of opinion have arisen as to the proper interpretation of T. B. R. 32 (C. B. 1, p. 286 [Sec. 326, Art. 831.—1, herein]) and T. B. M. 49, particularly as to the inferences to be drawn from the language of paragraphs 4 and 5 of T. B. M. 49.

The paragraphs of T. B. M. 49 referred to read:

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the  $\times$  dollars actually paid in to the Z Company in return for their stock should be considered the total invested capital of the new corporation or whether the view should be taken that the new business is substantially a reorganization of the old, and, therefore, the invested capital be fixed upon that basis.

It would appear that the first of these views is correct. The Y Company went into the hands of a receiver and its property was sold to its creditors who were not the stockholders of the corporation. The title to this property passed absolutely to the purchasers who were in no wise connected with the old corporation except as creditors. The transaction was closed and completed so far as the old corporation and its stockholders were concerned.

The difficulties of the Unit appear to have arisen from the statement of the Advisory Tax Board that—

The Y Company went into the hands of a receiver and its property was sold to its creditors who were not the stockholders of the corporation. The title to this property passed absolutely to the purchasers who were in no wise connected with the old corporation except as creditors.

It is to be noted that two questions were presented to the Advisory Tax Board in the case there considered. First, whether what was done constituted a reorganization; second, whether the new corporation was entitled to a paid-in surplus on account of the assets taken over from the old corporation. The expressions in italic appear to the Committee to have been used as bearing directly only upon the first question, to wit, whether the transaction constituted a reorganization of the old corporation or the creation of a new corporation, a question which only becomes material where the transaction occurred subsequent to March 3, 1917.

Section 326 of the Act of February 24, 1919, provides:

(a) That as used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means

(2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus:

(3) Paid-in surplus

Construing the above provisions of the Act, article 836 of Regulations 45 (1920 edition), as amended by T. D. 3367 (Internal Revenue Bulletin I-30, p. 17), after prescribing the evidence acceptable to establish a paid-in surplus, provides:

No claim will be allowed for paid-in surplus in respect of property which the stockholders or their agents on or shortly before the date of such payment acquired at a bargain price, as for instance, at a receiver's sale. Generally, allowable claims under this article will arise out of transactions in which there has been no substantial change of beneficial interest in the property paid in to the corporation, and in all cases the proof of value must be clear and explicit.

Article 837 of Regulations 45 (1920 edition) provides that—

Where it is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner that tangible property has been paid in by a stockholder to a corporation as a gift or at a value definitely known or accurately ascertainable as of the date of such payment clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or other consideration paid by the corporation therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid-in surplus.

The question of paid-in surplus arises in connection with (1) tangible property paid in for stock and (2) tangible property paid in by a stockholder or stockholders by way of gift or for a consideration substantially less than its value. The considerations governing the determination of the question of paid-in surplus in the two cases are not substantially different.

In the case considered in T. B. R. 32 the bondholders of the corporation obtained a judgment against the debtor corporation in the amount of 43.56x dollars, which was presumably the amount of the principal and interest due upon the bonds. The property of the corporation was thereupon sold and bid in by the bondholders for 27x dollars. After the property was bid in by the bondholders a new corporation was formed with an authorized stock issue of 20x dollars and the property was exchanged by the bondholders for the total issue of stock in the new corporation and the Advisory Tax Board after quoting the provisions of article 836, Regulations 45 (original edition), that—

No claim will be allowed for a paid-in surplus in * * * respect of property which the stockholders or their agents on or shortly before the date of such payment acquired at a bargain price, as for instance, at a receiver's sale—stated:

It does not appear that this article is relevant. The stockholders did not acquire the property at a bargain price. The cost of the property to them was an amount which they paid for their bonds in the first instance. The bid price at which title to the property was secured was evidently nominal and did not determine the investment of the new owners in the property.

And based its conclusion that the corporation should be allowed to set up an invested capital equal to the value of the property transferred to the corporation at the date of transfer upon the ground that there had been no change of beneficial interest in the stockholders.

The case considered in T. B. M. 49 was again considered in A. R. R. 857 (not published). The facts in the case are thus briefly stated in T. B. N. 49:

It appears that the Y Company went into the hands of a receiver on November —, 1911, the plant being worth, on the basis of cost less depreciation, approximately 8x dollars. The creditors bought the business at a bankruptcy sale for a price less than their claim. From the memorandum it appears that the number of creditors who purchased this property consisted of five, three of whom were banks. These banks acquired the assets at a receiver's sale at a nominal figure in order to cover loans to the amount of 2.07x dollars. The claims of the other two creditors are not stated. On October —, 1912, the creditors turned the business over to the Z Company, a new corporation formed for the purpose of taking over the property. The conditions of this latter sale were: (1) The Z Company was to supply 6x dollars working capital; (2) the Z Company was to assume the unpaid liabilities of the Y Company and pay them off within a period of 10 years; (3) the Z Company was to have the assets of the Y Company in return for meeting the liabilities.

Upon these conditions the Z Company was duly incorporated with a capital stock of x dollars subscribed. It is claimed that the stockholders of the new corporation are the same as those of the defunct Y Company and for that reason the new corporation requests to be permitted to set up an invested capital equal to that of the defunct corporation.

It also appeared in this case that during the receivership the receiver was ordered by the court to continue the business which he did at a loss of from .08x dollars to .1x dollars; that the successful operation of the company's business necessitated the buying of certain material on long-time contracts with ready cash, as the raw material had to be obtained from foreign countries, requiring six weeks to two months as a rule for delivery; that the receiver upon conferring with 75 per cent of the creditors was required to sell the property and the banks which were the principal creditors, acting through a trustee, bought in the property; that some of the stockholders of the Y Company could not or would not venture new money toward additional capital and the remaining stockholders took the risk and made a further investment of x dollars under an arrangement whereby the property was turned over to the Z Company, subject to the payment by the latter of the claims of the creditors of 2.07x dollars. The Committee at that time also considered a memorandum found with the case, to the effect that * * *: the company's liability for 1917 advised the Bureau orally as follows:

Some time prior to the date the Y Company went into the hands of a receiver, A, the president and majority stockholder, disposed of all of his stock. A was also a director in one of the banks which was a creditor of the corporation. Through this connection he got the bank to call in its loan and thus forced the company into the hands of a receiver. The agent's report shows that A was appointed receiver. —, 1912, the property of the company was sold at a judicial sale to the creditors for the amount of the indebtedness. —, 1912, the O Bank, as trustee for the creditors, sold the property to the Z Company, a corporation organized for that purpose, of which company A was the majority stockholder.

Upon this evidence the Committee found:

That there was a substantial change of beneficial interest in the property when turned over to the Z Company is clear. The creditors of the Y Company as above indicated, purchased the property at the receiver's sale at a price less than their claims, and when the creditors turned the property over to the Z Company in consideration for the assumption by the latter of the debts owed the creditors of the Y Company, the cost of the property to the Z Company thereby became established. The Committee can not ignore the fact convincingly shown by the record that the parties to this transaction were dealing at arms' length; that the three banks to which was owed 93.70 per cent of the indebtedness assumed by the Z Company did not become stockholders of that company; and that the conduct of the business by the receiver whereby a loss of .08x dollars or .1x dollars was incurred tended materially to decrease the actual value of the property for the purpose of sale between a willing seller and a willing buyer.

* * * In view of the two intermediate transactions between ownership of the property by the Y Company and acquisition by the Z Company, the Committee is of the opinion that the Bureau is precluded by article 63 of Regulations 41, as construed in Solicitor's Memorandum 551 (not published), and by article 836 of Regulations 45, from ascribing to this property for the purpose of computing statutory invested capital a value in excess of its actual cost to the Z Company, and it is recommended that the claim for paid-in surplus for 1917 and 1918 be denied.

It is believed that a careful consideration of the principles involved in these two cases will furnish a satisfactory basis for a determination of the question whether property purchased at a receiver's sale and paid into a corporation is to be deemed to have been acquired at a bargain price and the excess value for that reason excluded from the capital.

Where the assets of a corporation are purchased by its creditors (bondholders or general creditors) at a receiver's sale and are thereafter conveyed by the creditors to a new corporation of which they are the stockholders for a financial consideration, or in consideration for all or substantially all of its capital stock, as in the case cited in T. B. R. 32, the price at which the property is purchased by the creditors is usually nominal, the true cost of the assets to the creditors being the amount of their credits, and in the conveyance to the new corporation there is no substantial change in beneficial ownership but only in the form of ownership. The element of bargaining does not enter into the transaction and if the value of the assets which can be clearly and definitely established is substantially in excess of the consideration paid therefor by the corporation, or of the par value of the stock issued therefor, a paid-in surplus in the amount of such excess may be allowed. If, on the other hand, the property is conveyed by creditors to a corporation in which they do not hold the capital stock or a substantial part of it, as in the case considered in T. B. M. 49, a reasonable regard for human nature compels the conclusion that the property is not conveyed for a consideration substantially less than that for which it could be sold in the market and that the price or the consideration paid therefor fixes the cost of the assets and, therefore, the value to the corporation for the purpose of computing its invested capital.

Whether or not the creditor were stockholders of the old corporation appears to have little or no bearing upon the rules just stated, but if the transaction under consideration took place subsequent to March 3, 1917, the consideration of whether or not the creditor purchasers were also the stockholders of the old corporation becomes material, since, if they were, the transaction would ordinarily constitute a reorganization and the limitation imposed by section 331 of the Act of February 24, 1919, would apply.

In the light of these principles your questions are answered specifically as follows, the substance of the questions being incorporated in the answers to avoid any misunderstanding as to what factors are considered material to be considered:

(a) When the purchasers at a receiver's sale are creditors of the old corporation but are not stockholders in either the old or the new corporation, the price paid for the assets by the new corporation fixes the value of the assets for the purpose of computing its invested capital and no paid-in surplus can be allowed.

(b) When the purchasers are both creditors and the stockholders of both corporations and a value for the assets clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or par value of the stock paid therefor by the corporation, can be definitely and accurately established, a paid-in surplus may be allowed. If, however, the transaction occurred after March 3, 1917, the transaction will ordinarily be held to constitute a reorganization and the limitation imposed by section 331 of the Act of February 24, 1919, will apply.

(c) When the purchasers are the stockholders of both the old and the new corporations but are not creditors of the old corporation, there is no substantial change in the beneficial interests and the cash or other consideration received for the assets from the new corporation does not necessarily measure the value of the assets, and the same rule applies as in case (b). If the transaction occurred subsequent to March 3, 1917, the transaction would ordinarily constitute a reorganization and be governed by section 331 of the Revenue Act of February 24, 1919.

(d) When the purchasers are composed in part of creditors of the old corporation who are not stockholders and in part of stockholders of the new and old corporations, each case must be determined upon its own particular facts in accordance with the principles above stated. If the number of creditor stockholders common to both corporations is sufficiently large so that there is no substantial change of beneficial ownership, the case will fall within the rule laid down in case (b). If on the other hand, a considerable number of the purchasers are not stockholders of the new corporation, it is not to be supposed that they would consent to a sale of the assets for a price materially less than their fair value and, therefore, the price or consideration paid would determine the value of the assets for the purpose of computing invested capital and no paid-in surplus can be allowed.

Held, that since the M Company is unable to tie up the inventory as of the date as of which the appraisal was made with the books of the corporation and thus to determine either the date of acquisition or the cost of practically 100 per cent of such inventory, the appraisal submitted is not susceptible of verification within the requirements of T. D. 3367 [¶1265, herein].

The appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in reducing its invested capital as of date of organization from 158.35x dollars to 63.29x dollars, as the result of rejecting a retroactive appraisal offered in evidence to establish a paid-in surplus was considered by the Committee in A. R. R. 1276 [Number 16, above]. After a thorough consideration of the method in which the appraisal had been prepared the Committee found that it conformed generally to the requirements of T. D. 3367 [¶1265, herein] and recommended that it be accepted as competent evidence subject to check as to individual items by the Unit.

In response to a letter from the Unit calling for the evidence considered necessary to enable it to check this appraisal under T. D. 3367, the duly qualified representative of the appellant stated, under date of December —, 1922:

Paragraph three of your letter of November — asked for dates of acquisition of all items acquired prior to July —, 1914. It is impossible, with the information we have, to give you these dates of acquisition on any appreciable amount of the individual items. I can, however, say that the predecessor corporation started business in 1904 and that additions to plant were made quite extensively in 1907, and probably 90 per cent of the plant on hand July —, 1914, was acquired in those two years.

Referring to paragraph four of your letter asking us to segregate the items which are identified with entries on the books of the predecessor corporation from the items not so identified, it would be a long and difficult task to do this in the form you wish. While the prices paid by the predecessor corporation were used wherever possible, they do not constitute a large per cent of the value, and as it is my understanding that these costs would be, in any event, only for comparative purposes, I believe that the values we have used as of July —, 1914, can be checked to your satisfaction in some other way.

In paragraph five you asked for costs of installation, freight, and cartage. These items were in most cases determined by inspection and by conference with the master mechanic of the company and by using the freight rates known to exist at July —, 1914. To give the detail which you asked for would require an expenditure of money far in excess of anything gained by having these items included at the conservative value which I have shown for these items.

In view of the admitted inability of the appellant to furnish the evidence necessary to enable the Unit properly to check the appraisal, the case has been returned to the Committee for further recommendation.

The action of the Unit has been discussed with the representative of the appellant and the case is, therefore, further considered as on appeal.

The replies of the appellant indicate a total failure to tie up the inventory as of the date as of which the appraisal was made with the books of the corporation and thus to determine either the date of acquisition or the cost of practically 100 per cent of such inventory. Under these circumstances the Committee concurs in the position taken by the Unit that the appraisal submitted in this case is not susceptible of verification within the requirements of T. D. 3367 [¶1265 herein].

II (23)-33-1198: A. R. R. 3572.

Revenue Act of 1917.

The purchasers at a receiver's sale in 1914 were the stockholders of the bankrupt corporation. Capital stock in a new corporation in the amount of 10x dollars par value was issued to them for the assets purchased. The value of the assets paid in was 23.82x dollars. The new corporation is entitled to a paid-in surplus of 13.82x dollars.

The M Company has appealed from the action of the Income Tax Unit in making certain adjustments of invested capital and income for 1917 which would result in an additional tax in the amount of 1.41x dollars.

The principal question involved in this appeal is the disallowance of 16.49x dollars claimed paid-in surplus. The appellant corporation was organized under the laws of the State of S on September —, 1914, to engage in retailing — and — supplies. A company known as the N Company, owned and operated by the O family, had been engaged in the same business for many years and had gone into the hands of a receiver. On August —, 1914, this receiver sold the stock of merchandise, etc., of the bankrupt concern to one, A, who was acting as agent for the O family, for 6.05x dollars. The O family then paid A 6.1x dollars for these goods. It is claimed on behalf of the appellant company that this merchandise and other assets were turned into the new corporation at a cash value of 23.82x dollars in return for the total capital stock of the new corporation, namely, 10x dollars par value. The same assets had been inventoried by the receiver at the time of the sale at 19.61x dollars. All of this stock, except qualifying shares, was issued to B, a member of the O family. It is also claimed that her son, C, who held 1 share of stock, turned over to the new corporation goods of the value of 7.34x dollars not acquired from the bankrupt concern. It does not appear how C acquired this merchandise nor what it comprised. The articles of association dated September —, 1914, show that the capital stock was issued for assets consisting mostly of merchandise and store and office furniture and fixtures in the total amount of 23.82x dollars. The only evidence furnished in support of the claim for that part of the surplus based upon goods turned in by C is the statement that the opening inventory totaled 31.17x dollars and comprised assets paid in for stock valued at 23.82x dollars and the goods in question, valued at 7.34x dollars.

The revenue agent states:

This company bought for cash a bankrupt stock of merchandise and fixtures for 14.68x dollars, as shown by the records; no distribution of the 4.68x dollars has been made by the corporation over the 10x dollars for which the capital stock was issued, this excess has been allowed as paid-in surplus.

In view of the meager data furnished by the appellant company and by the revenue agent, the Committee is of the opinion that the only reliable evidence upon which to base its recommendation is contained in the articles of association, which set forth an itemized description and valuation of the assets actually paid in to the corporation for capital stock. This valuation is believed to be fair. The revenue agent was in error in holding that the corporation itself bought the assets at a receiver's sale and in allowing paid-in surplus of only 4.68x dollars. The company was not incorporated until a month after the sale in question. Under A. R. M. 192 (C. B. II-1, p. 201), the appellant company is entitled to a paid-in surplus in the amount of the difference between 23.82x dollars, value of the assets paid in, and 10x dollars capital stock, or 13.82x dollars. The Committee finds that the claim for a paid-in surplus in excess of this amount has not been established.

The adjustments of income for 1917, including several small changes on account of depreciation, were based upon a field investigation made after the appellant had been notified of the result of an office audit. The appellant objects to a reopening of question which it had considered closed. Sufficient proof to establish these minor claims of the appellant, however, has not been presented, and, accordingly, the Committee concludes that such adjustments of income as were made by the revenue agent and accepted by the Unit are correct.

The Committee, therefore, recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing paid-in surplus in excess of 4.68x dollars be modified to the extent of allowing such surplus in the amount of 13.82x dollars, and that the adjustments of income by the Unit on the basis of the field examination be sustained.

So much of a replacement fund for steamers lost established in accordance with article 50, Regulations 45, as represents excess of the amount of insurance received over the book value of the steamers at the time of their destruction may not be included in invested capital for the purpose of war and excess profits taxes, even though the interest received from the investment of such excess is reported as taxable income, because such excess is not "paid-in or earned surplus" within the meaning of section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The principal stockholder of a close corporation invented a certain article and turned over to the corporation his rights to the invention. After some litigation, a patent was granted to the inventor who turned it over to the corporation without consideration. The corporation was engaged in the manufacture and sale of the article both before and since the patent was issued. The questions presented are whether the value of the patent may be included by the corporation in its invested capital for 1917, since it was not paid in for stock but without consideration, and assessment of its excess profits tax for 1917 under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917, defining invested capital, provides for three classes of such capital, following the earlier Act of March 3, 1917, as actual cash paid in, tangible property paid in for stock or shares, and paid in or earned surplus. Then follows a proviso not contained in the Act of March 3, 1917, providing for two classes of property as to the classification of some items of which there has been, in the courts of the country, considerable dispute. The first provides that the actual cash value of patents and copyrights paid in may be included in invested capital not to exceed the par value of stock issued therefor; the second provides that good will, trade-marks, trade brands, etc., may be taken into invested capital only to a limited extent as intangible property. It will be seen by this division that Congress manifestly intended in the Revenue Act of 1917, to classify patents and copyrights as tangible property and trade-marks, good will, and other property as intangible; and it also provided that where patents were turned in for stock the figure at which they could be taken into invested capital is the actual cash value or the par value of the stock issued therefor, whichever is lower, but this does not necessarily preclude the recognition of actual value of patents turned in as paid-in surplus.

The Committee is therefore of the opinion that under the Revenue Act of 1917, the corporation would be entitled, upon establishing the value of the patent turned over to the company without consideration, to include such value as invested capital. In the present case, however, it is apparent that the inventor turned over to the company the rights to his invention long prior to the issuance of letters patent covering same, in fact, immediately after the invention of the device. The amount which could be recognized, therefore, as paid in surplus would be the value of the invention at the time it was turned over to the company and before commercial development rather than its value when letters patent were issued and at which time development had proceeded sufficiently to possibly justify the valuation claimed by the company. What that value was at the time of the invention, is in the judgment of the Committee, a fact which can not be satisfactorily determined, and it seems clear that it would be impossible to prove a value at that time in excess of the value given to it in practical effect by the application of section 210; that is to say, the difference between the statutory capital and the constructed capital under that section.

The Committee is therefore of the opinion that the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing the tax under the provisions of section 210 was proper and works no injustice upon the taxpayer.

For the same reasons that section 210 was applied under the 1917 Act, it is recommended that the company be assessed for 1918 and subsequent years under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held in the appeal of the M Company that a claim for paid-in surplus in 1917 can not be allowed in the case of appreciated value in a leasehold which was acquired by the company as original lessee without cost and which was not paid in at a fixed value for stock or shares.

The M Company has appealed from the decision of the Income Tax Unit in connection with its income and excess profits tax for 1917. Amended returns were filed by the company, in which the invested capital for 1917 was increased by including therein as paid-in surplus the appreciated value of a lease, which was acquired by the company as original lessee, and which was not paid in for stock or shares in such company. This leasehold was not carried as an asset by the company, and was not entered on its books until 1918.

It appears that subsequent to the time of filing its return, and during the early part of 1919, the company had an appraisal made for the purpose of fixing the value of this leasehold. This appraisal furnishes estimated values as at the time of the renewal of the lease in 1916, and values for years subsequent thereto. The company claims in its presentation of the case that article 63 of Regulations 41 permits the inclusion in invested capital as paid-in surplus the appreciated value of the leasehold as ascertained by the appraisal. The original lease, which was acquired without cost, carried an option of renewal, which was exercised by the company in 1916. This renewal, under the option of the original lease, was obtained without cost.

The term "invested capital" as used in the excess profits tax law for 1917 means the invested capital of the present owner. The starting point in the computation of invested capital is the amount of cash and other property paid in. In the ascertainment of the correct invested capital, surplus and undivided profits are taken into consideration, and also depletion, depreciation, or obsolescence of the property originally acquired for cash, or for stock or shares, or in any other manner.

The taxpayer relies on the provisions of article 55 of Regulations 41, reading as follows:

Tangible property paid in for stock or shares prior to January 1, 1914, must be valued at either (a) the actual cash value of such property on January 1, 1914, or (b) the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, whichever is lower. This is one of the few cases in which the law permits allowance to be made for appreciation, and here no appreciation can be recognized unless the original stock or shares were specifically issued in exchange for such tangible property.

Tangible property paid in for stock or shares on or after January 1, 1914, will be taken at the actual cash value of such property at the time of payment, irrespective of the par value of the stock or shares.

The taxpayer also relies on the provisions of article 63, which reads as follows:

Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value, accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid in surplus. The adopted value shall not cover mineral deposits or other properties discovered or developed after the date of conveyance, but shall be confined to the value accurately ascertainable or definitely known at that time.

Evidence tending to support a claim for a paid-in surplus under these circumstances must be as of the date of conveyance, and may consist, among other things, of (1) an appraisal of the property by disinterested authorities, (2) the assessed value in the case of real estate, and (3) the market price in excess of the par value of the stock or shares.

The Committee in the consideration of this case has applied the law to the statement of facts and is of the opinion that the instant case does not fall within the provisions of articles 55 and 63 as contended by the taxpayer.

The articles of the regulations quoted above are specific and correctly interpret the statute. The taxpayer, by its admission, bars any claim for paid-in surplus. The company having acquired the leasehold as original lessee without cost and later renewing same without cost had nothing which could be paid in for stock or shares. Any value appreciation in such leasehold must be eliminated from the computation of invested capital.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing additional tax based upon the disallowance of a portion of the company's claim for invested capital.

The facts with regard to this case appear to be that the plant of the M Company is located some miles from a railroad or other transportation facilities, and that it is, therefore, dependent for its supply of raw material upon the product raised in the vicinity. The plant has a capacity of approximately 2y tons, which is about the production of the tributary territory. Of this 2y tons, y tons are produced by several large plantation owners, the other y tons being produced by plantations owned by the company itself, and by small farmers. The transportation conditions are such, as before stated, that the plant can be operated successfully only if it obtains the entire output of the vicinity.

In 1912, the manager of the corporation which has been operating this plant died, and some differences arose between the large plantation owners and the owners of the plant. The plantation owners who were dissatisfied made tentative arrangements for the erection of a smaller plant intended to produce the finished article on a co-operative basis, only utilizing the raw material which they produced. As the old company could not operate economically upon what was left of the field's production, it became at once involved in financial difficulties, with the result that the holder of a mortgage on the property, foreclosed it, the old manufacturing company thus becoming defunct. Negotiations were thereupon opened between this creditor and the plantation owners for the sale of the plant to a new corporation to be formed by them. These negotiations were finally completed by the organization of a company with a capital stock of  $7x$  dollars,  $6x$  dollars of which was paid in in equal shares in cash by the plantation owners, and the other  $x$  dollars was issued to the negotiator for his services in organization. The plant was transferred to the new corporation in consideration of the company's notes secured by mortgage upon the plant, and in consideration of the agreement that the owners would each individually contract with the new corporation to sell to it all of his product for a period of five years, the period during which the purchase money notes would mature. It is claimed that by reason of the bringing together of the plant, which shortly before foreclosure was appraised at  $200x$  dollars, and the contracts for raw material, that the plant was at once restored to its appraised value, and that these contracts made with the company were so closely related to rights in the tangible property, to-wit, the plant, as to constitute contracts recognizable as tangible property within the meaning of article 811, justifying treatment of them as paid-in surplus. The difficulty with this argument is that it is based upon a false premise. Paid-in surplus, as its name implies, must be some tangible property transferred from the owners to a corporation, either as a gift or at a value less than the actual cash value of the property transferred, and in practically all cases where allowable, involves no substantial change in beneficial interest. In this case, the plant itself was not transferred to the company as a gift or for stock, but was bought by the company from an owner, not a stockholder in the company, for its notes, which notes have subsequently been paid off through earnings. Neither can contracts made with the company itself, and to which it is one of the parties, be held to be paid-in surplus. Contracts in any event, and where they may be regarded under the regulations as tangible assets, can only constitute paid-in surplus if the contracts were made between outside parties and the rights of either of those parties is then transferred to a corporation without adequate compensation.

The Committee is, therefore, compelled to recommend that the claim for paid-in surplus be rejected.

47-21-1936: A. R. R. 678.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the right to include in the computation of invested capital as paid-in surplus  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars, representing claims owed to and canceled by creditor stockholders, be reversed, and accordingly that the taxpayer's appeal be sustained.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that an item of  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars may not properly be treated as paid-in surplus for the purpose of computing invested capital.

A review of the record in the case discloses the following relevant facts which do not appear to be disputed. The M Company was incorporated in 190— with a paid-in capital of  $5x$  dollars, and since that time has undergone no corporate change; and in 1913 stockholders, with claims amounting to  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars for goods and materials furnished to the company in the course of business, canceled their claims. It appears that the company was originally organized in 190— by the heirs of A, the founder of the business, and that his son had control of the business until 1913; further, that the company operated consistently at a loss up to 1913, when it was placed in the hands of a receiver, at which time it was rehabilitated without corporate reorganization through the transfer of capital stock to creditors. It is shown that creditors' claims amounting to  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars were, as before stated, canceled, and at the same time there was a transfer to said creditors of  $3x$  dollars par value of the company's capital stock from the members of A's family; also further shares were transferred and sold to obtain financial aid necessary to place the company and its business on a working basis. As a result of such transfers, the control of the corporation since 1913 has been in the hands of B and C, of the O Company. These two individuals, it appears, were the principal creditors of the appellant company at the time receiver was appointed.

It is the claim of the corporation that the amount of debts so canceled constitutes a contribution of new capital invested by the creditors to the extent of their canceled claims.

The view expressed by the Unit in its memorandum of February 16, 1921, is substantially as follows:

Inasmuch as the creditors received stock for the cancellation of their claims, it was the opinion of the representatives of the Bureau that the amount involved did not constitute paid-in surplus within the meaning of the law.

Upon consideration of the foregoing, it appears to the Committee that at a time just prior to the receivership the appellant company's invested capital was  $5x$  dollars, provided that the par value of the total capitalization of the company was fully paid in at the time of organization, and this is true despite the fact that at a time just prior to the receivership the company showed a large operating deficit. In this connection attention is called to the fact that the Bureau has consistently held that the original amount of capital paid in for stock subscriptions shall never be reduced for purposes of computing invested capital by reason of an operating deficit. Conceded, then, that the invested capital at a time just prior to the receivership in 1913 was  $5x$  dollars, what effect, if any, had the stock transactions between stockholders upon invested capital? The Committee can see no change in invested capital resulting thereby. The transfer of stock between the several stockholders of the corporation or between stockholders and persons who have not prior to such action been stockholders, whether for a valuable consideration in excess of or less than the par value or market value of the corporate stock, or for no consideration whatsoever, can, in the opinion of the Committee, have no effect upon the measure to be assigned to the original paid-in capital for the purpose of computing invested capital.

It is pointed out in the instant case that the principal creditors of the corporation at the time of the receivership received by transfer from the majority stockholders  $3x$  dollars par value of the capital stock. It does not appear whether a consideration of any description entered into this transaction. However, the Committee can see no possible effect which such transaction could have upon the original paid-in capital for the purpose of determining invested capital.

With respect to the cancellation of the claims of creditors who were themselves stockholders and assumed control by reason of the transfer aforesaid, it is the opinion of the Committee that such action clearly resulted in an additional contribution to capital which assumed the character of paid-in surplus. The situation seems to be that these stockholders made numerous advances either in money or money's worth to the corporation which gave rise to an existing liability constituting a charge against the corporate assets.

By the cancellation of such claims a condition arose whereby the corporate liabilities were correspondingly reduced and the assets correspondingly increased.

It is true that this action on the part of said stockholders effected no change in the corporate surplus for the reason that an operating deficit existed. However, the applicable rule in this connection is found in article 860 of Regulations 45, which provides in part that:

Capital or surplus actually paid in is not required to be reduced because of an impairment of capital in the nature of an operating deficit.

A careful study of the above matters leads the Committee to conclude that the cancellation by stockholders of  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars of claims owing to such stockholders resulted in effect in an additional contribution to the corporation's capital account which assumed for the purposes of invested capital the nature of paid-in surplus; further, that this is true regardless of any transfers of stock as between the stockholders which may or may not have been a consideration moving to the cancellation of said claims.

It follows obviously that the corporation's invested capital is at least the  $5x$  dollars fully paid-up capital as it existed just prior to the receivership, plus the  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars paid-in surplus, which was effected by reason of the cancellation of the stockholding creditors' claims, or a total of  $8\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars. Therefore, it is recommended in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the right to include in the computation of invested capital as paid-in surplus  $3\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars representing claims owed to and canceled by creditor stockholders be reversed, and accordingly that the taxpayer's appeal be sustained.

Revenue Act of 1917.

Property was held in trust for a corporation and at the end of the trust period was to be conveyed to the corporation, provided all the conditions set out in the agreement had been complied with. At any time during the continuance of the trust the property would have reverted for failure to comply with the conditions. It may not be included in invested capital until full compliance with the terms of the agreement.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in excluding from invested capital for 1917 certain cash and tangible property used in the business under the terms of an agreement entered into February 7, 1911.

In the year 1911 the appellant entered into a joint agreement with the N Company and the O Company under the terms of which the N Company agreed to contribute  $15x$  dollars in cash to be used in building a factory for the appellant in the city of S, and the O Company agreed to contribute land of the value of  $5x$  dollars on which factory was to be erected. The agreement also provided that the appellant was to invest in the factory buildings, etc., not less than  $15x$  dollars and operate the factory for a period of 10 years, during each year of which time not less than 100 male employees were to be employed. The agreement further provided that if before title had been conveyed to the appellant it should abandon or cease to operate said factory or fail to perform any and all of its other obligations under the agreement, then it should forfeit all of its rights and interest in and to the said land and the buildings and permanent improvements that may have been placed thereon and should have no further interest therein and would, upon demand, vacate and surrender the property. During the 10 years the property was to be held in trust by the N Company and at the expiration of the period was to be conveyed to the appellant by a good and sufficient deed, provided all of the conditions set out in the agreement of 1911 had been complied with. The contract was carried out and in the year 1921 the land and buildings were deeded to the taxpayer and a release given by the N Company for any and all contractual rights which it held under the agreement.

The appellant contends that for all practical purposes the cash and land were paid into the corporation for use in its business without any financial consideration or interest charges, and that the 20x dollars should be allowed as paid-in surplus under the provisions of article 63 of Regulations 41.

The Committee has carefully considered the arguments that have been advanced and has reached the conclusion that under no construction of the regulations could this cash and tangible property be regarded as having been paid in to the appellant corporation at any time prior to the full compliance with all of the terms of the agreement entered into in 1911. The appellant corporation could, at any time during this period, have failed or refused to comply with one or more of the conditions, and had this been done all of the property would have reverted to the N Company. The provisions of the law and regulations relating to paid-in surplus do not contemplate any such contingent interest with respect to the property paid in.

It is therefore recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that its claim for paid-in surplus of 20x dollars be denied and that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

When a corporation purchased its own stock at a price below the paid-in value of the shares it acquired, the amount paid out by the corporation represented a return of paid in capital, and the difference between the amount paid by the corporation and the paid-in value of the shares represented paid-in surplus, and earned surplus was not affected by the transactions.

When a premium was paid in retiring other shares of the capital stock, the amount thereof should be charged first to earned surplus accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, and secondly to earned surplus accumulated subsequently to February 28, 1913.

A corporation purchased shares of its own stock from one of its stockholders at a price which was less than par which represented the value of the assets paid in for such stock, and also purchased other shares from the executrix of a deceased stockholder. The agreement with reference to the purchase of the stock from the executrix provided that the estate should be paid x per cent of the amount which the decedent would have been entitled to receive as a shareholder for the three calendar years 1922, 1923, and 1924 had he lived and continued to be a stockholder in the corporation with the same interest he held at the time of his death.

Held, for the purpose of the Federal income tax the purchase by a corporation of its own stock first reduces its paid-in capital, whether such paid-in capital consists of tangible or intangible assets. Accordingly, when the corporation purchased its own stock at a price below the paid-in value of the shares it acquired, the amount paid out by the corporation represented a return of paid-in capital, and the difference between the amount paid by the corporation and the paid-in value of the shares represented paid-in surplus, and earned surplus was not affected by the transactions.

The amount paid to the executrix of the deceased stockholder, together with the payments to be made to the estate out of the profits for the years 1922, 1923, and 1924 should be treated as a return of paid-in capital to the extent of par value of the shares purchased. If, however, it results that a premium is paid in retiring such stock the amount thereof should be charged first to earned surplus accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, and secondly to earned surplus accumulated subsequent to February 28, 1913.

22-19-538: T. B. R. 67.

Revenue Act of 1917.—Treatment, for the purpose of determining the invested capital of a domestic corporation, of shares of stock in a foreign corporation deriving no income from sources within the United States, acquired for cash and in exchange for a patent right.

The M Company, a domestic corporation, organized the O Company a foreign corporation. The O Corporation issued stock of the par value of 10x dollars to the M Corporation for 5x dollars cash and for the right to use certain patents, which right was worth at least 5x dollars. None of the income of the O Corporation for the year 1917 was derived from sources within the United States. The question is as to the method of treatment of the shares of stock of the O Corporation in determining the invested capital of the M Corporation for the year 1917, under the Revenue Act of that year.

In computing the surplus and undivided profits of the M Company the shares of stock in the O Corporation are to be valued at cost, with proper adjustments, if any. (The method of computing surplus and undivided profits under the Revenue Act of 1918, laid down in article 838 of Regulations 45, is equally applicable to the computation of surplus and undivided profits under the Revenue Act of 1917.) In the cost of the shares of stock of the O Corporation are to be included the cash payment of 5x dollars, and the patent right at its value at the time of the exchange, which value can not be taken as exceeding the value of the shares of stock received in exchange therefor. The effect of the transaction may be to increase or decrease the amount of the surplus and undivided profits of the M Corporation, though the assets which ultimately give value thereto; to wit, the cash and the patent right, remain the same. Such increase or decrease, however, is due to such a change in the situation as amounts to a realization of gain or loss, and any gain so realized is earned surplus, as any loss so realized effects a decrease in earned surplus. (See Art. 1565, Regs. 45, as amended by T. D. 2924.) Since earned surplus is considered in determining invested capital regardless of the time when it was earned, it is immaterial that the gain or loss realized from the transaction was due to appreciation or depreciation which in part occurred prior to March 1, 1913. In this respect the principles applicable to the computation of invested capital differ from those applicable to the determination of taxable income for, while such part of the realized appreciation, if any, as is attributable to the period after March 1, 1913, is taxable income, such part as is attributable to the period before March 1, 1913, though considered in the computation of invested capital, escapes taxation.

The shares of stock of the O Corporation constitute "admissible assets" of the M Corporation for the year 1917. The O Corporation derived no income from sources within the United States, and consequently was not subject to income tax under Title I of the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended by the Revenue Act of 1917. (Sec. 10.) The dividends received by the M Corporation upon its stock in the O Corporation should, therefore, be included in the income of the M Corporation for purposes of the excess profits tax. They are not "amounts received * * * as dividends upon the stock * * * of other corporation * * * subject to the tax imposed by Title I of such act of September 8, 1916," within the meaning of section 206 of the Revenue Act of 1917 which authorized the deduction of such amounts from the income of a domestic corporation in order to determine the amount of income of such corporation subject to the excess profits tax. Consequently, the stock of the O Corporation does not constitute "inadmissible assets" under the provision of section 207 of Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 that—

As used in this title "invested capital" does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title.

It is held, therefore, that for the purpose of determining the invested capital of the M Corporation (a) in computing its surplus and undivided profits its shares of stock in the O Corporation are to be valued at cost with proper adjustments, if any, such cost being 5x dollars plus the value at the time of the exchange therefor of the patent rights owned by the M Corporation; and (b) such shares of stock are to be regarded as "admissible assets."

The Committee is of the opinion that appreciation is in no event a part of earned surplus and therefore can not offset depreciation in the value of assets through wear, tear, and exhaustion. Depreciation must first be figured in order to determine true earned surplus. In other words, earned surplus is believed to consist of realized gains or profits and while such realized gains or profits must be reduced by any depreciation in value through use or exhaustion of the assets in which they are invested, any appreciation in value of those assets which is not yet realized can not be taken into consideration for the purpose of offsetting such decrease.

A corporation owns patents covering certain inventions made by its em-employees. The cost of securing the patents and the salaries of the employees whose inventions were patented were paid by the corporation and charged to expense account. The corporation may not include in its invested capital any amount representing either the cost of the patents or appreciation in their value.

Advice is requested as to the proper treatment of credit balances of stockholders' accounts in the case of the M Company.

The facts appear to be that no formal declaration of dividends has been made by this company, but a book entry has been made noting and crediting to each stockholder the share of each year's earnings to which he would be entitled under a dividend declaration, the individual shareholders having returned their shares of such earnings in their personal returns and paid the income tax thereon.

Reference is made to Appeals and Review Recommendation 102 as supporting the view that balances to the credit of individual stockholders are not invested capital. In that case, however, the balances standing to the credit of individual stockholders were not in proportion to their stockholdings, whereas it appears in the present case each stockholder has been credited with the amount of the earnings attributable to his stock. No interest has been or is to be paid upon the amounts standing to the credit of these stockholders, no formal declaration of a dividend has been made by the board of directors, and it appears that under the State law the stockholders do not rank with general creditors with respect to such credits.

Under these circumstances the case is clearly distinguishable from the one covered by Recommendation 102, and in the judgment of the Committee the amounts so credited should be regarded as being a part of the earned surplus of the corporation to be included in invested capital.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that a mining corporation, in computing its invested capital for the purpose of the war excess profits tax, be required to reduce its earned surplus by the amount of its sustained depletion to the beginning of the year for which the tax is computed; and, under normal conditions, to inventory its metals on hand and not sold at the close of its annual accounting period, at cost or cost or market, whichever is lower.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that the surplus earnings of the taxpayer at the beginning of the taxable year 1917, amounting to 16½x dollars, which the company claimed as a part of its invested capital for the taxable year, and which represented the undistributed accumulations of mining and incidental profits during several years, are overstated to the extent of 9½x dollars; and from the expressed purpose of the Unit to revise the valuation of the taxpayer's inventory of metals on hand at the beginning of the year 1917.

The questions involved being wholly ones of law, the case was referred to the Solicitor of Internal Revenue for his consideration, and his conclusions are quoted below:

You present for consideration the questions whether the M Company is required, in computing its invested capital for the purpose of the war excess profits tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917, to reduce the amount of its earned surplus by the amount of any sustained depletion to the beginning of the year for which the tax is computed, and whether it is permitted to inventory metals on hand at the date of the inventory, and not sold, at the selling price.

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides in part that:

As used in this title "invested capital" does not include stocks, bonds (other than obligations of the United States), or other assets, the income from which is not subject to the tax imposed by this title nor money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, the actual cash value of such property as of January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year: * * *

Section 10 of the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended by section 1206 of the Revenue Act of 1917, provides:

(a) That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources by every corporation * * * organized in the United States, no matter how created or organized, * * * a tax of two per centum upon such income; and a like tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income * * *.

Section 13 (d) of the Revenue Act of 1916, which was not modified by the Revenue Act of 1917, provides that:

A corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, keeping accounts upon any basis other than that of actual receipts and disbursements, unless such other basis does not clearly reflect its income, may, subject to regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make its return upon the basis upon which its accounts are kept, in which case the tax shall be computed upon its income as so returned.

The X mine was discovered prior to 1883. The N company was organized with a capitalization of  $3x$  dollars to develop and operate the mine. In 1886 additional capital was put into the development of the mine and from that time it has proved immensely profitable, in 1889 the profits, without allowing for depletion, amounting to approximately  $4x$  dollars. In 1900, the M Company acquired, through purchase, the mines and works of the N Company; also the entire issue of the stocks and bonds of the O Company; also all of the real and personal property of the N Company, comprising lands, mining claims, buildings, machinery, tools, ore on dumps and in the works, and supplies and stores of all kinds; also the right to receive what was paid in the distribution of the remaining assets of the N Corporation in dissolution.

The consideration paid by the M Company for the above property was (a) the issue and delivery of its capital stock consisting of  $y$  shares, par value of $10 per share, (b)  $3x$  dollars of its income bonds in exchange for the transfer of  $x$  dollars of the cash assets of the N Corporation, and (c) the assumption of all contracts, debts, and obligations of the N Corporation, amounting, as shown by the accounts, to  $1-7x$  dollars.

Upon the evidence filed the Income Tax Unit allowed the M Company a paid-in surplus as of the date of its organization in 1900 of  $23\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, giving it an invested capital of  $26\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars. At the beginning of the taxable year 1917 the company had on hand surplus earnings to the amount of  $16\frac{1}{2}x$ dollars. In its return for the year 1917 the company deducted from its invested capital the sum of  $11\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, being the amount of the deductions for depletion allowed it under the Act of October 3, 1913, and the Act of September 8, 1916. The Bureau claims that the amount of the deductions should be increased by  $9\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, making a total deduction of  $11x$  dollars, the amount of the sustained depletion from the date of the acquisition of the property to 1917, based upon the original capital investment value of  $26\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars.

At the close of the year 1917 the M Company had on hand some 20z pounds of metals produced during that year, which it valued on a basis of cost of production. At the close of the year 1916 the company had on hand some 14z pounds of metals ready for sale, some of which had already been sold for future delivery, and following the method, which it alleges it had consistently followed since 1902, it valued all such metals in its closing inventory for the year 1916 at the prices actually obtained for the metals sold (about 40 per cent of the whole), and the prices which, it was estimated, could be counted upon for the remainder of such metals, less the cost of marketing.

In making its return for 1917 the company protested against being required to value at cost its inventory of bullion and contended that it should be allowed to continue its long established accounting method and value its inventory of metals on hand at the end of the year 1917 on the basis of the value to a going concern, to wit, at prevailing selling prices.

The questions presented will be considered in the order in which they were stated.

Article 42 of Regulations 41, relative to war excess profits tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917, provides:

The term "invested capital" as used in the excess profits tax law means the invested capital of the present owner. The basis or starting point, in the computation of invested capital is found in the amount of cash and other property paid in, the original values of such other property being determined in accordance with the rules laid down in these regulations. But the computation does not stop with such original entries or amounts; it must take properly into account the surplus and undivided profits. In the computation of surplus and undivided profits, however, full recognition must first be given to expenses incurred and losses sustained from the original organization of the business concern down to the taxable year, including among such expenses and losses a reasonable allowance for depletion, depreciation, or obsolescence of property originally acquired for cash or for stock or shares or in any other manner. * * *

Article 64 of Regulations 41 provides that:

Where, through failure to provide for depletion, depreciation, obsolescence, or other expenses or losses, or where for any other cause or reason the books of account of the taxpayer do not show the true paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits, in the computation of invested capital such adjustments shall be made as are necessary to arrive at a statement of the correct amount. * * *

(5) The taxpayer shall also show that adequate provision has been made for the depletion, depreciation, or obsolescence of such of the assets so acquired as are, under the rulings of the department, subject to recognized depreciation.

Regulations 45 (1920 edition), construing the very similar provision of the Revenue Act of 1918, provide (article 838):

Only true earned surplus and undivided profits can be included in the computation of invested capital, and if for any reason the books do not properly reflect the true surplus such adjustments must be made as are necessary in order to arrive at the correct amount. In the computation of earned surplus and undivided profits full recognition must first be given to all expenses incurred and losses sustained from the original organization of the corporation down to the taxable year, including among such expenses and losses reasonable allowance for depreciation, obsolescence, or depletion of property (irrespective of the manner in which such property was originally acquired), and for the amortization of any discount on its bonds. There can, of course, be no earned surplus or undivided profits until any deficit or impairment of paid-in capital due to depletion, depreciation, expense, losses, or any other cause has been made good. * * *

Article 839 of Regulations 45 (1920 edition) further provides that:

Depletion, like depreciation, must be recognized in all cases in which it occurs. Depletion attaches to each unit of mineral or other property removed, and the denial of a deduction in computing net income under the Act of August 5, 1909, or the limitation upon the amount of the deduction allowed under the Act of October 3, 1913, does not relieve the corporation of its obligation to make proper provision for depletion of its property in computing its surplus and undivided profits.

This article is equally applicable under the Act of 1917.

It is contended by the taxpayer that, owing to the peculiar character of mining properties, there is no depletion so long as "discovery and development outrun depletion," and that any actual prior depletion is taken care of by the provision for the valuation of tangible property paid in as of January 1, 1914.

The peculiar character of mining property was well stated in Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U. S. 399, 413, as follows:

The peculiar character of mining property is sufficiently obvious. Prior to development it may present to the naked eye a mere tract of land with barren surface, and of no practical value except for what may be found beneath. Then follow excavation, discovery, development, extraction of ores, resulting eventually, if the process be thorough, in the complete exhaustion of the mineral contents so far as they are worth removing. Theoretically, and according to the argument, the entire value of the mine, as ultimately developed, existed from the beginning. Practically, however, and from the commercial standpoint, the value—that is, the exchangeable or market value—depends upon different considerations. Beginning with little, when the existence, character, and extent of the ore deposits are problematical, it may increase steadily or rapidly so long as discovery and development outrun depletion, and the wiping out of the value by the practical exhaustion of the mine may be deferred for a long term of years.

This statement contains the answer to the contention of the taxpayer. The reason that in the case of mines the Supreme Court has consistently held that no deduction for depletion or depreciation in computing net income can be allowed, in the absence of statutory authority, is that by reason of the fact that discovery and development may outrun depletion there is not necessarily any actual decrease in the value of the taxpayer's property, and, therefore, the entire net receipts may well be considered income. The rule is not new but has come down to us from the common law of England. This, however, does not negative the fact that the removal of each ton of ore depletes pro tanto the ore originally known to exist in the mine and which was originally valued. The maintenance or increase of the original value is solely due to the fact that the loss of value through depletion is equalled or exceeded by the appreciation in value through discovery or development. To treat the entire net income as earnings and as constituting earned surplus in the succeeding year when not distributed by the company would, therefore, to the extent of the depletion actually sustained during the year, be to permit the inclusion of appreciation in the value of the mine, by reason of development and discovery, in invested capital, a thing which is not contemplated by the statute nor permitted by the regulations. This was clearly pointed out in Tax Reviewer's Memorandum of January 29, 1919, approved and followed in Law Opinion 753 (not published in the Bulletin Service).

While the provision in section 207(a) for the inclusion in invested capital of the actual cash value as of January 1, 1914, of tangible property paid in prior to that date permits the inclusion of appreciation up to the par value of the capital stock for which such property was paid in (see article 55, Regulations 41), it clearly contemplates that in valuing the property as of that date any depletion or depreciation shall have been made up out of earnings, and, therefore, such a valuation does not involve a second deduction for depletion.

Regulations 33, revised, construing the Revenue Act of 1916 as amended by the Revenue Act of 1917, contains no provision relating to inventories of mining companies, but article 91 governing inventories by manufacturing corporations, to which mining companies are closely analogous, provides that:

Gross income for the purpose of returns of manufacturing companies shall consist of the total sales plus the inventory at the end of the year less the sum of the cost of goods or materials purchased during the year and the inventory at the beginning of the year. Instructions as to how inventories shall be taken will be included in special regulations to be furnished upon application to the collector of internal revenue * * *

The special regulations referred to are contained in Treasury Decision 2609, which provides in part as follows:

(1) For the purposes of income and excess profits tax returns, inventories of merchandise etc., and of securities will be subject to the following rules:

A. Inventories of supplies, raw materials, work in process of production, and unsold merchandise must be taken either (a) at cost or (b) at cost or market price, whichever is lower, provided that the method adopted must be adhered to in subsequent years, unless another be authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The regulations relating to inventories under the Revenue Act of 1918 (Regulations 45, 1920 edition), are much more extensive but are general and equally applicable under the Acts here considered. Article 1581 of these regulations provides in part that:

Title to the merchandise included in the inventory should be vested in the taxpayer and goods merely ordered for future delivery and for which no transfer of title has been effected should be excluded. The inventory should include merchandise sold but not shipped to the customer at the date of the inventory, together with any merchandise out upon consignment, but if such goods have been included in the sales of the taxable year they should not be taken in the inventory. * * *

Article 1582 provides that:

Inventories must be valued at (a) cost or (b) cost or market, as defined in article 1584, as amended, whichever is lower. * * *

Article 1584 provides that:

Under ordinary circumstances, "market" means the current bid price prevailing at the date of the inventory for the particular merchandise in the volume in which ordinarily purchased by the taxpayer, and is applicable in the cases (a) of goods purchased and on hand, and (b) of basic elements of cost (materials, labor and burden), in goods in process of manufacture and in finished goods on hand; exclusive, however, of goods on hand or in process of manufacture for delivery upon firm sales contracts at fixed prices entered into before the date of the inventory, which goods must be inventoried at cost. * * *

This article also provides for valuing goods in process of manufacture and finished goods on hand at sales price where "owing to abnormal conditions, the taxpayer has regularly sold such merchandise at prices lower than the current bid price as above defined." But this provision can have no application in the instant case since the evidence shows that the M Company at the close of the year 1917 was selling its copper at prices which included abnormally large profits.

Under these regulations a mining company is required to inventory all metals on hand at the date of the inventory, including goods sold but not shipped to customers, at cost, or cost or market whichever is lower, except in the case of metals on hand for delivery "upon firm sales contracts at fixed prices entered into before the date of the inventory" which it is required to inventory at cost. Article 1581, however, recognizes the right of a mining company, which keeps its accounts upon an accrual basis, to include its metals sold, but not shipped, in its accounts receivable rather than in its inventory if it elects so to do. This provision, however, can have no application to goods on hand at the date of the inventory which have not been sold.

It is recognized that, as contended by the taxpayer, to require an inventory at the close of 1917 to be made upon the basis of cost, or cost or market, whichever is lower, while leaving the inventory at the beginning of the year as it was originally made—that is, upon the basis of the selling price of all metals on hand, sold, or unsold—would lead to a distorted statement of income. The inventory at the beginning of the year, which was the same as the closing inventory of the year 1916, must, therefore, be reconstructed, and amended returns made for the year 1916. If the adjustment due to the amended returns occasions an inequality in the tax prior to the year 1916, such inequality may be remedied in the return for 1916 by the deduction from or addition to the tax accruing in that year of an amount equal to the net amount overpaid or underpaid in prior years, such amount to be determined by filing with the return for 1916 a composite return for all prior years, accompanied by a statement showing the total adjustment for each of the years and the net income for the entire period.

It is accordingly held that a mining corporation, in computing its invested capital for the purpose of the war excess profits tax, is required to reduce its earned surplus by the amount of its sustained depletion to the beginning of the year for which the tax is computed, and, under normal conditions, to inventory its metals on hand at the close of its annual accounting period and not sold, at cost or cost or market, whichever is lower.

The Committee concurs in this conclusion of the Solicitor, and recommends its adoption

I. ('22)-16-232: I. T. 1286

Revenue Act of 1918.

On January 1, 1918, the M Company had capital stock amounting to 2x dollars and surplus amounting to 11x dollars, most of which was earned surplus. During 1918 the company suffered an operating loss of 4x dollars.

Inquiry is made whether the invested capital of the company as at January 1, 1919, should be reduced because of the operating loss. It is contended that section 326(a)3 of the Revenue Act of 1918 makes no distinction between "paid-in surplus" and "earned surplus" and that surplus having once been earned and invested in the business is just as much a part of the capital investment as paid-in surplus or cash paid in for stock, and that consequently in computing invested capital no reduction of earned surplus is required because of an operating deficit.

Section 326(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides, in part, that " * * * as used in this title, the term 'invested capital' for any year means * * * (3) paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year; * * *." Under this provision of the statute, only true earned surplus and undivided profits can be included in the computation of invested capital. (See Regulations 45, article 838.) There is nothing in the statute defining the term earned surplus and undivided profits or modifying what must otherwise be accepted as the guiding principle to be applied in determining what is surplus. Under the statute, therefore, surplus in any case must be determined in accordance with the accepted principles of accounting. It is an accepted accounting principle that the surplus of a corporation is the excess of the net assets over the total par or face value of the shares of capital stock. The excess of the assets over the liabilities constitutes the net assets of a corporation. It follows that if an operating loss occurs during the year, other things being equal, the surplus at the end of the year is less than at the beginning of the year. The M corporation had on January 1, 1918, an earned surplus of approximately 11x dollars. During that year the operating expenses exceeded the income from operations by approximately 4x dollars. If such excess expenses were paid with assets, the assets were actually reduced by such payments, resulting in a corresponding decrease in the net assets and in the surplus. If such excess expenses were not paid but were set up on the books as liabilities the resulting increase in the liabilities would also reduce the net assets and consequently the surplus by a corresponding amount. It is clear, therefore, that the surplus and undivided profits of the corporation on January 1, 1919, were approximately 4x dollars less than on January 1, 1918, by reason of the operating deficit occurring in 1918.

It is held, therefore, that the portion of the surplus of the corporation on January 1, 1918, representing earned surplus must be reduced by the operating deficit in computing the invested capital of the corporation as at January 1, 1919, but that portion representing paid-in surplus need not be reduced on account of the operating deficit for 1918 unless dividends were paid during the existence of the operating deficit in excess of the earnings available for distribution at the time the dividends were paid, as determined in accordance with articles 857 and 858 of Regulations 45.

8 not necessary to hold that the corporation had no surplus at the time of the operating deficit for 1918.

I (22)-25-357: A. R. R. 963.

Act February 24, 1919, Sections 214(a)8 and 234(a)7. Act November 23, 1921, Sections 214(a)8 and 234(a)7.

Recommended, upon the reconsideration of A. R. R. 27 (C. B. 2, p. 139) that obsolescence upon bulk freight vessels upon the Great Lakes be accepted as established by the evidence now on file; that such obsolescence be computed in the case of the various types and sizes of such vessels in accordance with the following recommendation; that Solicitor's Opinion 114 (C. B. 5, p. 148) be adhered to; and that the owners of such bulk freight vessels be not required to readjust their invested capital to allow for the obsolescence accrued up to and including December 31, 1917.

In December, 1919, a hearing was held by this Committee at which the representatives of the various steamship companies engaged in bulk transportation of ore, coal, stone, and grain upon the Great Lakes presented affidavits, and oral testimony was taken relating to the depreciation and obsolescence of bulk freighters on the Great Lakes. As a result of that hearing the Committee held (A. R. R. 27) that the maximum life of such vessels without rebuilding was 33 years and that, therefore, a deduction of 3 per cent on account of depreciation should be allowed thereon.

The recommendation added:

The committee is therefore of the opinion that obsolescence should be limited to those cases where it can be shown that a type of vessel has been developed so much more economical than existing types that no other than the new type will be built in future, and that a sufficient number of the new type to meet traffic requirements will in all reasonable probability be built within a certain definite period, thereby forcing the older type out of useful existence.

Where in any case this condition can be shown to exist and where moreover it can be definitely determined that the established rate of depreciation will not be sufficient to return all of the capital invested as at the date of acquisition or March 1, 1913, whichever was later, by the time the vessel will be rendered useless, an addition to the regular rate to cover this obsolescence may probably be allowed, thus permitting the spread of the foreseen loss over the period from the present time until the loss occurs instead of requiring the entire amount of such loss to be deducted in the year in which the vessel is finally scrapped or salvaged. The amount of this allowance, however, must be determined upon the basis of the facts in each particular case; that is, the type of the vessel in question, the fitness for possible use in other lines of transportation, and the date when it can be definitely foreseen that she will be no longer commercially useful in this particular line of traffic.

In accordance with this recommendation the owners of the bulk freighters were called upon by the Unit to establish the facts indicated therein as essential to the allowance of a deduction for obsolescence. At the same time these owners were advised, as a result of the opinion of the Solicitor of the Bureau rendered June 23, 1921 (Sol. Op. 114), that, if deductions for obsolescence were claimed for the year 1918 and subsequent years, they would be required to adjust their invested capital for the year 1917 by deducting therefrom the obsolescence which had accrued up to and including December 31, 1917. The owners took the position that no readjustment of invested capital for the years prior to 1918 was contemplated or required either by A. R. R. 27 or Sol. Op. 114 and petitioned the Committee for a reconsideration of A. R. R. 27 and a restatement of the rule as to treatment of obsolescence in more definite form.

In connection with their petition the representatives of the owners filed numerous affidavits. These affidavits were supplemented by an oral hearing held by the Committee in January, 1922.

At the oral hearing there were present individuals representing directly or indirectly 75 per cent of the bulk freight traffic on the Great Lakes.

The testimony of all the witnesses is in striking accord as to existence, date of commencement, date of termination, and method of computation of obsolescence for the various types of Great Lake freighters, and the evidence may be briefly summarized as follows:

Up to 1905 all bulk freighters on the Great Lakes were of the beam and stanchion type of construction and ranged in carrying capacity from 5,000 to 6,900 tons. About 1905 the arch type of construction was introduced and larger vessels, ranging from 7,000 to 10,000 tons carrying capacity, began to be constructed. Owing to the change of type, the depth of the channels and the size of the wharfing, loading, and unloading facilities, doubts for some time were entertained as to the practicability of the larger boats and they did not demonstrate their practicability and dominate the lake traffic until the year 1910. Since 1910, vessels ranging from 11,000 to 13,000 tons capacity have been built, the average date of construction being 1914, and there are now 57 of these largest size vessels in service. No vessels larger than these have yet made their appearance. There is no obsolescence of any of these vessels for the first five years from the average date of construction, obsolescence for the next five years is slight, and from the tenth year on the obsolescence becomes more rapid and is progressive throughout the remainder of the useful life of the vessel, but any attempt to compute the actual rate of progression would be too complicated for practical use, and, therefore, obsolescence should be computed at a uniform rate over the entire period of its existence, or for such portion thereof as the law allows. The average term of usefulness of all of these vessels is approximately 20 years and at the end of 20 years they have a remaining value of 20 per cent of their original cost. If they are retained in service beyond the twentieth year, they lose value at the rate of one-thirteenth of the remaining value of the 20 per cent. If they become obsolete and are junked in less than 20 years, 4 per cent of the cost should be added to the value at the end of 20 years for each year less than 20 years.

The following composite table compiled from figures furnished by certain of the companies shows the average gross freights per mile, expenses, and net earnings for the various classes of vessels:

		Gross freights per mile.	Expenses.	Net earnings.
		Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
Over 10,000 tonners.....	1001	18.9x	11.2x	7.7x
10,000 tonners.....	800	14.9x	9.7x	5.2x
9,000 to 9,500 tonners.....	800	14.4x	9.7x	4.7x
8,000 to 8,500 tonners.....	800	11.8x	8.8x	3.0x
7,000 to 7,500 tonners.....	800	11.2x	8.5x	2.7x
6,000 to 6,500 tonners.....	800	11.9x	9.9x	2.0x
5,000 to 5,500 tonners.....	401	10.0x	9.0x	x

A table showing the corresponding figures for the intermediate tonnages was found to be too complicated and to show no material variations.

A statement furnished by A, auditor for the M Company, showed somewhat higher figures in all instances, but the increases were shown to be due to the fact that the M Company does not carry total loss insurance, which is generally carried on these vessels, resulting in a saving of about  $x$  cents a mile, and to more efficient operation. With the necessary allowance for these factors, the figures corresponded very closely to those shown by the composite figures of the companies named and the proportions as between the various classes of vessels were closely preserved.

An examination of this table shows clearly that so soon as enough vessels of a larger class, say of the 10,000 tonners, capable of earning  $5.2x$  cents net gross freight per mile, to meet the requirements of the traffic, have been constructed, the 5,000 tonners having a net earning capacity of only  $x$  cents will become economically impossible and will be driven out of business, and that if this occurs prior to the expiration of the period of 33 years, which has been accepted as the physical life of this class of vessels, there will be an amount, in excess of the junk value plus the depreciation which has been taken, for which no deduction will have been allowed. To illustrate: A 10,000-ton vessel built in December, 1910, will become obsolete on January 1, 1935. She will then be 24 years old, and, if the original owner continued in such ownership, he will have deducted 72 per cent for physical depreciation. By the time this 10,000-ton vessel is 24 years old she has a residual value of 14 per cent of the cost (computed on the basis of 20 per cent residual value when 20 years old). Adding together the 72 per cent for depreciation and the 14 per cent of residual value, we have 86 per cent of her cost accounted for and there remains 14 per cent to be deducted for obsolescence, to be spread evenly over the years 1917 to 1934, inclusive, or over such portion thereof as the law may provide. Again, a 5,000-ton vessel built in December, 1900, will become obsolete on January 1, 1922. She will then be 21 years old, and, if the original owner remains in such ownership, he will have deducted 63 per cent for physical depreciation. By the time this vessel is 21 years of age she has a residual value of about 18 per cent of cost (computed on the basis of 20 per cent residual value when 20 years old). Adding together the 63 per cent for depreciation and the 18 per cent of residual value, we have 81 per cent of her cost accounted for and there remains 19 per cent to be deducted for obsolescence, to be spread over the years 1910 to 1921, inclusive, or such portion thereof as the law may provide.

The evidence as to the average dates of construction and the dates of commencement and dates of determination of obsolescence for the various classes of vessels may be summarized as follows:

Tons.	Average date of construction.	Date obsolescence attaches.	Date when vessels will be obsolete.
5,000 to 5,900.....	1901	Jan. 1, 1910	Jan. 1, 1922
6,000 to 6,900.....	1903	Jan. 1, 1910	Jan. 1, 1923
7,000 to 7,900.....	1908	Jan. 1, 1915	Jan. 1, 1925
8,000 to 8,900.....	1908	Jan. 1, 1915	Jan. 1, 1927
9,000 to 9,900.....	1909	Jan. 1, 1917	Jan. 1, 1930
10,000.....	1909	Jan. 1, 1917	Jan. 1, 1935
Over 10,000.....	1914	.....	.....

The uniformity of the testimony upon the above points and the character and qualifications of the witnesses lead the Committee inevitably to the conclusion that these figures may be accepted for the purpose of computing obsolescence upon the various classes of vessels. The Committee is also convinced by the evidence that it is impracticable and unnecessary to compute the dates for smaller classes or for individual vessels.

In Sol. Op. 114, rendered at the request of the Income Tax Unit following A. R. R. 27, the Solicitor of the Bureau of Internal Revenue held that obsolescence should be spread over the entire period from date of commencement to the date it matured into obsolescence and that only that portion of obsolescence which accrued subsequent to January 1, 1918, could be taken in the returns for 1918 and subsequent years, any obsolescence not thus deductible being deducted as a loss in the year in which the vessel was junked.

The correctness of this ruling is attacked in the motion for reconsideration, it being contended that it was the purpose and intent of the provisions of section 214(a)8 and section 234(a)7 of the Act of February 24, 1919, that all of the obsolescence should be deducted in the period subsequent to January 1, 1918.

The Committee has carefully considered the ruling laid down in Sol. Op. 114 and has reached the conclusion that the rule there stated is the only one possible under the law. The Act of August 5, 1909, section 38 (second), provided for the deduction, in ascertaining net income, of "all losses actually sustained within the year and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, *including a reasonable allowance for depreciation of property, if any, * * *.*" The Act of October 3, 1913, provided (Section II, Subdivision B) among other deductions "a reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear and tear of property arising out of its use or employment in the business," and Subdivision G (b) provided, in the case of corporations, for the deduction of "all losses sustained within the year and not compensated * * * including a reasonable allowance for depreciation by use, wear and tear of property, if any." The Act of September 8, 1916, allowed, in the case of individuals, among other deductions (sec. 5, seventh) a reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear and tear of property arising out of its use or employment in a business or trade and, in the case of corporations (sec. 12(a) second), "all losses actually sustained and charged off within the year * * * including a reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear and tear of the property arising out of its use or employment in the business or trade."

Under these several Acts the Bureau had uniformly held that the deductions for "depreciation," "exhaustion, wear and tear" were annual deductions to be made in the computation of annual net income and that the depreciation, or exhaustion, wear and tear, which was not charged off in one year could not be accumulated and taken as a deduction in a following year. With knowledge, it must be assumed, of the established practice of the Bureau in this matter the Congress included in the deductions which might be here taken for depreciation or exhaustion, wear and tear "a reasonable allowance for obsolescence" (secs. 214(a)8, and 234(a)7, Act of February 24, 1919). The language employed is significant, "a reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear and tear of property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence." This language signifies that it was not the intent to add a new kind of deduction but to permit the inclusion of a different element, to wit, "obsolescence," in exhaustion, wear and tear. No different method of computing the deduction for obsolescence than that theretofore used in the case of exhaustion, wear and tear was prescribed, and the presumption from the language employed in permitting this deduction clearly indicates that a different method was not contemplated.

The existence of obsolescence under the earlier Acts was recognized but, as it was held not to be included in the terms "depreciation" or "exhaustion, wear and tear," a deduction on account of obsolescence was only permitted when it had ripened into obsolescence. Article 178 of Regulations 33, revised, thus provides:

Amounts representing losses on account of obsolescence of physical property may be included as a deduction from gross income as a loss, provided such amounts have been recorded in the books following the condemnation and withdrawal from use of the obsolete property.

As this resulted in throwing the total deduction for obsolescence as distinguished from depreciation into one year it frequently happened that the then income was less than the allowable deduction and the cost on March 1, 1913, value was not fully returned to the taxpayer. To relieve in a measure this situation Congress provided for the recognition of obsolescence as a progressive process as distinguished from obsolescence which was accomplished status, but, as clearly pointed out in Sol. Op. 114, there is nothing in the Act to indicate that Congress intended that this provision should have a retroactive effect. The language of sections 214(a)8 and 234(a)7 of the Act of November 23, 1921, which, so far as here pertinent, does not vary from the language of the corresponding sections of the Act of February 24, 1919, confirms the Bureau in the correctness of the conclusion heretofore reached upon this point.

The Committee has carefully considered the contention made on behalf of the owners of these lake freighters that the right to deduct accumulated obsolescence in succeeding years was recognized in T. B. R. 44 (C. B. 1, p. 133) in the case of good will, trade-marks, and trade brands. The language of the concluding paragraph of that recommendation must be admitted to lend some support to the contention, but a careful examination of the whole recommendation clearly shows that such was not the intent. On page 136 it is stated:

The trend of sentiment was early shown by the action of several States upon which the distillers and dealers in liquors were counting for success, and which were classed as doubtful by the prohibition forces. Thus in January, 1918, Massachusetts, Maryland, and Kentucky, the first two of which were considered very doubtful by the prohibitionists, voted in favor of the prohibition amendment by a decisive vote. Louisiana, another doubtful State, deadlocked in January upon the amendment, and later in the year ratified. It seems certain that an unprejudiced observer would, in view of the history of the movement and the decisive action taken by these doubtful States in January, have concluded that prohibition was a certain event, which, under the terms of the amendment, would become effective within a year from its final adoption. The conclusion is, therefore, reached that it is reasonable to allow distillers and dealers in liquors to make a deduction in computing net income under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918 for any taxable year ending on or after January 31, 1918, and that the end of the period be fixed at the date upon which a taxpayer engaged as distiller or dealer in liquors discontinues such business, such date being in no case later than January 16, 1920, the date upon which prohibition by constitutional amendment becomes effective.

It is clear from this language that the Advisory Tax Board did not recognize obsolescence within the meaning of the statute as beginning prior to 1918, when the adoption of the constitutional amendment became a certainty. T. B. R. 44, therefore, is no authority for permitting the deduction of obsolescence which had accrued prior to 1918, in that and subsequent years, but must be considered only as dealing with the method of spreading the deduction over the period of obsolescence. In the method adopted it is the opinion of the Committee that it must be held to have been based wholly upon its peculiar facts and that the rule there laid down is not to be followed in other than identical cases.

The contention on behalf of the owners of lake freighters based upon the regulations governing deduction for amortization permitted by sections 214(a)9 and 234(a)8 of the Act of February 24, 1919, is without merit since the deduction expressly allowed by the statute is "of such part of the cost of such facilities or vessels as has been borne by the taxpayer," showing that a deduction of the entire amount was contemplated by the Congress.

The conclusion, however, which was drawn by the Unit from Sol. Op. 114, that, if the deduction for obsolescence were taken for the year 1918 and the following years, the invested capital for the preceding year must be readjusted to allow for the accrued obsolescence up to 1918, finds no support in that opinion or in A. R. R. 27, nor is it believed to be correct.

In article 42 of Regulations 41 it was provided:

In the computation of surplus and undivided profits, however, full recognition must first be given to expenses incurred and losses sustained from the original organization of the business concern down to the taxable year, including among such expenses and losses a reasonable allowance for depletion, depreciation, or obsolescence of property. * * *

But it is clear that the word obsolescence here was incorrectly used. Deductions for obsolescence were not permitted in terms by the Act of October 3, 1917, and in article 178 of Regulations 33, revised, construing the term "obsolescence" for the purpose of the income tax, it was prescribed:

Amounts representing losses on account of obsolescence of physical property may be included as a deduction from gross income as a loss, provided such amounts have been recorded in the books following the condemnation and withdrawal from use of the obsolete property.

Showing clearly that the word "obsolescence" was there construed as meaning obsolescence, and there is no authority for adopting a different meaning for the purpose of computing invested capital under the War Excess Profits Tax title of the Act.

Article 838, Regulations 45 (1920 edition), provides:

In the computation of earned surplus and undivided profits full recognition must first be given to all expenses incurred and losses sustained from the original organization of the corporation down to the taxable year, including among such expenses and losses reasonable allowances for depreciation, obsolescence, or depletion of property (irrespective of the manner in which such property was originally acquired). * * *

But this is no authority for requiring a deduction of accrued obsolescence prior to the year 1918. The article in question construes the Act of 1918, which expressly permitted deductions for obsolescence. And, too, the allowance provided by the statute on account of obsolescence is a "reasonable allowance." In A. R. M. 106 (C. B. 4, p. 390) the Committee expressly recognized that it would be unreasonable to require the reduction of earned surplus unless the depreciable assets of the corporation were valued on its books at the beginning of the taxable year at an amount in excess of their actual value at that time and quoted with approval the following from article 839 of Regulations 45 (1920 edition):

Adjustments in respect of depreciation or depletion in prior years will be made or permitted only upon the basis of affirmative evidence that as at the beginning of the taxable year the amount of depreciation or depletion written off in prior years was insufficient or excessive, as the case may be.]

And in an informal memorandum the Committee has expressed an opinion that:

No reduction in earned surplus should be made in any case where, because of repairs, renewals and replacements, the property as a whole remains unimpaired either in intrinsic value or efficiency.

The principle last stated is peculiarly applicable to obsolescence. Obsolescence, of which the case here presented is typical, is not like depreciation, a matter of decrease in earning power or in absolute efficiency, but only in relative efficiency. It has its origin in the fact that although the original efficiency be maintained, yet, owing to improvements in the art or changed economic conditions, a device or factor in production will eventually have to be discarded. The loss is a future loss, but for equitable reasons the statute permits it to be spread over the period for which it can be foreseen, and allows the portion assignable to the period subsequent to December 31, 1917, to be deducted pro rata over such period.

In the instant case the vessels of the 5,000-ton class will to-day net  $x$  cents freight per mile, as when they were first constructed. Their intrinsic value is unimpaired, but, because the newer and larger type will earn from six to eight times as much, it is evident that, when the number of larger vessels becomes sufficient to handle the carrying trade of the Great Lakes, the smaller vessels will become economically impossible of operation and will necessarily be discarded or junked. Under the principle laid down in A. R. M. 106, as subsequently explained, therefore, there is neither justification nor reason in requiring the reduction of the invested capital in the case of these bulk freighters prior to the time such deductions were actually taken in the computation of net income.

It is, therefore, recommended, upon reconsideration of A. R. R. 27, that obsolescence upon bulk-freight vessels upon the Great Lakes be accepted as established by the evidence now on file; that such obsolescence be computed in the case of the various types and sizes of such vessels in accordance with the above recommendation; that Solicitor's Opinion 114 be adhered to; and that the owners of such bulk-freight vessels be not required to readjust their invested capital to allow for the obsolescence accrued up to and including December 31, 1917.

Revenue Acts of 1917, 1918, and 1921.

Depreciation of fixed assets continues whether a taxpayer earns an income or suffers a loss, and its earned surplus should be reduced on account of depreciation, although it sustained a loss for the taxable year. In determining invested capital for subsequent years, the paid-in capital and surplus of the taxpayer are not affected by such depreciation, but if this depreciation has more than exhausted earned surplus, the deficit thus caused must be made good out of the earnings of the company before any earned surplus can be included in invested capital.

Amortization allowances deducted in ascertaining net profits for the purpose of the munition manufacturer's tax act (Title III of the Revenue Act of 1916) do not affect "invested capital" under the Revenue Act of 1918.

The munition manufacturer's tax was laid "upon the entire net profits actually received or accrued" from the sale or disposition of specific munitions, and it was provided in section 202:

That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such articles manufactured within the United States, the following items: * * * (f) A reasonable allowance according to the conditions peculiar to each concern, for amortization of the values of buildings and machinery, account being taken of the exceptional depreciation of special plants.

It is apparent from this language that the amortization allowance in question was authorized for the purpose of computing "net profits," not "net income." The right to make a deduction for amortization in computing net income for the income tax did not exist and was repeatedly denied by the bureau prior to the passage of the Revenue Act of 1918. It is to be noted further that the taxes imposed by Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 and Title III of the Revenue Act of 1918 were explicitly laid upon "net income," and were in a variety of ways impressed with the stamp and character of an income rather than a munition manufacturer's tax. They are in no sense mere continuations or expansions of the tax imposed by Title III of the Revenue Act of 1916. It follows, therefore, that the deduction for amortization under the munition manufacturer's tax law was not allowed for income tax purposes and should not now be permitted to affect the surplus or any other element entering into the "invested capital" employed for purposes of the war profits and excess profits taxes.

This conclusion is supported by the character of the amortization allowance in question. It was in many respects quite dissimilar from the depreciation and depletion allowances. It was not based upon the fact that plant and equipment acquired in the year 1916 or earlier for the manufacture of munitions, actually depreciated in use or market value during the taxable year 1916. There was in general no such depreciation in value or impairment of useful life. Account was taken "of the exceptional depreciation of special plants" but the principal allowance was "for the amortization of the values of buildings and machinery," whether those values increased or decreased in the immediate future. The principal amortization allowance looked to the establishment of a special fund to recoup exceptional war costs when war uses had ceased; it did not imply that there had been or would be any immediate impairment of physical assets, such as is covered by the depletion allowance, or any immediate exhaustion, wear, tear, or obsolescence in excess of the amount covered by the depreciation allowance. It was, as stated, a special allowance peculiar to this tax, designed possibly to moderate the (then) exceptionally high rates of the munition manufacturer's tax.

Reference has been made in this connection to the wording of section 214 (a) (9) and section 234 (a) (8) authorizing a deduction for amortization under the Revenue Act of 1918; but upon careful examination these paragraphs are found to have no bearing upon the present case.

It is the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board, therefore, that deductions for amortization taken under the munition manufacturer's tax act do not affect the computation of the invested capital under the Revenue Act of 1918 of the corporations which took such deductions.

REVENUE ACTS OF 1916 AND 1917.

In re: Additional income and excess profits taxes for 1917 and 1918 and munition taxes for 1916 and 1917 assessed against the M Company.

The Committee has had under consideration the informal appeal of the M Company against the assessment of additional income and excess profits taxes for 1917 and 1918 and of munition taxes for 1916 and 1917.

Four questions were raised by the taxpayer: (1) Liability to munition taxes; (2) value of assets turned over to the corporation on organization; (3) a deduction taken in 1918, covering so-called copper replacement liability; and (4) losses upon the sale of the property. The Unit concedes the correctness of the deduction for loss on the sale of the property, and upon the argument of the case before the Committee the appeal relative to the copper replacement liability was abandoned by the attorney for the company, leaving only two questions to be decided.

The second question relates to invested capital. It appears that A, in the early part of 1916, purchased the plant and sundry assets for 11x dollars, and that in September, 1916, after rearranging and modifying the machinery and equipment and securing contracts for the manufacture of shell rings, sold the property to the M Company, receiving payment therefor in stock, the revenue agent stating that 2,750 shares of the total issue of 3,000 were turned over to A for this property. It is presumed that the other 250 shares were issued for cash, and upon the theory that the assets turned in for stock under such conditions had an actual cash value equal to the par of the stock issued therefor, the value of tangibles and intangibles acquired from A would be 14x dollars. Claim is made that the value of the intangibles was increased by A after the purchase by himself by reason of his personal services as an engineer in developing the property and perfecting certain processes for which he did not credit himself when constructing the plant and organizing the business.

The Unit concedes that so much of the increased value as represents actual additions and betterments to the plant may be regarded as invested capital and in this view the Committee concurs. However, in the absence of proof as to additions and betterments made, the Committee is of the opinion that the difference between the purchase price of 11x dollars in the early part of 1916 and the selling price in September, 1916, constitutes an intangible asset or good will subject to the 20 per cent. limitation under the 1917 Act.

The Committee therefore recommends that the action of the Unit with respect to invested capital be sustained.

Held, that appreciation of good will and tangible property determined by appraisal against which a stock dividend was issued can not be allowed under article 42 of Regulations 41 and 840 of Regulations 45 as invested capital for excess profits tax purposes.

The M Company was incorporated in 188-. In 189- the corporation purchased from the N Company, a separate corporation, its assets valued at 150x dollars, including good will of 65x dollars for which there was issued 150x dollars in common stock. The item of good will was subsequently written down to x dollars.

In 1912 the corporation had an appraisal made and increased its surplus through this appraisal by setting up good will at 500x dollars and tangible assets at 150x dollars. Against this increase in surplus there was issued, by way of stock dividend, 400x dollars in preferred stock and 250x dollars in common stock. The revenue agent, who made an examination of the taxpayer's books, disallowed all of the appreciation for good will except 65x dollars, which had been acquired by the issuance of stock in the purchase of the assets of the N Company in 189-, and all of the appreciation in tangible property which was not clearly shown to have been paid in and thereby properly credited to surplus.

The taxpayer, in filing his returns for 1917 and 1918, claimed the total appreciation both for good will and tangible property, applying, however, the statutory limitation of 20 per cent for good will in 1917 and 25 per cent in 1918.

Under assessment by the Income Tax Unit, which sustained the findings of the revenue agent, the taxpayer submitted evidence in the form of an affidavit signed by the president of the company, showing that good will aggregating in value 95x dollars had been actually acquired for cash in addition to the 65x dollars good will acquired for stock as above stated. The Income Tax Unit thereupon revised its assessment and allowed the taxpayer for invested capital purposes a total good-will valuation of 160x dollars. The taxpayer has appealed from this revised assessment and now claims the full appreciation made in 1912 for both tangible and intangible properties, subject only to the statutory limitations of 20 per cent and 25 per cent for the years 1917 and 1918, respectively.

Article 42 of Regulations 41 provides that—

If value appreciation of a kind not subject to income tax (other than that allowed under article 55) has been taken up in the accounts a deduction must be made in respect of such appreciation so taken up.

Article 55 provides that—

Tangible property paid in for stock or shares prior to January 1, 1914, must be valued at either (a) the actual cash value of such property on January 1, 1914, or (b) the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, whichever is lower. This is one of the few cases in which the law permits allowance to be made for appreciation, and here no appreciation can be recognized unless the original stock or shares were specifically issued in exchange for such tangible property.

It must be observed, first, that the appreciation of taxpayer's assets as of January 31, 1912, was not subject to income tax, and, second, that only tangible property may be appreciated to (a) the actual cash value of such property on January 1, 1914, or to (b) the par value of the stock specifically issued therefor, whichever is lower. It can not be claimed that a stock dividend issued against a surplus reflecting an appraisal of both tangible and intangible property is an original issue of stock specifically exchanged for tangible property.

Article 64 (2) provides that—

Amounts expended in the past for good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other intangible assets of a like character, are controlled by the language of the statute which provides that such assets "shall be included in invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property." The Commissioner of Internal Revenue will recognize additions to invested capital on account of intangible assets only if such assets have been explicitly paid for in the manner prescribed by the statute. Where expenditures have been made for the general development of intangible assets and charged as current expense, no readjustment thereof will be allowed.

From the facts as stated, the Income Tax Unit, in its revised assessment letter, allowed an aggregate for good will of 160x dollars. With the exception of 65x dollars of this amount, the good will so allowed was acquired for cash prior to March 1, 1913, according to affidavit of the president of the company. These items were properly restored to invested capital under article 64(2) and (3). The item 65x dollars for good will on the books of the N Company was acquired for stock. The value of this item at date of acquisition is a matter of proof. Under article 57 of Regulations 41 evidence sufficient to determine proper allowance as invested capital has not been submitted to the Committee.

The Committee therefore sustains the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing, under article 42 of Regulations 41 and under article 840 of Regulations 45, appreciation of either good will or tangible property. The Committee further sustains the Unit in allowing, under article 64(2) and (3) of Regulations 41 and article 842 of Regulations 45, the good will acquired for cash prior to March 1, 1913. Allowance for invested capital of tangible or intangible property acquired for stock is subject to the limitations prescribed by articles 55 and 57 of Regulations 41.

The opinion of the Committee is requested whether the M Company should receive the benefit of an addition to invested capital, for excess profits tax purposes, by submitting amended returns for the years 1916 and 1917; in which returns a deduction for amortization, claimed and allowed in the original returns, should be eliminated.

The facts as stated are that the above-mentioned company manufactured munitions. In its income tax returns for the years 1916 and 1917, the company has claimed amortization of the facilities for their manufacture in the same amount as appeared upon their munition manufacturer's returns and the taxpayer now seeks to eliminate from its income tax returns the amount of such amortization which, it is said, has been included therein.

This request on the part of the taxpayer has heretofore been denied by the Unit.

Title III of the Revenue Act of 1916, known as the "Munition Manufacturer's Tax," imposes a tax upon the entire net profits received or accrued from the sale or disposition of certain specified articles of munitions manufactured within the United States, and for the purpose of computing such net profits permits certain deductions, among which, under section 302 (f), is—

A reasonable allowance according to the conditions peculiar to each concern, for amortization of buildings and machinery, account being taken of the exceptional depreciation of special plants; and Regulations 39 promulgated under the provisions of the Act, provide more specifically, in article 21, what shall constitute such "amortization" and how the amount thereof shall be determined.

The Revenue Act of 1916, both as passed originally and as amended by the Revenue Act of 1917, not only does not provide specifically for any allowance for amortization for income tax purposes, but in Regulations 33, revised, promulgated thereunder, specifically prohibits such an allowance although recognizing an allowable deduction on account of depreciation in the value of any class of property subject to wear and tear.

Article 162 of Regulations 33, revised, provides that:

The deduction to be allowed relates solely to loss due to use, wear and tear, and the matter of obsolescence is not relevant inasmuch as when the property becomes obsolete a deduction for the loss sustained thereby, representing the difference between the cost and the amount of depreciation previously charged off or which should have been charged off in prior years, will be allowed.

It appears that in preparing its munitions tax returns and its income and excess profits tax returns, this taxpayer deducted in its income tax return the same amount which had been deducted in its munitions tax return; such amount including a charge for amortization (or obsolescence), as well as a charge for depreciation, and this charge, in the audit of the taxpayer's income tax return by the Unit, was allowed as a deduction although obviously the Unit was in error in making such an allowance.

It is, therefore, recommended that this taxpayer be permitted to file amended income tax returns for the years affected, from which returns shall be excluded as deductions the charges for amortization included within the returns as originally filed, and that the deductions thus excluded shall be allowed as additions to the invested capital of the taxpayer for profits tax purposes.

Where a corporation claims as an addition to its invested capital for 1917 and subsequent years the excess of the value of its patterns over the value at which they have been carried on its books, and such claim comes within the provisions of articles 840 (2) and 841 (1) of Regulations 45, amended returns may be filed for each year for which an erroneous return has been made both before and after March 1, 1913. Any overpayment of taxes for the years 1917 to 1920 shown on the basis of the amended returns may be made the subject of a claim for refund.

Recommended, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing the M Company its claim for capitalization of amounts expended prior to January 1, 1909, for the purpose of increasing the circulation of its paper be sustained under articles 840 and 841 of Regulations 45.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the right to capitalize amounts expended prior to January 1, 1909, which the corporation claims were for the purpose of increasing the circulation of the newspaper published by it.

The M Company was incorporated in 188— with a capital stock of  $x$  dollars, and has been since its inception a close corporation. It is claimed that the profits of the company have been used to build up its business and that no additional capital has ever been paid in. It is further stated that due to the fact that the corporation stock has always been closely held no distinct effort has been made to separate capital expenditures from current expenses in years gone by. The company proposed to include in invested capital an item of  $20x$  dollars as an intangible asset representing the cost of acquiring its circulation list. This amount is determined by an analysis of the records of expenditures of the company from the beginning of its business to December 31, 1908. It is stated this analysis separates all expenditures which have been made for maintenance of old circulation and for the acquirement of additional circulation and all expenditures which can be properly classed as chargeable to advertising.

In the cost of circulation the appellant has included cost of gathering and disseminating news, cost of editorials, and other features and general expenses. Expenses have been apportioned between "advertising" and "cost of circulation" on the basis of the column devoted to each in the daily issues. In setting up the capital expenditures of each year to cover the "cost of increased circulation" the appellant has used as a basis that portion of the entire circulation cost of each year as is represented by the average daily increase over the previous year divided by the average daily circulation of the current year. On this basis of apportionment exhibits have been submitted for each year from 188— to 1908, inclusive, and on basis of these exhibits its original claim for invested capital amounting to  $20x$  dollars has been amended to  $10x$  dollars.

The company claims to have made a consistent effort to increase the circulation of its publication, through the inclusion in its columns of certain special features which, in themselves while nonrevenue producing, appealed to the home. The company claims never to have abnormally increased the cost of acquiring circulation by spectacular methods such as offering of premiums, prizes, bonuses, etc., and that as a result the newspaper has a stable home circulation and an advertising clientele consisting of not only local advertising but those located in a near-by city. It is noted the amount claimed as invested capital on account of its expenditures for circulation is limited to the period prior to the year 1909.

The Income Tax Unit does not question the value of the circulation in commanding high rates for advertising, nor does it question the propriety of capitalizing such amounts as can be determined to have been expended specifically for the increase in circulation, but contends that it is not practicable to ascribe the increase in circulation to any specific part of the paper or to any particular feature or features, notwithstanding the fact that the features appear to have been used with that sole end in view.

This Committee has, in several instances, stated that in its opinion expenditures made prior to 1909 in the development of an intangible asset and distinctly set aside at the time and capitalized by the issuance of stock gave a definite right to a claim for additional invested capital. In the instant case, however, the corporation exercised its option in charging to current expenses not only the cost of publication but whatever direct cost there may have been incident to building up a large circulation list.

Article 840 of Regulations 45 provides, in part, as follows:

(3) Amounts which have been expended in the past for intangible property of any kind can be restored to capital or surplus account only to the extent that the corporation specifically paid such amounts for the intangible property as such.

Article 841 makes further provision that:

Additions to surplus which a corporation may desire to make under the preceding article (840) fall broadly into two classes:

(1) To correct returns of net income for prior years in which actual errors have been made, as, for example, where excessive depreciation has been deducted, additions to plant and equipment or other capital charges have been charged off as an expense, inventories have been taken upon a wrong basis of valuation, etc.

(2) To reinstate in surplus deductions from income which are, as a matter of good accounting, to some extent optional, such as experimental expenses, patent litigation, development of good will through advertising or otherwise, etc.

Appellant's claim must of necessity rest on the conditions stated in paragraph 3 of article 840, but the article further provides that:

Adjustments falling in class (2) can not be permitted, as in such cases it is considered that the corporation has exercised a binding option in deducting such expenses from income. An election of this sort which was made concurrently with the transaction can not now be revised, and amended returns in respect thereof can not be accepted.

In the instant case the taxpayer has not shown the extent to which the corporation specifically paid amounts for intangible property as such or for the development of an intangible asset, nor has it shown that such expenditures, when made, were currently set aside and capitalized. The expenditures have been apportioned under the exhibit submitted between "advertising" and "cost of circulation" on the basis of the columns devoted to each in the daily issues, and the entire circulation cost of each year is represented by the average daily increase over the previous year divided by the average daily circulation of the current year. As above suggested, such a basis of claim for an intangible value does not meet the requirements of the regulations.

The Committee, accordingly, recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing the M Company its claim for capitalization of amounts expended prior to January 1, 1909, for the purpose of increasing the circulation of its paper, be sustained under articles 840 and 841 of Regulations 45.

47-21-1937: A. R. M. 141.

Held, in the matter of the contention of the M Company and the O Company, taxpayers engaged in the publication of newspapers, that moneys expended out of earned surplus or current earnings for the sole purpose of building up the circulation structure may be added to capital invested when proper proof of such expenditures is made and amended returns for prior years have been filed, and that the circulation structure so built up is intangible property as defined in the regulations.

The Committee has had under consideration the general question presented by the M Company and the O Company, taxpayers engaged in the publication of newspapers, as to whether items expended for circulation building are part of invested capital; also whether the circulation structure should be considered as tangible or intangible property.

During the latter part of July a hearing was granted to the parties, at which time they were represented by attorneys.

It appears that many corporations engaged in the publication of newspapers have built their circulation structure through the expenditure of earnings. Some papers, however, acquired for a cash consideration this structure. It is contended that a newspaper concern can not make any money until the circulation structure is established. The extent to which it can sell advertising space and the price which it can get for that space are dependent on the size and character of that structure—that is, the form of circulation. There is no doubt that this structure is property which produces earnings on which the corporation pays tax, and there is no doubt that the amount of the earnings is measured to a great extent by the character of the circulation structure, and that the extent and character of the structure are dependent on the expenditures made to build or to purchase it.

It was pointed out that in the sale of newspaper property the principal thing considered by the purchaser is the circulation structure. In many cases the expenditures made for this structure have not been reflected in surplus, due to the concern's bookkeeping practice.

It has been the policy of the Bureau in instances where the expenditures made in building the circulation structure are not reflected in surplus on the books of account, to give special treatment and assess the taxes under the provisions of section 210 of the 1917 Act and sections 327 and 328 of the 1918 Act. It is now contended that this practice should be discontinued and that corporations publishing newspapers should be permitted to increase the surplus account by an amount sufficient to cover the expenditures for building the circulation structure, and that the regulations which classify the circulation structure as intangible property should be repealed.

In order to reach a correct conclusion in this matter it is necessary to examine the provisions of the statute defining tangible and intangible property; also the provisions defining invested capital.

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides that capital invested includes the following:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, the actual cash value of such property as of January first, nineteen hundred and fourteen, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor), and (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year: * * *

(b) The good will, trade-marks, trade brands, the franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, shall be included as invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash or tangible property, the value of such good will, trade-mark, trade brand, franchise, or intangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment * * *

Article 47, Regulations 41, defines tangible property and intangible property as follows:

The term "other intangible property" as used in section 207 will be construed to mean property of a character similar to good will, trade-marks, and the other specific kinds of property enumerated in the same clause. With respect to property not clearly of such a character, rulings will be issued as occasion may demand to indicate whether it shall be regarded as tangible or intangible.

Section 326(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides that invested capital includes the following:

- (1) Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares;
- (2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor * * *;
- (3) Paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year.

Section 325(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides, in part, as follows:

The term "intangible property" means patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulae, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like property;
The term "tangible property" means stocks, bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, bills and accounts receivable, leaseholds and other property other than intangible property.

Article 811 of Regulations 45 provides, in part, as follows:

* * * Associated Press, United Press, and similar franchises, and subscription lists and mailing lists are intangible property.

Article 840, Regulations 45, provides in part as follows:

A corporation's books of account will be presumed to show the facts. If it claims that its capital or surplus account is understated the burden of proof will rest upon it. Additions to such accounts will be accepted to the following extent:

(3) Amounts which have been expended in the past for intangible property of any kind can be restored to capital or surplus account only to the extent that the corporation specifically paid such amounts for the intangible property as such. For provisions relating to patents see article 843.

(4) Adjustments necessary to correct other errors found in the books of account may be made. But see the following article.

Article 841, Regulations 45, reads in part as follows:

Additions to surplus which a corporation may desire to make under the preceding article fall broadly into two classes:

(1) To correct returns of net income for prior years in which actual errors have been made, as for example where excessive depreciation has been deducted, additions to plant and equipment or other capital charges have been charged off as an expense, inventories have been taken upon a wrong basis of valuation, etc.

(2) To reinstate in surplus deductions from income which are as a matter of good accounting to some extent optional, such as experimental expenses, patent litigation, development of good will through advertising or otherwise, etc.

Adjustments falling in class (1) will be permitted for all years whether before or after March 1, 1913, provided amended returns of net income are filed for each year in which an erroneous return has been made. * * * Adjustments falling in class (2) can not be permitted, as in such cases it is considered that the corporation has exercised a binding option in deducting such expenses from income. An election of this sort which was made concurrently with the transaction can not now be revised, and amended returns in respect thereof can not be accepted.

From the foregoing it will be noted that earned surplus is a part of the invested capital. It does not matter whether this earned surplus is invested in plant and equipment or is retained in cash. The Bureau has consistently held that amounts which have been expended in the past for intangible property of any kind can be restored to surplus account to the extent that the corporation specifically paid such amounts in cash for the intangible property as such. Restoration to surplus account can be made only when the amounts expended can be identified. The corporation must, in order to restate the surplus account, show that the amounts expended were expended specifically for an asset whether tangible or intangible.

In a recent case decided by the Committee it was held that expenditures made for building up the circulation structure may be added to capital invested when proper proof is made. In that case the expenditures asserted were for inclusion in the columns of certain special features, the company claiming not to have resorted to any "spectacular methods such as offering of premiums, prizes, bonuses, etc." The propriety of capitalizing such amounts as can be determined to have been expended for the increase in circulation can not be questioned, but in most cases which have come before the Committee it has not been practicable to ascribe the increase in circulation to any specific part of the expenditure. The difficulty in most cases seems to be that the taxpayer can not furnish satisfactory evidence to prove its case. Each case must be adjusted and settled upon its own merits and if a taxpayer can prove the case, then the matter of restating the surplus is a simple one. If the records of any taxpayer are so kept that proof of the amount invested in the circulation structure can be made in actual figures and can be identified as specifically paid in building up the circulation structure, the Committee can not see any reason for denying such taxpayer the right to restate the surplus.

Taxpayers of this class who have not kept sufficient records and who are unable to prove their cases are entitled to the benefit of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918. The tax in these cases must be established on a comparative basis. The only proper comparatives would be such concerns as could show the cost of the circulation structure and in this way the entire capital invested may be recognized in computing the tax of a concern which can not properly prove its case.

The Committee does not think favorably of the suggestion made by the attorneys that affidavits should be secured from a large number of publishers showing the cost per subscriber of their circulation structure and the use of these affidavits in arriving at a cost per unit per subscriber for the purpose of invested capital. This basis is too speculative for use in the computation of invested capital.

After making an exhaustive study of the principle involved and the assessment of taxes against taxpayers engaged in the business of publishing newspapers, the Committee must decline to accept the view of the attorneys for the taxpayers with respect to the classification of circulation structure. The regulations properly classify such property as "intangible property." However, expenditures of an investment nature may be made a part of earned surplus upon submission of appropriate proof and the amounts so expended may be included in earned surplus whether expended for tangible or intangible property.

In view of the foregoing, the Committee is of the opinion in the matter of the argument of the M Company and the O Company, taxpayers engaged in the publication of newspapers, that moneys expended out of earned surplus or current earnings for the sole purpose of building up the circulation structure may be added to capital invested when proper proof of such expenditures is made and amended returns for prior years have been filed, and that the circulation structure so built up in intangible property as defined in the regulations.

Revenue Act of 1921.

Inquiry is made as to whether the cost of rotogravure supplements comes within the purview of A. R. M. 141 [Ruling No. 8, above], which permits taxpayers engaged in the publication of newspapers to include in their invested capital, for tax purposes, moneys expended out of earned surplus or current earnings for the sole purpose of building up the circulation structure. It is stated that newspaper publishers employ rotogravure supplements largely as a circulation stimulant.

The question to be determined in cases affected by the ruling above referred to is whether the amounts claimed as an addition to invested capital can be identified as having been expended out of earned surplus or current earnings for the sole purpose of building up the circulation structure. It is believed that rotogravure supplements constitute a part of the news service furnished by newspapers to their subscribers and are not of such a nature that the expense thereof can be said to be incurred solely for the purpose of building up the circulation structure. It, therefore, follows that the moneys expended therefor may not be added to invested capital.

Any portion of such reserve which the taxpayer considers not necessary for bad debt purposes may be restored to surplus.

2-20-679: A. R. M. 12.

At the request of the Commissioner this Committee has given an oral hearing to representatives of the proprietary medicine manufacturers in general, and of the M Company in particular, upon the question of an addition to invested capital through the recognition of a portion of the amounts spent in prior years for advertising and developing trade-marks and trade brands.

It was stated at the hearing that the methods pursued by the company named above are essentially similar to those followed by many other manufacturers engaged in the same industry, and that this case is a typical one. The asset of greatest value of the M Company is a formula and trade-mark. When this asset was acquired, the product had a certain sale in limited territory. Profits from the sale of the product were reinvested in development of new territory. For instance, if the company decided that it would undertake to develop any territory where it had previously sold no goods, it would institute an intensive advertising campaign in that territory by newspaper and other advertising agencies, distribution of samples, etc. The next year some other territory would be chosen. During this period of development it is claimed that the amount expended in advertising in a given territory was far in excess of the profits made from sales in such territory, and it is, therefore, claimed that a portion of all such expenditures is in reality a capital investment and not merely expense of selling, since it is an investment from which returns are to be expected in the future rather than in the immediate present. It must be conceded that in theory some proportion of all advertising is in effect the building up of good will, but it is the judgment of the Committee that it is impossible to allocate any definite percentages as between capital investment and selling costs.

It seems clear to the Committee that no court would permit the disallowance of a proportion of reasonable advertising in a return of income on the ground that such advertising was a capital investment and not an actual necessary expense of business, and if that be true the converse must follow, namely: that the corporation can not claim that any proportion of such expense is capital investment and not business expense.

It was also brought out at the hearing that there have been a number of widely advertised trade-marks of this character sold within recent years and that such sales were usually made upon the basis of approximately a five-year return; that is to say, for a price five times the annual earning capacity. There are, therefore, satisfactory comparatives in the event that it is desired to treat other cases where there have been no sales as special cases under sections 327 and 328, since the cash paid for tangibles and intangibles affords a fair invested capital basis. It also seems reasonable to regard those cases where large sums have been spent in advertising, thereby creating a good will or earning capacity far in excess of recognizable invested capital, as being cases in which there are abnormal conditions affecting invested capital.

The Committee, therefore, recommends that the percentage of tax to income in the cases of those corporations which have an adequate recognizable invested capital be determined, and that other cases which have no such invested capital be regarded as coming within the scope of section 327 and the tax properly to be computed under section 328.

8-21-1472: A. R. R. 394.

Recommended that a corporation which issued bonds at a discount in January, 1900, and elected then to charge such discount to profit and loss for the year of issue and the next two succeeding years, may not now revise its accounts and file amended returns for the purpose of reinstating to invested capital the unexpired portion of such discount and claiming as a deduction from income that portion applicable to each year.

It appears from the records that the M Company issued bonds on January 1, 1900, to the amount of 70x dollars at a discount of 7x dollars and charged such discount to profit and loss in 1900, 1901 and 1902.

The accountants writing in behalf of the corporation stated that it was their understanding that for the purpose of computing net income the case was covered by article 544 (3) (a) of Regulations 45. The M Company in its appeal contends, in effect, that it did not follow good accounting practice in charging off the discount in question to profit and loss during the years 1900, 1901, and 1902; that recognized accounting authorities, some of whom are named and quoted, hold that discount on bonds issued should be spread over the term of the bonds, and the installments thereof charged against income each year, and that, under article 544, it did not have an option of treating all of such discount as interest expense at the date of issuance of the bonds.

Article 544 (3) (a) of Regulations 45, reads:

If bonds are issued by a corporation at a discount, the net amount of such discount is deductible as interest and should be prorated or amortized over the life of the bonds.

The Unit, in its reply of June 30, 1920, contended that article 544(3) (a) must be considered in connection with article 841, which latter article, bearing the caption "Surplus and undivided profits: limitations of addition to surplus account," provides, in part, that deductions which have been taken from income and which are as a matter of good accounting to some extent optional, such as experimental expenses, patent litigation, development of good will through advertising or otherwise, can not be reinstated in surplus, as in such cases it is considered that the corporation has exercised a binding option in deducting such expenses from income, and an election of this sort which was made concurrently with the transaction can not now be revised and amended returns in respect thereto can not be accepted.

The Solicitor of Internal Revenue, in a memorandum dated May 13, 1919, commenting on a ruling in a case similar to the one under consideration stated:

It appears that the corporation in this case had an option as to the method it would adopt in handling entries of the discount on the bonds which it issued. Two methods were available:

First. To treat the discount as interest paid in advance to be amortized over the life of the bonds.

Second. To charge the discount as a loss in its profit and loss account.

The corporation exercised its option by adopting the second method. It did so apparently to lessen its income for the year the transaction took place. It now seeks to adopt the first method and desires to amend its 1917 return accordingly. The effect of this procedure would be that the discount item would be taken from the losses (profit and loss account), thus diminishing the losses and thereby increasing its surplus account, and indirectly its invested capital.

Where a corporation has exercised an option as to accounting practice and such option was concurrent with the transaction, amended returns are not permissible. See article 841 of Regulations 45.

While the Committee is in accord with the contention of the M Company that it did not follow the more generally approved accounting method in charging off the discount on its bonds of January 1, 1900, as it did, that fact alone does not entitle it now to adopt another method and adjust its accounts for the purpose of filing amended income and profits tax returns. There were at the time said bonds were issued no income tax regulations prescribing a method to be followed in the treatment of bond discount. It was entirely optional with the taxpayer as to the method it would adopt in handling entries of discount on bonds issued, and inasmuch as that option was exercised at the time the bonds were issued a different method of accounting can not now, in the opinion of the Committee, be adopted for tax purposes, which opinion is sustained by the decision in the case of the C. & A. Railroad v. United States Court of Claims (see article 149, Regulations 33, revised, issued under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended by the Revenue Act of 1917).

The Committee, therefore, recommends that the ruling of the Unit be sustained.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing for the taxable year 1917, an item of 50x dollars covering depreciation on certain patents.

In January, 1902, the M Company, then a newly organized corporation, acquired ownership of eight patents issuing therefor to A, the patentee 900x dollars of stock of the corporation. This amount was subsequently increased 2x dollars by expenses of acquisition. The patents so acquired, except one, issued in 1900, had expired prior to January 1, 1917, but as of March 1, 1913, all but one were in effect. Fifteen new patents had, however, been added to the company's patents between date of incorporation and March 1, 1913. These additional patents were not capitalized. No depreciation was taken by the taxpayer on the patents which were capitalized, until the year 1917, when 1/17 of the book value was charged to expenses notwithstanding the fact that all except one of them had expired prior to January 1, 1917.

The taxpayer relies upon articles 167 and 843 of Regulations 45, and upon Treasury Decision 2929, amending article 163 of Regulations 45, in support of his action.

It is assumed the actual value at date of acquisition of the patents by the issuance of stock has been determined by the Income Tax Unit, since this question is not at issue before the Committee.

The case then comes clearly under the provisions of article 174, paragraph 552, and article 167, paragraph 494, Regulations 33, revised, governing the collection of the income tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917.

Article 174, paragraph 552, provides:

An allowable deduction for any given year for return of capital invested in patents at time of issue, will be an amount equal to 1/17 of the actual cost in cash or its equivalent of such patents.

This paragraph of article 174, was subsequently amended by Advisory Tax Board Recommendation 59, September 9, 1919, to provide as follows:

Depreciation of patents acquired prior to March 1, 1913, should be taken on the basis of their fair market value as of that date, if affirmative and satisfactory evidence of such value is offered.

Article 167, paragraph 494, provides:

Good will represents the value attached to a business over and above the value of the physical property and is such an intangible asset that it is not subject to wear and tear and no claim for depreciation in connection therewith can be allowed. Any loss resulting from or on account of investment of good will can be determined only when the property or business to which the good will attaches, is sold or disposed of, in which case the profit or loss will be determined upon the basis of the value of the assets, including good will, if acquired prior to March 1, 1913, or their cost if acquired subsequent to that date.

The basis for deduction authorized under the provisions of article 174 is the return of capital on an asset, the use of which in the trade or business is definitely limited in duration. The taxpayer did not elect, during the life of the patents acquired in 1902, to provide for this return of capital. Had he made this provision his surplus for invested capital purposes under the Revenue Act, would have been correspondingly reduced.

He, therefore, can not now claim in a high taxable year, after the expiration of the life of the patents, an amount equivalent to 1/17 of the cost, thereby securing the benefit not only of a reduction in his taxable income for the year 1917, but the advantage of the investment which in value is subject only to the definite limitations prescribed by the Act and the regulations.

The Committee therefore sustains the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing the item of 50x dollars claimed by the taxpayer in the taxable year 1917, as a deduction based on 1/17 of the cost of said patents.

13-21-1536: A. R. R. 436

Recommended that 48x dollars be allowed as the value of patents acquired for stock on the basis that the preferred stock was worth par and the common about one-third of par per share as disclosed by collateral stock market quotations at the date of the organization of the M Company in 189— and that the invested capital should not be reduced by the value of patents expired.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, from the action of the Unit in reducing the company's invested capital for 1917.

A single issue is presented in the appeal, namely, the amount of invested capital represented by patents acquired on organization of the company in 189—, but this issue has two aspects: (1) Whether or not the company is entitled to any invested capital by reason of the original issue of stock for patents which have long since expired, and (2) what was the value of the patents at the time of organization.

The stock of the M Company was issued for stock of five other companies but under the authority of Regulations 41, as amended by Treasury Decision 2901, the Income Tax Unit has considered the acquisition of all of the stock of these five companies as being in effect the acquisition of their assets, and it has therefore gone behind the acquisition of stock to determine the character of the various groups of assets acquired. One of the principal groups is patents, and the question of the value of such patents at the time therefore becomes material.

The company has filed numerous affidavits and statements claiming a value of 72x dollars, representing the par value of the stock issued therefor. In the opinion of the Committee, however, appraisals, either by a board of directors at the time of purchase, which notoriously fixes the value as equal to the par value of the stock issued therefor irrespective of actual market value of assets so acquired, or by individual appraisers at a later date, are not so reliable as those made by the public at the time through the purchase and sale of the stock at or about the time of issuance.

The Unit has filed a supplemental memorandum made subsequent to the hearing of the case in which it gives a valuation on the basis of collateral stock market transactions at the date of the organization of the company as 36x dollars. This accords very closely with its revised valuation on the basis of royalties, which is 37x dollars, and in the light of earnings appears to be a much more reliable estimate of value than that claimed by the company. The value of the patents is fully demonstrated by prior earnings of the predecessor corporations and is supported by the earnings subsequent to date of acquisition by the present owner.

However, at a meeting of the board of directors in April, 1899, at which the president submitted certain correspondence with the N Company in reference to the particular business, it appears that the promoters agreed to subscribe to or cause to be subscribed to y shares of the preferred stock at par, that such stock was subscribed to at par and the amount received therefor paid into the treasury of the company as working capital. The balance of the shares of stock issued,  $7y$  shares preferred of the par value of  $35x$  dollars, and  $8y$  shares common of the par value of  $40x$  dollars, was paid over to the various companies for their assets, which consisted chiefly of patents. It is reasonable to assume that since outsiders subscribed for  $y$  shares of preferred stock at par and paid  $5x$  dollars cash into the treasury of the company, the remaining shares of the preferred stock were worth par.

No evidence has been submitted to show that any of the shares of common stock were sold to the public prior to or at the date of organization of the new company. However, it is disclosed that the shares of common stock were selling on a stock exchange soon after the new company has been organized at about one-third of par per share. Accepting this as a basis, the  $8y$  shares of common stock issued to the various companies had a fair market value of  $13x$  dollars. Arguments and affidavits have been submitted and numerous court decisions have been cited to substantiate the claim that the judgment of the board of directors fixing the value of the patents acquired at approximately  $75x$  dollars represented a true value of such patents.

The Committee can not concur in this contention for the reason stated above and, therefore, recommends that the value of the assets (patents) acquired be fixed at  $48x$  dollars, such valuation being based on the theory that if  $y$  shares of the preferred stock were sold for par and the cash paid into the treasury of the company, the remaining  $7y$  shares were worth par and the assets transferred in exchange for these shares were worth  $35x$  dollars. No better evidence being available, the collateral transactions in the common stock soon after the organization of the corporation at about one-third of par per share have been accepted as establishing the value of the common stock paid over to the various corporations in part payment for the patents in question.

The Committee, therefore, recommends that  $48x$  dollars be regarded as the value of the patents at the time of acquisition.

The next question is whether or not the company is entitled to retain this full valuation in its invested capital, notwithstanding the patents have expired.

At the outset it must be recognized that invested capital originally paid in can be reduced under only one condition—that is, that it has been returned to the stockholder through liquidation. The loss of the original capital or its exhaustion in the business does not alter its recognizable status. The only thing which can be affected by an exhaustion of capital is the earned surplus, which may be adjusted, if necessary, to cover any loss or exhaustion of original values.

The Unit in treating this case recognized the principle in article 843 of Regulations 45, namely, that patent values gradually merge into good will. It has sought, however, to apply the 20 per cent limitation provided by section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 to the good will so created. In the opinion of the Committee this application is not warranted by law, since under the express terms of the statute it is applicable only where good will is acquired for stock.

As stated in Regulations 45 and in several of the decisions of the Advisory Tax Board and the Tax Reviewers, patent value is closely analogous to good will, both in fact representing the estimated worth of a monopoly—in one case a monopoly created by law; in the other a monopoly due to circumstance.

In Tax Reviewers' Recommendation 1 (not published), approved by the former Commissioner, it was held as follows:

From the standpoint of assets a patent, and more particularly a group of patents, is closely analogous to good will. Their value is contingent upon and measured by their earning power, and whilst patents have a definite life there is a common tendency to extend that life by improvements upon the original patent, and in a successful business the patent value merges more or less completely into a trade name or other form of good will. Therefore whilst deductions in respect of depreciation of patents based upon a normal life period of seventeen years are allowable in computing net income under the several income tax Acts, such deductions are not obligatory, but are optional with each taxpayer. Where, since January 1, 1909, a taxpayer has exercised that option to his own benefit in computing his taxable net income, an amount so deducted can not now be restored in computing invested capital. Where the cost of patents has been charged against surplus or otherwise disposed of in such a manner as not to benefit the taxpayer in computing his taxable net income since January 1, 1909, any amount so written off may be restored in computing invested capital if it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the amount so written off represented a mere book entry ascribable to a conservative policy of management or accounting and did not represent a realized shrinkage in the value of such assets. Any amount so restored may not be written off by way of deductions from taxable net income in any subsequent year or years. Where a taxpayer has charged to current expenses the cost of developing or protecting patents, no amount in respect thereof expended since January 1, 1909, can be restored in computing invested capital, and in respect to expenditures made prior to January 1, 1909, the taxpayer now seeking to restore them must be prepared to show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that all such items are proper capital expenditures.

The correct computation of surplus and undivided profits can not be said to require a deduction in respect of expiration of patents, and it follows therefore that where a taxpayer in the exercise of his option has not written down the cost of patents, it is unnecessary to reduce the surplus and undivided profits in computing invested capital whether the patents have been acquired for stock or shares or for cash or other tangible property. Due consideration will be given to the facts in any case in which the foregoing rule is obviously unreasonable.

This conclusion is supported by Advisory Tax Board Memoranda 17 and 22 (not published), and is not inconsistent with articles 839 and 840 of Regulations 45. There is no warrant in the law or regulations for reducing earned surplus by an amount greater than is necessary to make good the impaired cost of the original asset.

The Committee therefore recommends that the value herein fixed as the original value of the patents at the time paid in for stock be recognized in the invested capital for the year 1917.

The claim of the X Company for the inclusion in its invested capital for the year 1917 of the amount of 6x dollars, representing appreciation in the value of its property, which appreciation had been taken up on its books in 1914 and returned as taxable income for that year, should be denied for the reason that such tax was erroneously assessed and collected. The taxpayer is entitled to a claim for refund.

Reference is made to the claim of the X Company for the inclusion in its invested capital for the year 1917 of an amount of x dollars representing appreciation in the value of a certain part of its property which was taken up on the books in 1914 and returned as a part of its taxable net income for that year, in accordance with article 107 of Regulations 33, which reads as follows:

Art. 107. It will be noted from these definitions that the gross income embraces not only the operating revenues but also income, gains, or profits from all other sources, such as rentals, royalties, interest and dividends from stock owned in other corporations, and appreciation in values of assets if taken up on the books of account as gain; also profits made from the sale of assets, investments, etc.

This item was brought to the attention of the Bureau during 1918 and was disallowed in the computation of invested capital for the year 1917. An appeal was made to the Advisory Tax Board, but no evidence has been found that would warrant a change in the original decision of this office.

Regulations 33, from which article 107 is quoted above, were issued in January, 1914, and in March, 1915, the question of the taxability of appreciation of property when taken up on the books of a taxpayer was decided adversely to the Government by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of the Baldwin Locomotive Works v. McCoach, Collector (221 Fed., 59). This decision was embodied in Treasury Decision 2185, issued April, 1915, which held that an "increase in the valuation of assets on the books of the corporation is not income received during the year, where there is no addition to the plant and all that was done was to revalue the property." It appears, therefore, that the return for 1914 was made in accordance with the regulations of the department, but that shortly after the filing of the return the court decision above mentioned made it necessary for the Treasury Department to rescind the provisions of article 107, of Regulations 33, in so far as they related to the taxation of unrealized appreciation. Between April 1, 1915, and the date upon which the tax for 1914 became due and payable a claim might have been filed for abatement of the proportion of the tax represented by the item of appreciation, and since the date of the payment of the tax the company was entitled to file a claim for refund. This right continues for a period of five years from date upon which the return was due.

The computation of invested capital for the year 1917 is to be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Act of October 3, 1917, and Regulations No. 41, issued thereunder. In article 42 of these Regulations it is provided, inter alia, that—

If value appreciation of a kind not subject to income tax (other than that allowed under article 55) has been taken up on the accounts, a deduction must be made in respect of such appreciation so taken up.

As shown above, the appreciation written up on the books in 1914 was not properly subject to income tax. The exception to this rule as found in article 55 referred to in the quotation above reads as follows:

Tangible property paid in for stock or shares prior to January 1, 1914, must be valued at either (a) the actual cash value of such property on January 1, 1914, or (b) the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, whichever is lower.

This regulation is based upon the statutory provision defining invested capital, which is found in section 207 (a) (2) of the Act of October 3, 1917:

The actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment (but in case such tangible property was paid in prior to January 1, 1914, the actual cash value of such property as of January 1, 1914, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor).

This provision of the law does not allow for any general appreciation of property as at January 1, 1914, and the inclusion of appreciation in invested capital is limited in effect to cases where capital stock has been issued specifically in payment for tangible assets in an amount which at par exceeded the actual cash value of the property at the date of the transaction, but where between such date and January 1, 1914, the property had appreciated in value. In such a case appreciation in an amount not in excess of the difference between the actual cash value of such property at the date of its acquisition and the par value of the stock issued specifically for the property may be included in invested capital. The case does not come within this exception.

The claim for inclusion in invested capital of  $x$  dollars representing appreciation in value of property can not be allowed.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

Mere appreciation in value of property may be considered as an earning only as of the time it is realized. Consequently, it must be excluded from the computation of invested capital for the year in which it is realized as "surplus earned during the year" and may affect invested capital no sooner than the beginning of the year immediately following such realization.

Advice is requested as the computation of invested capital of the M Company.

It appears that this corporation has property on which it is entitled to compute depletion on its value as of March 1, 1913. The question (as stated in taxpayer's brief) is—

Does the proportion of such depletion that represents a realization of appreciation accrued at March 1, 1913, result in "surplus and undivided profits earned during the year" of realization and should such realized appreciation affect invested capital from the beginning of the succeeding fiscal year or from the time actually paid in?

Simplifying the inquiry, it means, in its essence, When may realized appreciation be considered as affecting invested capital?

The 1918 and 1921 Revenue Acts (section 326(a)3) define the term "invested capital" to include:

* * * paid in or earned surplus; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year.

Article 844 of Regulations 45 and Regulations 62 provides:

Where depreciation or depletion is computed on the value as of March 1, 1913, * * * the proportion of depreciation or depletion representing the realization of appreciation of value at March 1, 1913, * * * may if undistributed and used or employed in the business be treated as surplus and included in the computation of invested capital.

Counsel for the taxpayer argues upon the authority of the cases of Gray v. Darlington (15 Wall., 63), Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. (247 U. S., 179), Mercer v. Buchanan (132 Fed., 501), and Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Lowe (247 U. S., 330) that appreciation is earned when it occurs and not during the year of realization. The cases cited may, with as much, if not more, propriety, however, be employed to support the opposite theory. For instance, in Gray v. Darlington, supra, it is said:

Mere advance in value in no sense constitutes the gains, profits, or income specified by the statute. It constitutes and can be treated merely as an increase of capital.

Surely this is no authority to say that appreciation is earned when it occurs. Likewise, in Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, supra, the distinction is not overlooked as to "surplus earnings" and "the increment due to an appreciation"—though both are in effect classed together as far as the distinction between "capital" and "income" is concerned. However, such observations as are pointed out in the cases of La Belle Iron Works v. United States (256 U. S., 377), affirming the decisions in 55 Ct. Cl., 462, are beside the point when it is recalled that we are not here interested in the distinction between capital and income, but in a definition of the term "invested capital." And so, too, is the argument sought to be supported by article 1543 of Regulations 62, which, of course, is concerned with "dividends" and, as may be later seen, is more properly persuasive of a conclusion opposite to that contended for.

The court in the La Belle Iron Works case (supra) had under consideration the 1917 Revenue Act, which contained the following (section 207 (a)3) in its definition of invested capital:

* * * paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year.

In passing upon the contention that the increased value of ore lands ought to be included in invested capital as "paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits" the court says:

Section 207 shows that Congress was fully alive to this and designedly adopted a term "invested capital" and a definition of it that would measurably guard against inflated valuations. The word "invested" in itself imports a restrictive qualification. When speaking of the capital of a business corporation or partnership, such as the Act deal with, "to invest" imports a laying out of money, or money's worth, either by an individual in acquiring an interest in the concern with a view to obtaining income or profit from the conduct of its business, or by the concern itself in acquiring something of permanent use in the business, in either case involving a conversion of wealth from one form into another suitable for employment in the making of the hoped-for gains. See Webster's New International Dictionary, "Invest," 8; Century Dictionary, "Invest," 7; Standard Dictionary, "Invest," 1. (Italics supplied.)

The provision of clause (3) that includes "paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business" recognizes that in some cases contributions are received from stockholders in money or its equivalent for the specific purpose of creating an actual excess capital over and above the par value of the stock; and, in view of the context, surplus "earned" as well as that "paid in" excludes the idea of capitalizing (for the purposes of this tax) a mere appreciation of values over cost. * * *

* * * it was not improper to attribute the entire $9,914,400 added to the book value of the ore property in the year 1912, to a mere appreciation in the value of the property; in short, to what is commonly known as the "unearned increment," not properly "unearned surplus" within the meaning of the statute.

The application of the principles enunciated in this case to the present inquiry, when regard is had to a reasonably precise understanding of the words used, is comparatively simple.

Etymologically, the word "earn" is akin in its sense to "reap" or "harvest" and is in its present meaning defined as "to acquire by labor, service, or performance." In its transitive use the verb "realize" means "to make real," a sense which is carried into the intransitive verb which is defined as "to convert an intangible right or property into real (tangible) property; hence, to convert any kind of property (considered as fluctuating or uncertain in value) into money." Webster's New International Dictionary.

Appreciation, as is indicated in the La Belle Iron Works opinion, is a term almost antithetic in its connotations to "earning," which implies something more than mere passive acceptance of an advance in value. It is a "lazy" income, as contrasted with "industrious," to use the famous Gladstone expression; "precarious," as differing from "realized," in Seligman's language. Clearly, therefore, appreciation may not be said to be "earned" until something is done, "some labor, service, or performance" whereby that which before was but a nebulous, albeit probable, gain, is made real. And just as clearly, it seems the act which earns appreciation is that of converting it into a form of wealth "suitable for employment in the making of the hoped-for gains"; that is, its "realization." The conclusion, of course, is inevitable that appreciation can be said to be "earned" only at the time it is realized.

Throughout the law and regulations this distinction is seldom lost sight of. It may be noted, as an example, how in article 1543, Regulations 62, cited by counsel for taxpayer, care is taken to specify, in speaking of distributions out of earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, "increase of value of property accrued," thus in effect acknowledging that appreciation is not an earning before realization. Manifestly, appreciation is earned not when it accrues but during the taxable year of its realization; and under the statute and regulations cited it can affect invested capital no sooner than the beginning of the fiscal year immediately following its realization.

2. It is further to be noted that the Regulations, in article 1543, cited by counsel for taxpayer, care is taken to specify, in speaking of distributions out of earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, "increase of value of property accrued," thus in effect acknowledging that appreciation is not an earning before realization. Manifestly, appreciation is earned not when it accrues but during the taxable year of its realization; and under the statute and regulations cited it can affect invested capital no sooner than the beginning of the fiscal year immediately following its realization.

Treasury Decision 2791 and article 845 of Regulations should not be modified.

Numerous protests against the validity of the principle first adopted in Treasury Decision 2791, approved February 17, 1919, and subsequently embodied in Article 845 of Regulations 45, have been made. A hearing upon the question was held before the Advisory Tax Board at the request of the X Company, at which time its general counsel appeared and argued against the power of the Commissioner to make this regulation, which requires that surplus and undivided profits as of the end of the preceding year must be reduced as of the date or dates when Federal income and excess profits taxes become due and payable, by the amount of such taxes for that year.

In the original and supplemental memoranda filed by the X Company counsel has set forth at length the several arguments of greater or less weight in support of the position urged by that taxpayer.

In the opinion of the board the Commissioner and Secretary in promulgating Treasury Decision 2791 and article 845 have placed the whole matter upon what is the only basis which accords with the requirements of the statute and meets the demands of proper accounting, although it is true that the arguments advanced by counsel for the taxpayer in this case are well presented and at first blush seem convincing and persuasive.

Article 845 of Regulations 45 provides:

For the purpose of computing invested capital, Federal income, and war profits and excess profits taxes are deemed to have been paid out of the net income of the taxable year for which they are levied. It is immaterial, therefore, whether reserves for the payment of such taxes for the preceding year have been set up or not, or if set up whether such taxes when paid have actually been charged against such reserves. Amounts payable on account of such taxes for the preceding year may be included in the computation of invested capital only until such taxes become due and payable. A deduction from the invested capital as of the beginning of the taxable year must therefore be made for such taxes or any installment thereof, averaged for the proportionate part of the taxable year after the date when the tax or the installment is due and payable.

The provisions of Treasury Decision 2791 relating to the tax under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 are substantially the same.

The relevant provisions of the statute are found in section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917—

As used in this title "invested capital" does not include * * * money or other property borrowed, and means, subject to the above limitations: * * * (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year.

and in section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918—

Sec. 326. (a) That as used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means * * * (3) paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year; * * * but (b) as used in this title the term "invested capital" does not include borrowed capital.

The term "earned surplus and undivided profits" used in both acts is brief but full of import. In effect, it incorporates into the law by reference the entire body of principles of accounting relative to the determination of surplus. There is in neither act any provision defining this term or modifying what must otherwise be accepted as the guiding principle to be applied in determining what is surplus. The statute, therefore, requires that the surplus in any case shall be determined exactly in accordance with the accepted principles of accounting; and it is to those principles that both the taxpayer and the Government must turn for light upon the meaning of this provision of the law.

The application of these principles to the question at issue brings a speedy response and permits of only one answer. A tax levied as these taxes are, for a definite period, must be considered as a liability which has fully accrued at the end of that period; and if not already paid, provision for its payment must be made before there can be any true surplus or undivided profits. This is especially true in the case of an income tax—and excess and war profits taxes are income taxes—which must be considered as a sharing by the Government in the income of the taxpayer for the taxable year. The fact that the tax is in terms of the statute imposed “upon” the net income and that there is no specific provision that it is to be paid “out of” net income can not change its inherent nature.

The amount of these taxes for any year can not, therefore, after the conclusion of such year be considered as a part of the surplus, but is rather in the nature of a liability, and if this regulation is open to criticism at all, such criticism might much more properly be directed against its further provision permitting the amount of such tax to be included as surplus until such time as the tax becomes due and payable.

It is true that in every case the situation is not such that it will be vitally affected by a failure to apply sound principles, and as a result the development of the rulings already referred to as unsound was very easy, but when the situation happens to be such that the effect of the application of a wrong principle would be critical the difference between the sound and the unsound principle is apparent at once. A single example will suffice to illustrate what is meant: Thus, if a business continues to be owned from year to year by substantially the same interests it becomes relatively unimportant whether such taxes are charged against the income upon which they are levied or against other funds; but if the control of that business changes hands and it thus becomes important to charge the taxes against the proper funds, there would never be any question but that they are properly chargeable against the income for which levied. The purchaser would never for a moment admit that they might equally as well be charged against his future earnings or that he should become liable to raise them by borrowing from the bank or otherwise, without allowance being made in the consideration which he pays for the business.

In the opinion of the board the provisions quoted above from section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and from section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918 are controlling and sustain the interpretation which has been embodied in the form of a regulation in Treasury Decision 2791 and in article 845 of Regulations 45. It is accordingly recommended that no modification in these regulations be made.

 11-19-392: O. D. 222.

The rule expressed in article 845, Regulations 45, that taxes are deemed to be paid out of earnings for the year for which levied, applies to any year of the prewar period as well as to the taxable year. In such cases the amount or amounts payable in a succeeding year on account of such taxes may be included in the computation of invested capital until due and payable.

2

Effect of assessment of additional income and excess profits taxes for prior years upon invested capital.

The rulings contained in Treasury Decision 2791 and article 845 of Regulations 45 require income and excess profits taxes levied for the particular year to be considered as liabilities which have accrued at the end of such year and which must be taken into account in determining the surplus and undivided profits which may thereafter be included in invested capital, and state that such taxes may be included in the surplus until they become due and payable. These rulings are in general applicable to additional assessments.

It is the essence of any system of accrued accounting that items of income and outgo be estimated as they accrue and that the proper entries be made upon the books at that time. The books for any fiscal period are deemed to clearly reflect the history of that period and are not changed even though subsequent events demonstrate that certain accruals, to a minor degree, were incorrectly estimated. The necessary adjustments to correct such errors are made in the current accounts. It is only where major adjustments are necessary that it is good accounting practice to make adjustments for past errors in the surplus account.

For these reasons the Advisory Tax Board recommends that additional assessments of income and excess profits taxes, for prior years which are relatively small or unimportant be considered paid from current earnings; but that where the additional assessment is relatively large and important such assessment be considered a liability of the taxable year in question and that the necessary adjustments of the surplus account be made. In such cases the phrase "due and payable" in article 845, Regulations 45, means the due date for taxes of the taxable year and not the date fixed for the payment of the additional assessment.

It is suggested that in all cases in which the additional assessment is less than 5 per cent of the original assessment or is less than $5,000 it be considered paid out of current earnings and that no adjustment of invested capital be made.

Where a corporation has filed a claim for determination of war-profits and excess profits tax for 1918 under section 328 and has made payments on the basis of 50 per cent of the net income, the claim not having been acted upon when its 1919 return is due, the invested capital for 1919 should be adjusted on the basis of the tax payments actually made, subject, however, to readjustment when the correct amount of tax for 1918 is determined.

45-20-1299: A. R. M. 87.

Held in the case of corporations which filed returns for a fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, under the Revenue Act of 1916, and the tax thereon became due and payable on December 12, 1917, that the additional taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917 shall be deemed to be due and payable on the same date.

The Committee is in receipt of a memorandum from the Income Tax

Unit in which advice is requested as to the basis on which invested capital should be adjusted in connection with a corporation's income and excess profits taxes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917. This adjustment is necessary in order to determine the correct invested capital of the corporation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

The point on which advice is sought resolves itself into the question of when the income and excess profits taxes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, were due and payable. It appears that under the Revenue Act of 1916 corporations having a fiscal year which ended June 30, 1917, were required to file returns sixty days after the close of the fiscal year and that the taxes became due and payable 105 days after the due date of the return. A corporation having a fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, was required to file a return on Form 1031 under the Revenue Act of 1916 and also an excess profits tax return on Form 1095 under the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1917, sixty days after the close of the fiscal year. The taxes as shown by these returns became due and payable on December 12, 1917, and in determining the invested capital of the corporation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918, the invested capital would be reduced by the above taxes prorated from December 12, 1917, to June 30, 1918.

In addition to the above returns it was necessary for the corporation to file supplemental returns covering the additional income and excess profits taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917. The time for filing the supplemental returns in question was extended by various Treasury Decisions to March 1, 1918; hence the question presents itself as to when such taxes should be considered due and payable in adjusting the capital for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

In order to pass upon the question presented it is necessary to examine the provisions of the law and regulations on this point. Section 212 of the Revenue Act of 1917 reads as follows:

That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this title and to the tax herein imposed, and all provisions of Title I of such Act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this Act, relating to returns and payment of the tax therein imposed, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the tax imposed by this title.

Section 14(c) of the Revenue Act of 1916 reads in part as follows:

* * * Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have authority, in the case of either corporations or individuals, to grant a reasonable extension of time in meritorious cases, as he may deem proper.

It was under this provision of the statute that the various extensions were granted by the Commissioner for the filing of the supplemental returns required by the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Section 14(a) of the Revenue Act of 1916 reads in part as follows:

All assessments shall be made and the several corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies shall be notified of the amount for which they are respectively liable on or before the 1st day of June of each successive year, and said assessment shall be paid on or before the 15th day of June: Provided, That every corporation, joint-stock company or association, and insurance company, computing taxes upon the income of the fiscal year which it may designate in the manner hereinbefore provided, shall pay the taxes due under its assessment within one hundred and five days after the date upon which it is required to file its list or return of income for assessment; * * *

Reading this provision of the statute in connection with the facts submitted upon which advice is requested, and that part of section 13(a) which fixes the due date for filing returns, it appears that a definite date is fixed upon which the taxes of a corporation filing its returns upon the basis of a fiscal year become due and payable.

The question of reserves for taxes and the adjustment of invested capital on account of such reserves was first considered by the Tax Reviewers and the following ruling is found in their minutes:

Reserves set aside out of surplus or undivided profits of preceding years for payment of Federal or State taxes not yet due can be included in invested capital for the taxable year if and to the extent that such taxes were not allowable deductions in computing net income for the preceding year.

Thus, if a taxpayer makes his return on an accrual basis, his State taxes which have accrued during the preceding year constitute allowable deductions for the preceding year, and hence can not be included in capital. But, if his return is on the cash basis, in which case such taxes are not deductible until paid, then reserves set aside for that purpose may be included in the invested capital.

Inasmuch as Federal income and excess profits taxes (irrespective of the accounting basis employed) are not deductible in computing the respective net incomes subject to such taxes, reserves set aside for the payment of such taxes may be included in invested capital.

On February 17, 1919, this ruling was, in substance, embodied in Treasury Decision 2791, which reads as follows:

For the purpose of determining invested capital under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917, income and excess profits taxes shall be deemed to have been paid out of the net income for the taxable year for which such taxes are levied. Amounts payable on account of income and excess profits taxes for any year may be included in computing surplus and undivided profits for the succeeding year only for the proportionate part of the year represented by the period of time between the close of the taxable year and the date or dates upon which such taxes become due and payable.

The same principle is carried forward and is covered by articles 845 and 845(a) of Regulations 45.

The question of reserves for income and excess profits taxes and the effect of such reserves on invested capital was presented to the Advisory Tax Board for consideration. In Tax Board Memorandum 51 (ruling 12-19-411, p. 296, Cumulative Bulletin, December, 1919) the effect of assessment of additional income and excess profits taxes for prior years upon invested capital was discussed. The conclusion reached in this memorandum with respect to adjustments on account of additional assessments is, in the judgment of the Committee, sound and should be adhered to by the Unit.

Looking further it is noted that article 230 of Regulations 33, revised, provides in part as follows:

In the case of returns made on the basis of a calendar year, the corporations against which taxes are assessed shall be notified of the amount thereof on or before June 1 of each successive year, and the taxes shall be paid on or before June 15 of the year in which the assessment is made.

Corporations making returns on the basis of a fiscal year other than the calendar year shall be notified of the amount assessed against them on or before the last day of the 90-day period next following the date when the return was due, and the taxes shall be paid within 105 days from the due date of the return.

Any extension granted by the collector or Commissioner of the time within which to file returns will not be construed to correspondingly extend the time for the payment of the tax. If for any reason a return should not be made until the time fixed by law for the payment of the tax has passed, the tax assessed on the basis of such return shall be paid upon notice and demand.

Under the above-quoted provisions of the Revenue Act of 1916, it is noted that the Commissioner is authorized to grant extensions of time in certain cases, but nowhere is there found a provision of law whereby the Commissioner may extend the due date fixed by the Statute for the payment of taxes. In all cases where the taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1916, and the Excess Profits Tax Act of March 3, 1917, fall due after October 3, 1917, the total amount of such taxes, together with the additional income and excess profits taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917, shall be deemed to become due and payable on the date fixed by the Statute; that is, 165 days after the close of the fiscal year ended in 1917.

Upon the statement of facts presented the Committee, therefore, is of the opinion that the taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1916, the Excess Profits Tax Act of March 3, 1917, and the additional taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1917 were due and payable on December 12, 1917, in accordance with the above-quoted provisions of the Statute fixing the due date for the payment of taxes.

In view of the foregoing provisions of law and regulations, it is held that the invested capital of a corporation, the fiscal year of which ended June 30, 1918, shall be reduced by the amount of taxes imposed by the various Acts referred to above on December 12, 1917, prorated to the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1918.

A taxpayer made an overpayment of income taxes for the year 1917 in 1918, which amount was refunded to him in the year 1921.

The question presented is whether the taxpayer may include in its invested capital the amount so refunded for the calendar year 1921.

Held, that under the provisions of article 845 of Regulations 45 the amount of tax overpaid for 1917 and refunded may be included in the invested capital of the taxpayer for 1918 and subsequent years.

Revenue Act of 1921.

Invested capital is not reduced in those cases where taxes due on returns for previous years were not determined and assessed within the time limit prescribed by section 250(d) of the Revenue Act of 1921.

Where an excess payment of tax is credited or refunded, in accordance with the second proviso of section 252 of the Revenue Act of 1921, the amount of invested capital is increased by the amount so refunded, or, in case of a credit, by the amount so credited up to the date such overpayment is actually applied against additional taxes due.

Révenue Act of 1921.

Advice has been requested as to the effect of Treasury Decision 3310 (Bulletin I-15-214, p. 11) on the invested capital of corporations subject to its provisions.

A case is cited of a corporation whose fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, and which is subject to additional tax under the Revenue Act of 1921. Information is desired as to whether this tax, which is payable in four installments commencing with May 15, 1922, has any effect upon the invested capital of the corporation for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1921.

The tax due on the new return is not to be considered as an additional tax due under the Revenue Act of 1918, with reference to its effect upon invested capital, inasmuch as it is an original tax due under the Revenue Act of 1921, and as such has the effect of reducing the invested capital of the corporation for the fiscal year beginning in 1921 to the extent that it is due and payable during such taxable year. A deduction from invested capital as of the beginning of such taxable year must therefore be made for the installments of such tax becoming due and payable within the taxable year averaged in the usual manner.

Revenue Act of 1921.

I ('22) 51-643: I. T. 1532.

On January 1, 1921, the M Company's business was the property of an individual. On September 1, 1921, a corporation having the same name as that under which this business had been previously conducted took over the entire assets and liabilities of the business. The individual income tax return of the individual owner included the income from the business for the period from January 1 to August 31, 1921, while a corporation income and profits tax returns was filed by the corporation for the period from September 1 to December 31, 1921. In preparing an amended return in which the income from the business for the entire year was to be returned as the income of the corporation, under the provisions of section 229 of the Revenue Act of 1921, it was found that the withdrawal account of the former owner of the business for the period from January 1 to August 31, 1921, included an item paid by him to the collector of internal revenue in settlement of his individual income tax for the year 1920.

The question was raised as to whether the entire withdrawal account of the individual owner should be considered as a dividend paid to him by the corporation or whether the Federal income tax item should be eliminated from the withdrawal account and be considered as an item of Federal income tax paid and not as a dividend.

Held, that the item of the individual owner's withdrawal account representing the amount paid in discharge of his individual Federal income tax for 1920 should be prorated so as to represent amounts which will be proportionate to the amount of his net income for 1920 which was derived from the M Company's business and to the remaining amount of his net income which was derived from other sources, respectively.

The portion of the withdrawal made for income tax payment which is proportionate to the individual owner's net income derived from the M Company's business should not be considered as a dividend received by him from the corporation and it is not subject to tax as such. It is to be considered as a payment from the capital of the M Company's business as at December 31, 1920, and must be excluded from the amount of the assets received by the corporation in determining its invested capital at January 1, 1921.

The balance of the withdrawal made for the income tax payment which is proportionate to the individual owner's net income derived from sources other than the M Company's business, if any, is to be considered as a dividend paid by the corporation during 1921 and will be taxable as such.

All other funds withdrawn by the individual owner for personal use during the period from January 1 to August 31, 1921, must be considered as dividends paid to him by the corporation.

Revenue Act of 1921.

A corporation suffered an operating loss during its first fiscal year which ended in 1920, but made a profit for the fiscal year ended in 1921, upon which it paid an income tax. This profit, however, was not sufficient to wipe out the operating loss of the preceding year.

The corporation is not required to reduce its invested capital for the fiscal year beginning in 1921 and ended in 1922 on account of the income-tax payment made during such year, but is entitled to the full capital paid in as invested capital without reduction for the operating loss or for the income-tax payment.

In filing its return for the fiscal year begun in 1921 and ended in 1922, care should be taken to state in Schedule H of the return the reason why there is no adjustment of invested capital on account of the income-tax payment for the preceding year.

Revenue Act of 1918.

Upon the incorporation of a partnership on January 1, 1918, the corporation took over  $x$  dollars which had been set aside by the partnership out of earnings of 1917 for the payment of income and excess profits taxes for that year. The corporation used this amount in its business until June 15, 1918, the date payable.

Held, that the amount to be used by the corporation may be included in its invested capital from January 1, 1918, to June 15, 1918. I. T. 1582 (Sec. 325. Art. 813.—16, Ruling No. 10) revoked.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in eliminating from invested capital for 1918 the accrued profits of the predecessor partnership for 1917 and used by the taxpaying corporation as invested capital from December 31, 1917, to June 15, 1918, the date payable.

The taxpayer relies upon article 845, Regulations 45, which reads in part:

Amount payable on account of such taxes for the preceding year may be included in the computation of invested capital only until such taxes become due and payable.

It appears that earnings of the partnership for the year 1917 to the amount of  $x$  dollars were set aside for the payment of income and excess profits taxes for that year and upon the formation of the corporation on January 1, 1918, this amount was taken over by the corporation and used in its business until the date payable—June 15, 1918.

In view of the foregoing, the Committee is of the opinion that the amount so used by the appellant may be included in invested capital from January 1, 1918, to June 15, 1918.

It is therefore recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in this respect be reversed and the appeal be sustained.

The cash surrender value of a life insurance policy which, under article 846 of Regulations 45, constitutes surplus as at the beginning of the taxable year for invested capital purposes, retains its character as surplus even though the policy constituting the admissible asset upon the basis of which the surplus was determined, is terminated and paid.

The M Company through its attorney contends that its invested capital should be increased as at December 31, 1916, by the cash surrender value of certain insurance policies carried on the life of its president. In this connection it appears that the corporation has regularly deducted as an operating expense for each year prior to 1917, the amount of premiums paid on such insurance policies and that on January 1, 1917, such policies had a cash surrender value of  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars which it is urged should be restored to the invested capital of the corporation inasmuch as such amount, with the exception of  $x$  dollars, had been disallowed by the Income Tax Unit.

The question here presented for decision is whether the cash surrender value of the insurance policies on the lives of officers of corporations may be included in the computation of invested capital, irrespective of the fact that the premiums paid on such policies have been regularly deducted as an expense in the computation of the net income of the corporation for prior years. In this connection the Income Tax Unit interpreting article 846 of Regulations 45 has held that only the cash surrender value of policies of insurance upon the lives of officers of corporations attributable to premiums paid in prior years which have not been deducted as an expense can be included in the computation of invested capital.

The Committee desires to call to the attention of the Unit the following ruling stated in Tax Reviewers' minutes with respect to this question under the provisions of the 1917 Act:

As premiums paid by a corporation for insurance on the lives of its officers or employees payable to it can not be deducted as expenses in computing taxable income, such insurance policies shall be considered tangible property under article 47 of Regulations 41 and may be included as invested capital of such corporation at their cash surrender value at the beginning of the taxable year.

The above-quoted ruling made by the Tax Reviewers has been carried forward and the same, in substance, is stated in article 846 of Regulations 45. Considering the above-quoted ruling made by the Tax Reviewers in connection with article 846 of Regulations 45, the Committee is clearly of the opinion that the total cash surrender value of the policies in question should be restored to the invested capital of this corporation for 1917. On this point the Committee feels that the contention of the corporation is well taken and recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in reducing the invested capital by the amount of the cash surrender value of certain insurance policies carried on the life of the president of this corporation be reversed and the amount of  $1\frac{1}{2}\%$  dollars be restored to the invested capital of the corporation.

49-20-1338: O. D. 745.

Where insurance is carried by a corporation on the life of an officer or employee, the policy may be included as an admissible asset and reflected in the surplus account at its cash surrender value, or if it has no cash surrender value then its loan value, as of the beginning of the taxable year.

47-21-1938: O. D. 1109.

The O Corporation took out a policy of insurance on the life of A, who had guaranteed the accounts of the corporation against the M Company. Subsequently A, by reason of the guaranty, became individually liable for the claims against the M Company. The O Corporation paid premiums on the policy and received a distribution of a 20-year surplus from the insurer in 1919. Upon the death of A, the O Corporation received the face value of the policy.

It is held that where insurance is taken out by a corporation on the life of the guarantor of a debt to the corporation, the surrender value of the policy can not be included in invested capital, but the premiums paid may be deducted as a business expense.

The amount received as a distribution of surplus by the insurance company should be treated as income and included in the gross income of the O Corporation for the year in which received, subject to both income and excess profits tax.

As the premiums paid are deductible as business expenses, the amount received on the policy in excess of the cash surrender value of the policy on March 1, 1913, must be accounted for as income of the year in which received.

Revenue Acts of 1916 and 1917.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing the excess profits tax for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1917, upon the basis of the full fiscal year, excluding from invested capital net earnings for the months of November and December, 1916, be sustained.

The Committee has considered the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing the excess profits tax for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1917, upon the basis of the full fiscal year, excluding from invested capital the net earnings for the months of November and December, 1916.

Owing to a delay in the preparation of the blank forms of returns, the M Company was granted an extension of time for filing its return for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1917, and the original return covering the income for the entire fiscal year filed was on March 30, 1918. An amended return was filed on April 1, 1918, in which the tax upon the profits earned in the months of November and December, 1916, was computed at the flat rate of 2 per cent and for the 10 months of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1917 upon the basis of the invested capital shown as of January 1, 1917, including the net earnings for November and December, 1916. The Income Tax Unit computed the tax for the year in question upon the basis of the average invested capital for the full fiscal year and assessed an additional tax in the amount of  $x$  dollars. The claim for abatement of this additional tax was rejected under date of May 25, 1921, hence this appeal.

Under section 13(b) of the Act of September 8, 1916, the return of the appellant was due within 60 days after the close of its fiscal year.

Section 207 of the Act of October 3, 1917, provides that the term "invested capital" shall include among other things "paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year."

Section 200 of the Act of October 3, 1917, defines the term "taxable year" as meaning the 12 months ending December 31, except in case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, in which case it is defined to mean such fiscal year, and provides:

The first taxable year shall be the year ending December 31st, 1917, except that in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, it shall be the fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1917. If a corporation or partnership, prior to March 1st, 1918, makes a return covering its own fiscal year, and includes therein the income received during that part of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1916, the tax for such taxable year shall be that proportion of the tax computed upon the net income during such full fiscal year which the time from January 1st, 1917, to the end of such fiscal year bears to the full fiscal year; * * *

The Congress in the above section of the Act expressly considered a fiscal year a portion of which fell within the year 1916, and in terms so clearly as to permit of no other construction provided that the tax imposed by that Act should be "computed upon the net income during such full fiscal year," and as clearly provided that "undivided profits earned during the taxable year" should be excluded from the invested capital used in the computation of the tax. The Bureau had, therefore, no option to compute the tax in any other manner than that which is prescribed by the statute and which was followed by it. That such a method of computation results in some instances to the disadvantage of taxpayers having a fiscal year as compared with taxpayers making returns upon the basis of a calendar year is recognized, but the evil is one which can be remedied only by the legislative branch of the Government. It can not be cured by construction of an Act so clear as to admit of no construction.

The contention of the appellant, at an oral hearing, that its case was not covered by section 200 of the Act of October 3, 1917, for the reason that it did not make its return prior to March 1, 1918, can not be conceded. Under the provision of section 13(b) of the Act of September 8, 1916, which was not amended by the Act of October 3, 1917, the returns of every corporation having a fiscal year ending within the calendar year 1917 were due prior to March 1, 1918, and it is not to be presumed that Congress intended that a taxpayer who was delinquent in filing his return or toward whom the Bureau had been lenient in this matter should be taxed upon a different basis than those who complied strictly with the letter of the statute. The language of section 200 of the Act of October 3, 1917, "makes a return," must at this time be construed to mean "was due to make a return." The Act nowhere contained any provision for computing the excess profits tax of a corporation having a fiscal year ending in 1917 upon the basis contended for by the taxpayer, and the conclusion that Congress did not intend to grant such a right in any case is strengthened by the fact that section 335(a) of the Act of February 24, 1919, contains a similar provision for computing the tax of a corporation having a fiscal year falling partly within the calendar year 1917 and partly within the calendar year 1918, but makes no reference to the time of filing the return. The Bureau has never recognized any exception to the method prescribed for computing the tax in the case of the fiscal year falling within the calendar years in which the rates of tax were different, either under the Act of 1917 or the Act of 1918, by reason of the fact that the return was filed after the due date.

It is, therefore, recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing the excess profits tax for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1917, upon the basis of the full fiscal year, excluding from invested capital net earnings for the months of November and December, 1916, be sustained.

23-19-554: T. B. M. 81.

The fact that a corporation issues stock as a bonus to its three principal officers to secure their services and participation in the business is not ipso facto sufficient evidence of the existence of good will for which values can be recognized in connection with the computation of invested capital.

Such three principal officers were the principal stockholders and were active salesmen and the only salesmen employed directly by the corporation. Each was allotted certain exclusive territory in which he might employ subagents; all sales made by or through these three principal salesmen constituted the basis on which their commissions or bonuses were calculated. There were certain other sales made directly by the house which were not subject to any bonus or commission deduction. The business of the corporation appeared to be dependent almost solely upon the personal efforts of these three principal officers and stockholders. The rates of commission and the salaries for their services were properly voted.

In this case it was deemed that commission and salary aggregating 50 per cent of the gross margin on the business developed by each was not unreasonable.

30-19-644: O. D. 348.

Invested capital on account of intangibles bona fide paid in for stock or shares is limited to 25 per cent of stock with par value plus 25 per cent of the amount fixed in articles authorizing no par value stock as the capital with which the corporation may do business. If the laws of any State authorize issuance of true no par value stock with no amount of fixed capital such no par value stock may be taken into consideration in measuring the value of intangibles, at the fair market value as of the date or dates of issue of such stock or shares.

1-20-665: A. R. R. 9.

A and B, who own most of the stock of the M Company, invented certain machinery, for which patents were issued to them. The cost of obtaining these patents was paid by the company. It does not appear whether at that time the patents were formally assigned to the corporation, but, in all events, the corporation had the use of the patents as though they were its own, without compensation to the inventors. The patents at that time being undeveloped, their value was, of course, problematical, but by 1916 they had been sufficiently developed to prove of considerable value.

In 1916 the corporation desired to increase its capital, and in order to do so, the patents in question were put upon the books at a value of 2x dollars and a stock dividend was declared.

Upon the basis of the above statement of facts the Committee is clearly of the opinion that the patents were not specifically paid for by the issuance of stock, nor by any payment of cash. They were apparently treated as though they belonged to the corporation which had paid the cost of their issuance from the time of issuance, and it is not shown that anything was paid for them at the time other than cost, nor that they had any value at that time in excess of cost. Even assuming that they were not formally assigned until 1916, it does not appear that any stock was issued in payment therefor, except such stock as was issued as a stock dividend to all stockholders, including those who had no interest in the patents, as well as to the original patentees.

The conclusion reached, therefore, is that the value of the patents as carried upon the books, 2x dollars, can not be included in invested capital, and that the decision of the Income Tax Unit must be affirmed.

RULING UNDER REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that the M Company can not include in its invested capital for 1917 an amount representing secret formulas paid in for stock or shares in excess of 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of the company on March 3, 1917.

The M Company was organized in 1909, with an authorized capital stock of 10x dollars, which was issued for—

Cash.....	x dollars
Secret formulas.....	9x dollars

On July 1, 1917, the company issued additional stock of the par value of 90x dollars for—

Cash.....	5x dollars
Capitalization of good will.....	40x dollars
Appreciation in value of secret formulas.....	45x dollars

The record in the case does not show whether this increase of 90x dollars in capital stock was made through the appreciation of assets and the declaration of a stock dividend, but it appears that this method of increasing capital stock has been used. The appreciation in the value of the processes was largely due to the further development of the formulas. The cost of this development was paid by the company and deducted as business expenses.

In the computation of changes in invested capital, Schedule D, Form 1103, for the year 1917, the company eliminated the item of 40x dollars on account of good will, but claimed that the balance of 50x dollars should be prorated for six months and 25x dollars admitted as an addition to invested capital. The return was prepared on that basis.

An examination of the return for 1917 shows that the company sustained a loss for 1911 and made profits in 1912 and 1913 and that the 90x dollars increase in capital stock was made as of July 1, 1917, and distributed pro rata to the various stockholders on the basis of their respective stockholdings, thus indicating that the increase in capital stock was made through the distribution of a stock dividend.

In the audit of the return for 1917 the Income Tax Unit rejected the claim for addition to invested capital in the amount of 25x dollars and allowed the prorated amount of 5x dollars cash paid in July 1, 1917. The Unit also allowed 20 per cent of the capital stock outstanding on March 3, 1917, as representing the secret formulas.

In the presentation of the case, it was strongly argued that the secret formulas are tangible property; that the Unit was in error in disallowing 7x dollars of the capital account in order to conform with the limitation prescribed by the statute and that the total amount of 25x dollars should have been allowed to stand for the reason that the secret formulas had a value greatly in excess of the value used when they were turned in to the company for stock at the time of its organization. The value can not be fixed for the secret processes at the time they were paid in for stock; neither can the cost of development be established. The company urges that since A, a stockholder, was able to sell  $x$  dollars of stock at par the  $9x$  dollars retained by him was worth par, thus establishing the value of the processes at the time they were paid in for stock. It should be noted a great deal of stress is laid upon the value of the processes.

It is claimed further that the increase in value of secret processes, is due to the fact that they had previously been carried at a low valuation on the books, and that the earnings of the company depend to a very large degree on these secret processes and formulas, which are being constantly improved year after year for the benefit of the business. It was deemed, therefore, only fair that such processes be carried at a value which more truly represents their earning power, as compared with the other tangible assets of the business.

While it is not so stated, it would indicate that a stock dividend was declared against the appreciated assets of the company. The conference had with the attorneys tends to substantiate this view. If this be true, then the principle that the distribution of a stock dividend does not increase nor decrease invested capital would be applicable.

The question as to whether or not the secret formulas can be considered as tangible property is presented. Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides in part as follows:

* * * the good will, trade-marks, trade brands, the franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, shall be included as invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefore specifically as such in cash or tangible property, the value of such good will, trade-mark, trade brand, franchise, or intangible property, not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment; but good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchise of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property, bona fide purchased, prior to March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, for and with interest or shares in a partnership or for and with shares in the capital stock of a corporation (issued prior to March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen), in an amount not to exceed, on March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, twenty per centum of the total interests or shares in the partnership or of the total shares of the capital stock of the corporation, shall be included in invested capital at a value not to exceed the actual cash value at the time of such purchase, and in case of issue of stock therefor not to exceed the par value of such stock.

Article 47 of Regulations 41 provides:

The term "other intangible property" as used in section 207 will be construed to mean property of a character similar to good will, trade-marks, and the other specific kinds of property enumerated in the same clause. * * *

Articles 57 and 58 of Regulations 41 provide respectively as follows:

If good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises of a corporation or partnership, or other intangible property has been purchased with stock of shares issued prior to March 3, 1917, the amount that may be included in invested capital must not exceed (a) 20 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares outstanding on that date, nor (b) the actual value of the asset at the date acquired, not (c) the par value of the stock issued in payment for the asset.

The 20 per cent limitation upon intangible property purchased prior to March 3, 1917, for or with stock or shares of the corporation or partnership, applies not to each item or class of intangible property separately, but to the aggregate amount of all such property so purchased. Such intangible property may be included in the invested capital only up to an amount not exceeding 20 per cent of the total stock or shares of the corporation or partnership on March 3, 1917, even though the aggregate amount of such intangible property be greater in value than such 20 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares.

Intangible property bona fide purchased prior to March 3, 1917, with stock having no par value may be included in invested capital at a value not exceeding the actual cash value of such intangible property at the time of the purchase and in an amount not exceeding 20 per cent of the total shares of stock outstanding on March 3, 1917, measured by their value as at the date or dates of issue.

The Advisory Tax Board in Memorandum 5 (Cumulative Bulletin, December, 1919, page 286), recommended that Ruling 24 issued by the Tax Reviewers, interpreting article 58 quoted above, be amended to read as follows:

Twenty Per Cent Limitation upon Intangible Property in Cases where Capital Stock has been Increased or Reduced.—Where since the organization of a corporation its capital stock has been increased or reduced and such change represents an actual acquisition of new property for stock or an actual impairment of original properties, the 20 per cent limitation imposed by section 207 will be based upon the par value of the total stock outstanding on March 3, 1917.

It appears to the Committee that the value of the formulas at the time the company was organized was apparently largely speculative and any increase in value through subsequent development could not properly be included by way of an addition to invested capital.

After consideration of all the facts presented on the questions at issue and the definition of the term "intangible property" as used in the Revenue Act of 1918, the Committee has reached the conclusion that the secret formulas cannot be considered tangible property, and that additions to invested capital in 1917 through revaluation of the intangible assets cannot be permitted under the law and the regulations. Therefore, it is recommended that the decision of the Unit be confirmed.

25-21-1698: A. R. M. 131.

Held, that intangible property, when acquired for tangible property, must be taken into account at the value of such intangible property at date of acquisition, and that in the case of the M Company such value is measured by the then fair market value of the tangible property exchanged therefor and not by the original cost of such tangible property. It is assumed the fair market value of the lands at time of transfer will be satisfactorily established by the taxpayer.

The Income Tax Unit has submitted the following issue for an expression of opinion by this Committee:

Whether intangibles can be included in invested capital at a value representing the prevailing market value (as at the date of transfer) of tangible property given in exchange for intangible property, or whether the company transferring tangible for intangible property is limited to the cost value of tangible property so transferred.

The facts on which the issue is based are expressed by the Unit in the following language:

The taxpayer, the M Company, purchased a large tract of land about the year 188—upon which it proposed to establish and operate a certain business. It was absolutely essential to successful operation that business houses of a certain character be established and operated. Therefore the M Company made certain offers and inducements to large owners of such houses to locate on their premises. Contracts were made from time to time with nearly all of these large owners of such business houses who pursuant to their contracts established and operated plants.

The M Company agreed among other things to deed to these owners a portion of its lands. The consideration received by the M Company was in the form of an intangible asset, namely, the trade or business that would result to the M Company by the location of these large plants on their large tract of land above mentioned.

The point at issue is whether the intangibles may be included in invested capital at a value measured by the original cost of the land or the market value of the land at time of transfer.

The issue first of all involves the question of income resulting from the exchange of property for property. Manifestly there was a conversion of one asset, land, into another form of asset which had an intangible value. Article 1563 of Regulations 45 provides that:

Gain or loss arising from the acquisition and subsequent disposition of property is realized when as the result of a transaction between the owner and another person the property is converted into cash or into property (a) that is essentially different from the property disposed of and (b) that has a market value.

In the instant case the intangible has a value measured by the consideration paid therefor, viz., tangible property. It is not the cost of this tangible property which measures the value of this intangible asset, but its real market value as of date of transfer. When the value of the intangible asset is so determined the difference between such value and the original cost of the land exchanged therefor is the amount of profit realized in the conversion of the land into another form of asset. Nor does such a transaction involve the question of appreciation because it is not the value of the land itself which is written up on the books of the corporation but the value of an intangible asset measured by the consideration paid therefor. An exchange of this land for cash equivalent to the present market value of the land would have determined a profit over the original cost. This profit would have been reflected in the surplus of the company. In a similar manner the excess of the value of the intangible acquired over the cost of the land given in exchange therefor is a proper credit to the surplus of the corporation. The determination of a current value in the instant case has no relation to original cost because it must be assumed that the land before and after transfer had an immediate realizable value.

The Committee is accordingly of the opinion that intangible property, when acquired for tangible property, must be taken into account at the value of such intangible property at date of acquisition, and that in the instant case such value is measured by the then fair market value of the tangible property exchanged therefor and not by the original cost of such tangible property. It is assumed the fair market value of the lands at time of transfer will be satisfactorily established by the taxpayer.

44-21-1893: A. R. R. 520.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended in the appeal of the M Company that there be allowed as a deduction from gross income in the company's 1917 return a depreciation of patent rights in an amount which bears the same ratio to the established cost of the patent rights as 12 months (the taxable year) bears to 23.5 months (the total period for which the patent rights are to run); and that the valuation assigned to such asset as of January 1, 1917, for invested capital purposes be the cost of the asset,  $x$  dollars, minus depreciation for one and one-half months, or an amount not in excess of 20 per cent of the total shares of stock outstanding on March 3, 1917, measured by their value as at date or dates of issue, whichever is lower. (See art. 58, Reg. 41.)

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Unit in making certain adjustments respecting the valuation of patent rights for the purpose of computing invested capital and respecting the basis of computing allowances for depreciation of such rights.

The records in the case indicate that patent rights were acquired November —, 1916, extending to November —, 1918 (a period of 23.5 months), by the taxpayer for a consideration of  $x$  dollars cash value of the corporation's capital stock. On April —, 1917, a new right, to begin November —, 1918, and extend for a period of eight years was secured. It is shown that the new right extending for the additional period of eight years was given to the corporation gratis. Notwithstanding the receipt of the new right which became effective November —, 1918, the corporation continued during the year 1917 to use and operate under the first right acquired as aforesaid.

In the brief submitted by the taxpayer's counsel the following matter is set forth with respect to the treatment accorded this asset (patent right) in the preparation of income and excess profits tax return for the calendar year 1917:

In making its income tax return the corporation considered claiming "depreciation" on patent rights at the rate of 12/23.5 per year during the entire year 1917 at which rate in fact its original investment should be amortized, but in a spirit of willingness to stand its fair share of war taxation it conceived that it would take such "depreciation" only up to April —, 1917, when the new right was received and thereafter "depreciate" on the basis that at least the original value of the patent right, viz.,  $x$  dollars had been restored and "depreciation" should thereafter be claimed upon the basis of a life from April —, 1917, to November —, 1926.

With reference to the so-called "appreciation of patents" the corporation simply conceived that the gift of April —, 1917, restored the original value and treated the gift as "paid-in surplus" of the value theretofore lost by "depreciation" for five months from November —, 1916, at the rate of 1/23.5 of cost per month. This sum averaged over the year made an invested capital increase of  $1/6x$  dollars which was claimed and used as an element in computing invested capital.

In the audit of the return the Income Tax Unit insisted that depreciation should be on the basis of the original cost of  $x$  dollars spread over a ten-year life, embracing the two separate periods for which rights were granted, November —, 1916, to November —, 1926, and accordingly disallowed all depreciation claimed in excess of amounts determined on that basis.

The Unit also eliminated from invested capital such depreciation as had been claimed by the taxpayer from November —, 1916, to April —, 1917, and which was sought to be restored to the value of the asset for the purpose of subsequent depreciation allowances.

The taxpayer contends that the method adopted by it in treating this asset in the manner heretofore outlined in the preparation of its income tax return for 1917 was both equitable and correct under the law and regulations. Action contrary to this contention has been taken by the Unit in adjusting the corporation's tax liability, and it is from such action that the taxpayer appeals.

In the opinion of the Committee, both the taxpayer and the Unit have erred in this matter. It is evident from the foregoing statements that the taxpayer acquired on November —, 1916, an intangible asset (patent right) to extend to November —, 1918, a period of approximately 23.5 months, and that such asset was acquired for a consideration of  $x$  dollars cash value of the company's capital stock at that date. The record indicates with respect to the stock issue of the corporation that it consisted of  $y$  shares of no par value.

Article 58 of Regulations 41, pertaining to the valuation for invested capital purposes of intangible property, provides in part:

Intangible property bona fide purchased prior to March 3, 1917, with stock having no par value may be included in invested capital at a value not exceeding the actual cash value of such intangible property at the time of the purchase and in an amount not exceeding twenty per cent of the total shares of stock outstanding on March 3, 1917, measured by their value as at the date or dates of issue.

There is nothing in the record which indicates the method by which a valuation of  $x$  dollars has been fixed and accepted by the Unit, but for the purpose of rendering an opinion upon the point at issue, the Committee assumes that such value has been determined in accordance with the law and regulations and to the satisfaction of the Unit.

Article 163 of Regulations 45, issued under the Revenue Act of 1918, is equally applicable under the Revenue Act of 1917. This article provides in part:

If, however, an intangible asset acquired through capital outlay is known from experience to be of value in the business for only a limited period, the length of which can be estimated from experience with reasonable certainty, such intangible asset may be the subject of a depreciation allowance, * * *.

In the determination of the depreciation allowance which may be claimed in the 1917 return of the taxpayer, two factors must be known and are apparent in the record, to wit: the cost of the asset, and its life, as determined by the period for which the right under which the company operated in 1917, was to run.

These factors as shown by the record are: cost of asset,  $x$  dollars; and life of asset, 23.5 months.

It is the opinion of the Committee, therefore, that the depreciation allowance to which the taxpayer is entitled for the calendar year 1917 is an amount which bears the same ratio to  $x$  dollars as twelve months (the taxable year) bears to 23.5 months (the total period or life of the asset).

In line with this opinion there appears to be no question as to the measure of value which may be assigned to the asset (patent right) for purposes of invested capital as of January 1, 1917, which necessarily must be  $x$  dollars minus depreciation for one and one-half months (November —, to December 31, 1916), or an amount not in excess of 20 per cent of the total shares of stock outstanding on March 3, 1917, measured by their value as at date or dates of issue, whichever is lower.

It is recommended, therefore, in the appeal of the M Company that there be allowed as a deduction from gross income in the company's 1917 return a depreciation of patent rights in an amount which bears the same ratio to the established cost of the patent rights,  $x$  dollars, as 12 months (the taxable year) bears to 23.5 months (the total period for which the patent rights are to run); and that the valuation assigned to such asset as of January 1, 1917, for invested capital purposes be the cost of the asset,  $x$  dollars minus depreciation for one and one-half months, or an amount not in excess of 20 per cent of the total shares of stock outstanding on March 3, 1917, measured by their value as at date or dates of issue, whichever is lower. (See art. 58, Reg. 41.)

Revenue Act of 1917 and 1918.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

The amount of stock issued for intangible property and the subsequent revaluation of such property can not be accepted as proof of the value of the intangibles at date of acquisition.

Earnings of a taxpayer subsequent to the acquisition of intangible property, unsupported by other acceptable proof, can not be adopted as a basis for valuing such property as of the date acquired.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing in the computation of the appellant's statutory capital for 1917, 1918, and 1919 (1) good will, patents and secret processes, valued by the taxpayer at  $10x$  dollars; and (2) accrued dividends in the amount of  $.79x$  dollars for 1918 and  $1.11x$  dollars for 1919.

Supplementary Bulletin Rulings.

The taxpayer was incorporated January —, 1914, under the laws of the State of S. It then acquired from the N Company all the assets, tangible and intangible, of a subsidiary of that company used in connection with the manufacture and sale of certain articles. Preferred stock in the amount of  $1.5x$  dollars was issued for the tangible assets, and common stock of  $40x$  dollars for the intangibles. The evidence presented upon appeal, as supplemented in much detail orally, shows that the N Company, by virtue of experimentation extending over approximately 17 years prior to 1914, had perfected processes, developed secret formulae, obtained patents, and made application for other patents, all of which enabled it as at the end of 1913 to manufacture an article which the taxpayer contends had a useful life practically double that of any similar article then in the market; that several of the processes and inventions which had been perfected by the N Company but not patented were subsequently patented by the appellant; and that the intangibles acquired constituted the foundation for the success of the business, which began during 1917. The earnings of the predecessor owner of the intangibles are not available to enable the claimed value of these assets to be checked in accordance with A. R. M. 34 (C. B. 2, p. 31). At a meeting of the board of directors of the appellant held on December —, 1917, the officers of the corporation appear to have concluded that the intangibles, acquired for  $40x$  dollars common stock, had in fact turned out to be worth less than that amount and the valuation was thereupon reduced to  $10x$  dollars, made up as follows: Good will,  $x$  dollars; research records and scientific data,  $1.9x$  dollars; patents and patent applications,  $7.1x$  dollars; and the outstanding common stock was correspondingly reduced.

Aside from the common stock claimed to have been issued for the intangibles in question and the subsequent action of the board of directors with respect to this property, the only evidence of record purporting to substantiate the value claimed for the intangibles at the time acquired by the corporation is the earnings of the company for the years 1917 to 1921, inclusive. The amount of stock issued for the intangible property and the action of the board of directors on December —, 1917, can not be accepted as proof of the value claimed, and the Committee has repeatedly ruled that earnings of a taxpayer subsequent to the acquisition of intangible property, unsupported by other acceptable proof, can not be adopted as a basis for valuing such property as of the date acquired.

The so-called accrued dividends of  $.79x$  dollars for 1918 and  $1.11x$  dollars for 1919 are shown not to have been paid, declared, or authorized, and were merely set aside as a book entry to record the amount of dividends accumulated on the preferred stock, and the Unit has properly conceded the contention of the taxpayer that the amounts involved should be included in the statutory capital for the years in question.

The Committee accordingly recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in excluding from statutory capital for 1917 to 1919, inclusive, the claimed value of intangibles be sustained; that the so-called accrued dividends for 1918 and 1919 be included in the computation of the statutory capital for those years; and that the appeal be sustained in part and denied in part.

Since the income derived from Porto Rico bonds is not subject to tax, the bonds are inadmissible assets and can not, therefore, be included in invested capital.

Revenue Act of 1917.

There is nothing in the Revenue Act of 1917 or in Regulations 41 which permits inadmissible assets purchased out of earnings for a taxable year to be considered in computing invested capital. That method of treating inadmissibles was first introduced by section 326 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1918, and was carried forward into section 326 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1921, but it is not authorized by the Revenue Act of 1917. There may be cases where changes in the amount of inadmissibles held during 1917 will cause an adjustment in invested capital for that year, but a case of that sort never arises out of an increase in inadmissible assets through an expenditure of current earnings.

Article 853.—Changes in invested capital during year (Reg. 45—¶806, ante): (Reg. 62—¶1222, post).

27-21-1720: O. D. 969.

Inasmuch as trustees in liquidation are required to file a corporate return of annual net income and excess profits for the entire taxable year, including therein the gross income received by the corporation prior to their appointment and also the gross income received under their supervision, the invested capital should be computed in the same manner as in the case of an active corporation, making due allowance for any amount of capital assets which have been liquidated and returned to the stockholders during that year.

However, if, owing to abnormal circumstances affecting the capital or income of the corporation, the tax computed in the usual manner works upon the corporation an exceptional hardship, evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax so computed and the tax computed by reference to representative corporations specified in section 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, the taxpayer may file a claim for special assessment in accordance with sections 327 and 328 of the Act.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that in the absence of evidence of error the rates of depreciation used by the Unit in computing allowable depreciation deductions in 1917 and 1918 be approved; that the action of the Unit in considering this company's prewar period as covering all of the prewar years, and in excluding from invested capital paid-in surplus with respect to intangible assets acquired at date of reorganization in 1916, be sustained; and that because of the exclusion of such intangible assets it be recognized that an abnormality exists in this company's invested capital which entitles it to special assessment for both 1917 and 1918, and that assessment be made on the basis of comparatives carefully selected, provided any relief is afforded thereby.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in adjusting its returns for 1917 and 1918, and, on the basis of such adjustments, assessing additional taxes for each year.

Following an audit of this company's books in December, 1919, by a revenue agent, the Unit in March, 1920, notified the company that additional taxes amounting to 8x dollars for 1917 and 28x dollars for 1918 were proposed. The taxpayer immediately protested the assessment of these taxes, and after considerable correspondence and an oral hearing before the Unit, the letter of March, 1920, was modified by a revised letter dated September, 1920, in which the proposed assessments were reduced to 4x dollars for 1917 and 12x dollars for 1918, and these amounts were assessed. The company has appealed to this Committee on three points, as follows:

1. The rates of depreciation used by the Unit.
  2. The deduction allowable under section 203 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and the war-profits credit provided by section 311 of the Revenue Act of 1918.
  3. The exclusion of intangible assets alleged to have been acquired for stock at date of reorganization in 1916.
1. In the computation of the allowable deductions for depreciation the Unit used the same rates as the company had used in its original returns, the total allowance being less due to the fact that the company applied the rates to the total asset values at the close of the year while the Unit averaged the assets by taking the sum of the amounts shown on the opening and closing balance sheets and dividing this by two. The company now concedes the correctness of the Unit's procedure, but contends that the rates originally used and allowed by the Unit were too low to cover the depreciation actually sustained, while the Unit states that it has no objection to allowing the full amount of depreciation actually sustained but believes that the evidence submitted did not substantiate a greater amount than that allowed. The Committee accordingly requested the appellant's representatives, at a recent oral hearing accorded to them, to submit depreciation schedules for all years from 1912, the year in which the manufacture of its leading line was commenced, showing the company's past experience relative to normal depreciation and reasons for claiming accelerated rates in 1917 and 1918. In response to this request the Committee has received a revised depreciation schedule for the years 1917 and 1918 only, which, as to asset values, is identical with the schedule prepared by the Unit, the only difference being that higher rates are claimed. Relative to the company's past experience under normal conditions the following statement is made:

This company acquired its original assets in 1916. Its predecessor's records do not disclose sufficient data from which to ascertain depreciation actually accrued under normal working conditions on buildings and machinery used in manufacturing.

This appears to be a rather unusual condition, inasmuch as these same books, according to the appellant's contention relative to invested capital adjustments, show to the fraction of 1 per cent the actual assets employed in the manufacture of the product and the exact income received from that branch of the business.

The Committee is of the opinion that the rates allowed by the Unit are fair, and in the absence of evidence to show that the use of such rates does not provide for depreciation actually sustained, recommends that these rates be approved.

2. The appellant was organized in December, 1916, and took over the assets and business of the N Company. The predecessor of the N Company was the O Company, a corporation whose only business was manufacturing another product. In February, 1912, the charter of the last-named company was amended changing its name to the N Company and authorizing it to change its business. The old business was not finally closed out until subsequent to the close of the year 1913. Thus, during the year 1911, the predecessor of the present corporation was in the business of manufacturing one product and during the years 1912 and 1913 in that of manufacturing two products, in consequence of which the appellant contends that it had only one full prewar year, 1913, inasmuch as the business of manufacturing its present product, its business during the taxable years, is substantially a continuation only of that part of the business conducted during the whole of one prewar year. It has submitted a profit and loss account for the year 1913 which purports to show the allocation of all items of gross income and expenses as between the two kinds of business, a balance sheet as at December 31, 1912, showing similar allocation of all assets and liabilities, and contends that the deduction for 1917 and the war profits credit for 1918 should be computed on the basis of the income and invested capital attributable to the present business only in 1913. In passing it may be stated that a cursory examination of the statements submitted shows them to be nothing more than arbitrary estimates and they could be nothing else unless the system of accounting employed was on a very elaborate scale. The taxpayer's statement quoted above relative to depreciation does not indicate the use of such a system.

Section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides that "For the purpose of this title"—that is, Title II, war excess-profits tax, and this also includes the deduction provided by section 203—"every corporation or partnership not exempt under the provisions of this section shall be deemed to be engaged in business, and all the trades and businesses in which it is engaged shall be treated as a single trade or business, and all its income from whatever source derived shall be deemed to be received from such trade or business."

No exactly similar provision exists in the 1918 Act, but one of the provisions for the war-profits credit is based on the net income and invested capital of the prewar period if the corporation was in existence during such period or a part thereof.

Section 320(b) provides:

The average net income for the prewar period shall be determined by dividing the number of years within that period during the whole of which the corporation was in existence * * *.

Section 326 provides:

The average invested capital for the prewar period shall be determined by dividing the number of years within that period during the whole of which the corporation was in existence * * *.

Section 330 provides:

That in the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership after January 1, 1911, of a trade or business now carried on by a corporation, the corporation shall for purposes of this title be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of such predecessor trade or business for all or any part of the prewar period prior to the organization of the corporation now carrying on such trade or business shall be deemed to have been the net income and invested capital of such corporation.

Assuming that it could be done, the Committee knows of no provision of the law which provides that in determining the war-profits credit under the 1918 Act, income and invested capital attributable to certain abandoned branches or departments of a business conducted during the prewar period be segregated and eliminated from prewar data, and in the present case the Committee can not concede that this could be done even with approximate accuracy.

In view of the foregoing, it is recommended that the action of the Unit in considering all of the years 1911, 1912, and 1913 as this company's prewar period be sustained.

3. It appears to be unnecessary to discuss at length the third contention raised by the appellant, for the reason that if it were conceded it would in effect be allowing indirectly a paid-in surplus for intangibles, and this Committee has repeatedly and consistently held that no paid-in surplus can be allowed either directly or indirectly with respect to intangible assets acquired.

Briefly the facts are: The M Company was incorporated in December, 1916, and acquired the assets and business of the N Company for 80x dollars common stock and 20x dollars preferred stock and the assumption by the former of liabilities of the latter amounting to 22.3x dollars. The tangible assets acquired were appraised by an appraisal company at 127.5x dollars. After deducting the liabilities assumed, 22.3x dollars, the net value of tangibles was 105.2x dollars, for which stock of the par value of 100x dollars was issued, resulting in a paid-in surplus of 5.2x dollars. The Unit has allowed this latter amount. The company contends that inasmuch as it acquired a mixed aggregate of tangible and intangible property it is entitled to have an allocation made of the stock issued so as to apply a fair proportion thereof against the intangible property acquired, which amount should be included in invested capital subject to the limitations prescribed by law, and a like fair proportion to tangible property which would result in a paid-in surplus with respect to such tangible property equal to the difference between the actual value thereof and the par value of the stock fairly allocated thereto.

The Committee can not concede this contention, and in line with its uniform practice heretofore must recommend that the action of the Unit on this point be sustained.

The company contends, and the evidence in the file abundantly supports the contention, that at date of reorganization in 1916 it acquired very valuable intangible assets. There seems to be no question, therefore, that the necessary exclusion of these assets from invested capital created an abnormality therein which justifies special assessment. The excess profits tax assessed for 1917 amounts to — per cent plus of net income and the war and excess-profits taxes for 1918 amounts to — per cent plus of net income. The Committee accordingly recommends that proper comparatives be carefully selected for both 1917 and 1918, with a view to giving effect to the intangible assets excluded in the computation of this company's invested capital and that assessment of taxes be made on the basis of such comparatives, provided any relief is afforded thereby.

Summing up: It is recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that in the absence of evidence of error the rates of depreciation used by the Unit in computing allowable depreciation deductions in 1917 and 1918 be approved; that the action of the Unit in considering this company's prewar period as covering all of the prewar years, and in excluding from invested capital paid-in surplus with respect to intangible assets acquired at date of reorganization in 1916, be sustained; and that because of the exclusion of such intangible assets it be recognized that an abnormality exists in this company's invested capital which entitles it to special assessment for both 1917 and 1918 and that assessment be made on the basis of comparatives carefully selected, provided any relief is thereby afforded.

A telephone company should make a 1918 return for its accounting period, either calendar or fiscal year, and all income applicable to such period should be included in the corporation's return irrespective of the portion of the year during which it may have been operated under Government control. The invested capital should be computed on the basis of a 12 months' period and not prorated.

The entire amount of Federal income, war profits, and excess profits taxes accrued for the taxable year remains a part of invested capital for the succeeding year (since it is not deductible from gross income in returns) until the taxes become due in the succeeding year. Accrual of taxes for the taxable year does not affect invested capital for the taxable year, except to the extent that the accrual of such taxes will cause dividend payments to draw on surplus as at the beginning of the year.

Memorandum accounts of estimated earnings not considered sufficiently definite to be used instead of the average monthly earnings in computing invested capital under article 857, Regulations 45.

In the case of the M Company three points are presented for consideration and decision: (1) Whether an accrual of taxes for the months of January, February, and March of 1917 is properly used in computing the invested capital for the year 1917: (2) whether, assuming that the bureau was warranted in taking accrued taxes for those months into consideration, was it not in error in using the monthly earnings instead of the average earnings for the year; and (3) whether any computation can reduce the capital below the actual paid-in capital of the corporation.

The situation presented was brought about in the following manner: The corporation apparently had earnings of 11x dollars for the months of January, February, and March, 1917. During the month of March it declared and paid a dividend of 10x dollars, which amount, taken in connection with the accrual of taxes on the earnings for the first three months of 1917, exceeds the amount of earnings for that period and the balance was construed to have been paid out of accumulated surplus and capital of the corporation at the close of the year 1916 (Incidentally it may be mentioned that the corporation was placed in the position of distributing surplus and capital because at the time of the payment of the dividend there were apparently sufficient earnings to pay the dividend and also to take care of the taxes under the laws then enacted.)

The argument of the corporation relative to the first point is that to use the accrual of taxes in the manner stated is to create a situation in which dividends which were actually paid out of current earnings are made to appear to be practically paid out of surplus and undivided profits, thus working a hardship which the law does not seem to impose. It is presented that the accrued taxes were not paid and were not required to be paid until more than one year after the declaration of the dividend. This point may be disposed of by reference to article 857, Regulations 45, which authorizes the method used for determining the aggregate amount of earnings of the taxable year available for all purposes on any given date. The grounds upon which this article rests have been thoroughly re-examined in connection with this case, and no sufficient reason to change the established ruling has been found.

The other two points are disposed of by the disposition of the second point at issue, as a settlement on the basis recommended will raise the invested capital above the actual paid-in capital and thus dispose of point three.

The second point presented by the corporation is that, assuming that the bureau was warranted in taking accrued taxes into consideration, it was in error in using the monthly earnings instead of the average earnings for the year. Article 857, Regulations 45, provides in substance that average earnings shall be used "unless the corporation shows from its books or other records that a greater proportion of its earnings for the year was available on such date." The agreed statement as to this is that the corporation did not close its books each month, but that it made a fairly accurate memorandum estimate of the earnings of each month for the use of the officers of the corporation. This estimate was not carried into the balance sheet of the corporation, but is asserted to be simply a memorandum for use as above stated. The examining officer, however, accepted this memorandum as a sufficient record of the earnings of the corporation for the three months in question, which estimate was less than the average for those three months would show. But the corporation does not close its books at the end of each month, and the memorandum in question was an informal approximation, insufficient to overthrow the general presumption in favor of the average or prorating method, which in this and many other similar situations under the law has frequently been applied against the desire of the taxpayer. It is recommended, therefore, that the tax liability be computed on the basis of average monthly earnings instead of the figures shown by the memorandum.

31-20-1110: O. D. 619.

In the last sentence of article 857, Regulations 45, it is recognized that in some cases the computation of the amount of net income available for distribution as dividends will be indeterminate. This will be true in any case in which the amount distributed as a dividend exceed the earnings of the taxable year to the date of the dividend payment plus the accrued Federal income and profits taxes on such earnings.

The computation under such conditions is shown in the following illustration:

30-21-1749: O. D. 982.

In accordance with the principle set out in article 857 of Regulations 45, dividends are deemed to be paid from true earned surplus. In carrying the earnings for a proportionate part of the year to surplus account for the purpose of declaring a dividend, the earnings so carried should represent the earnings of the current year less accrued expenses. Where the true earned surplus of the current year proportioned to the date of dividend payment is not sufficient to cover such payment, the true earnings included in the surplus account as of the beginning of the taxable year will be deemed to cover such payment.

This does not conflict with the principle embodied in article 845 of the regulations. It is in accord with the accounting principle that where accounts are kept on the accrual basis, expenses of a year should be charged against the income of that year. In order, therefore, to apply this principle, taxes of the current year should be charged against the income of that year, and only that proportion of the income of the current year is available for dividends which is in excess of taxes and other proper charges against such income.

I('22)-29-416: I. T. 1396.

Revenue Act of 1918.

In computing, under the provisions of article 857, the amount of earnings available for the payment of dividends, all income for the taxable year over and above expenses, taxes, and other accrued liabilities of such year, regardless of whether or not any part of such income is exempt from Federal income tax, should be considered.

In making such computation donations previously paid must be deducted.

II('23)-3-773: I. T. 1602.

Revenue Act of 1921.

In October, 1921, the M Company distributed a cash dividend to its stockholders, such distribution being in excess of the available surplus, undivided profits, and earnings. It was the express purpose of the company when the distribution was made that all or any portion of the amount distributed in excess of the available surplus, undivided profits, and earnings would be chargeable to depletion reserve as a return of capital. The company determines in each year as of September 30 the rates of depletion and depreciation for the current year, and book entries in accordance with such determination are made as of December 31 of each year.

The question is raised whether the charges determined as of September 30, providing for depreciation and depletion for 1921, should be allocated proportionately to each month beginning with January, 1921, and become a charge against the surplus, undivided profits, and earnings available as of the close of each such month, even though the entries for depletion and depreciation were not actually determined and booked until December, 1921, subsequent to the declaration of payment of the distribution above referred to.

It is held, that the net income for the year 1921, determined after providing for depreciation and depletion and also for an accrual of income and excess profits taxes for the year, should be prorated over the year from January 1, 1921, to the date of the payment of the dividend made in October, 1921, in order to determine the amount available for distribution to the stockholders. Any excess of the dividend over the amount of surplus from previous years and of current earnings is a return of capital in a corresponding amount.

II('23)-16-1003; A. R. R. 2839

Revenue Act of 1918.

Article 857 is construed to mean that if the books of a corporation do not show the amount of earnings or profits on a dividend date, and the corporation actually closed its books on June 30 and December 31 of each year, the earnings or profits for the accounting period January 1 to June 30 should be deemed to have accumulated ratably in the case of a dividend declared in May.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in prorating the entire net earnings for the year 1918 in the determination of the amount of such earnings available for dividends, and in deducting from such earnings thus ascertained the accrued taxes up to the dividend dates.

It is stated that the nature of the business engaged in by the appellant enables it to keep its accounts in such a manner as to determine its profits within a reasonable degree of accuracy, monthly, upon the basis of perpetual inventories; that physical inventories were taken on June 30 and December 31 of 1918 as well as in other years and that the book inventory on those dates has consistently been adjusted to the physical inventory; that the books were actually closed on both dates and the income accurately determined; that the income from January 1, 1918, to June 30, 1918, thus determined was 1.51x dollars; that the net income for the full year ended December 31, 1918, was 1.12x dollars resulting from a net loss from operations in the latter half of the year; and that dividends in the amounts of .02x dollars and 1.12x dollars were paid on March — and May —, 1918, respectively.

In computing the deductions from invested capital for 1918 on account of the dividends paid on May —, 1918, the Unit averaged the earnings for the full year monthly and from this average deducted the taxes accrued up to the dividend date.

The Unit states in its memorandum to the Committee that it has interpreted article 857 of Regulations 45 to mean that unless an actual closing of the books was made at the dividend date the earnings for the entire year should be averaged monthly.

That article of the regulations provides in substance that average earnings shall be used "unless the corporation shows from its books or other records that a greater proportion of its earnings for the year was available on such date," which provision follows in substance the law itself, section 201(e) of the Revenue Act of 1918. This section provides that if the books of a corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits to any definite date, the earnings or profits for the accounting period shall be deemed to have been accumulated ratably during such period.

In view, therefore, of the express provisions of the statute, and the regulations issued thereunder, the Committee finds no authority for the Unit's interpretation of article 857, as stated above. It is therefore recommended that the Unit's action in prorating the earnings for the entire year in determining the amount of such earnings available for the dividend paid on May —, 1918, be reversed, that the earnings shown by the books on June 30, 1918, be deemed to have been accumulated ratably from January 1 to the dividend date, May —, and that the deduction from invested capital be recomputed accordingly.

The appellant's representative's protest against the alleged illegality of that portion of article 857 of Regulations 45 which provides that accrued taxes shall be deducted in determining the amount of earnings available for dividends seems to have been filed more as a matter of record than as a serious contention in this appeal. It was admitted at the oral hearing that until this article was changed the Unit's action in following it was correct. This provision has several times in the past been reconsidered and each time adhered to by the Bureau. There is, in this case, no sufficient reason to recommend a change in the established practice relative thereto, and it is therefore recommended that the Unit's action on this point be sustained.

Article 858.—Effect of Ordinary Dividend (Reg. 45—¶813, ante): (Reg. 62—¶1229, post).

26-19-598: O. 942.

The exchange of  $x$  shares of common stock for one of preferred stock whereby the capital stock is reduced is a capital transaction and does not result in net income or earned surplus. Whether such a transaction gives rise to a paid-in surplus not decided.

An amount taken from capital or paid-in surplus to meet dividend requirements is deemed a liquidation of capital to that extent and necessitates a reduction in the invested capital. The sum so received by a stockholder is to be regarded as a return of capital so far as it does not exceed the cost of the stock to him, or if acquired prior to March 1, 1913, its fair market value on that date, any excess being taxable as a gain or profit. In case of subsequent payments from capital or liquidation payments upon dissolution, all prior distributions from capital should be considered in determining whether there has been a gain over the cost of the stock or its fair market value as of March 1, 1913.

Dividends paid while there is an operating deficit shall be deemed to be from capital or paid-in surplus, even though there are earnings of the taxable year sufficient to pay the dividend in whole or in part.

The taxpayer, the M Company, is a holding company owning the stock of about  $y$  companies. On December 31, 1917, the taxpayer had a surplus. Such surplus was produced in past years largely by the cancellation of common stock in this manner— $x$  shares of common exchanged for one of preferred. An analysis of the surplus account, it is stated, will show that most of the surplus is the result of the exchanges of stock, and if such items were eliminated there would be a deficit.

The questions to be decided are: (1) What is the nature and the result of the transaction by which  $x$  shares of common stock were exchanged for one of preferred? (2) What is the effect of payments to stockholders from capital or paid-in surplus? (3) What is the nature and effect of the dividend payment in this case? (4) Does the fact that an operating deficit would exist if the items in the surplus account resulting from such exchange of stock were eliminated affect the result in this case? (5) Whether invested capital can be increased by the accumulation of an earned surplus when an operating deficit exists, or whether current earnings must first be applied to repair the deficit?

(1) What is the nature and the result of the transaction by which  $x$  shares of common stock were exchanged for one of preferred stock? Such a transaction whereby the capital stock is reduced is a capital transaction and does not give rise to net income or earned surplus. (Article 542, Regulations 45.) Whether such a surrender of stock gives rise to a paid-in surplus or not is a question depending upon facts which are not disclosed by the taxpayer, and no decision is made upon this question. (Article 561, Regulations 45.)

(2) What is the effect of payments to stockholders from capital or paid-in surplus? A distribution of any part of the capital or paid-in surplus is to be regarded as a return to the stockholder of part of the capital represented by his shares of stock. Upon a subsequent sale of such stock, his profit will be the excess of the selling price over the cost to him of such stock or its fair market value as of March 1, 1913, after applying on such cost or value the amount of any such capital distribution. (See article 1549, Regulations 45.) Profits are the only proper source of dividends, and the declaration of dividends when there are no profits is contrary to law. (Conington, Corporate Organization and Management, p. 399; Thompson on Corporations, Article 5312.) That a surplus such as here considered is capital and not subject to distribution as dividends has been expressly held many times.

(See Roberts v. Roberts-Wick Co., 184 N. Y. 257, 77 N. E. 13, and cases therein cited.) See also section 201 (a) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1918.

(3) What is the nature and effect of the dividend payment in this case? The dividend paid in February, 1918 (assuming that the taxable year of this corporation is the calendar year), is deemed to have been paid, first, from earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, and on hand at the beginning of the year; second, if that fund is insufficient, from earnings of the taxable year available on the date that the dividend is paid; third, if those funds are insufficient, from earnings and profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913; fourth, if those funds are insufficient, from capital or paid-in surplus. (See section 201, Revenue Act of 1918; article 858, Regulations 45.)

In this case there is no earned surplus on hand at the beginning of the year, so that the only question is whether the earnings of the taxable year (class 2) are available for the payment of dividends when there is an operating deficit, or whether such dividends must be deemed to be a distribution of capital. This is not a question which should turn upon the legality of such a dividend in the particular jurisdiction, but is a question depending largely on accounting principles and business practice. From that standpoint there is no doubt but that current profits should be applied to make good the existing deficit before any dividends are distributed. (Dickinson, Accounting, p. 73.) It is the weight of authority in the United States, moreover, that the declaration of a dividend out of current profits, while there is an operating deficit, is contrary to law. (Conyington, Corporate Organization and Management, p. 399.) It is, therefore, held that the dividend in this case was the distribution of capital. It reduces the invested capital and should be treated as a return of capital to the stockholder.

This decision is based on the fact, as stated by the taxpayer, that the M Company is a holding company, owning the stocks of y different corporations. Whether this principle is applicable to a corporation operating a property where the investment of the capital in wasting assets is contemplated, is not decided.

(4) Does the fact that an operating deficit would exist if the items in the surplus account resulting from such cancellation of stock were eliminated affect the result in this case? The Regulations do not require a reduction in invested capital because of an operating deficit. (Article 860, Regulations 45.) They do require, however, a reduction in invested capital where there has been a distribution in liquidation, or a return of capital to the stockholders. The existence of an operating deficit, therefore, does not directly affect the invested capital and is significant in this case only as it throws light upon the sources from which the dividend here in question was paid.

(5) May invested capital be increased by the accumulation of an earned surplus when an operating deficit existed, or must the earnings of the taxable year be applied to repair the deficit? The law defines invested capital as cash or property paid in for stock, earned surplus, and undivided profits and paid-in surplus. The act does not require a reduction of invested capital on account of an operating deficit. It is obvious, however, that no earned surplus can be accumulated until the deficit or impairment of paid-in capital has been made good. (Article 838, Regulations 45.)

It is held, therefore, that the exchange of 4x shares of common stock for one of preferred stock whereby the capital stock is reduced is a capital transaction and does not result in net income or earned surplus. Whether such a transaction gives rise to a paid-in surplus not decided.

An amount taken from capital or paid-in surplus to meet dividend requirements is deemed a liquidation of capital to that extent and necessitates a reduction in the invested capital. The sum so received by a stockholder is to be regarded as a return of capital so far as it does not exceed the cost of the stock to him, or if acquired prior to March 1, 1913, its fair market value on that date, any excess being taxable as a gain or profit. In case of subsequent payments from capital or liquidation payments upon dissolution, all prior distributions from capital should be considered in determining whether there has been a gain over the cost of the stock or its fair market value as of March 1, 1913.

Dividends paid while there is an operating deficit shall be deemed to be from capital or paid-in surplus, even though there are earnings of the taxable year sufficient to pay the dividend in whole or in part.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee is in receipt of a request for advice upon certain points, which have been raised in connection with the audit of the return of the M Copper Company, and in connection with the audit of other copper companies.

It appears that during the year 1917, and prior to August 6, 1917, the M Company paid a dividend of approximately  $x$  dollars, which was declared to have been paid out of earnings accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. At the date of the dividend payment the excess of depletion allowable for 1917 on the basis of March 1, 1913, over the depletion actually sustained on the basis of cost, was an amount in excess of the dividend declared to have been paid out of earnings accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. The M Company therefore contends that before any impairment of invested capital as of December 31, 1916, is determined because of the dividend payment, there should be taken into consideration the realization of the appreciation in values as of March 1, 1913, which has been converted into cash and reflected on its books during the current year.

The question in connection with the other copper companies involves essentially the same point without the complication of the dividend. In the opinion of the Committee, neither contention is well taken. The M Company having by appropriate action declared the dividend out of earnings accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, and so advised its stockholders, will not now be heard to say that the dividend was actually paid out of earnings of the current year, and as will be subsequently developed in this memorandum the Committee is clearly of the opinion that appreciation prior to March 1, 1913, realized in the taxable year, is an earning of the taxable year and not an earning accumulated prior to March 1, 1913.

In the Baldwin Locomotive case (Baldwin Locomotive Works v. McCoach, 221 Fed. 59) it was held that appreciation in values is not earnings or profits until realized. This decision was rendered under the Act of 1909, and following it no appreciation in the value of corporate properties to March 1, 1913, was reported or tax paid as income or earnings notwithstanding the Act of October 3, 1913, gave to such corporations the right to fix value as of March 1, 1913, including appreciation, as the basis for any subsequent gain or loss.

Following this decision and the decisions of the Supreme Court as to the taxation of appreciation to March 1, 1913, it is clear that the realization of such appreciation is an earning of the year in which such appreciation is realized, although under the latter decisions it is not a taxable earning.

Since the excess profits tax law definitely holds that earnings of the taxable year are not to be included in earned surplus or undivided profits, realization of appreciation in values to March 1, 1913, is not a proper addition to invested capital as the realization takes place, as contended for by the companies.

It is therefore held that the dividend payment of the M Company must be deemed to have been paid from earnings or profits realized prior to March 1, 1913, and therefore that the invested capital of the company must be reduced by that amount; and secondly, that realization during the taxable year of appreciation in values to March 1, 1913, can not be included in the invested capital of the taxable year.

Held, that the expression, in a declaration by the directors of a corporation, that a dividend is "payable as convenient to the funds of the company" creates a condition precedent. Dividends so declared are not necessarily to be considered payable as of the date of the declaration.

The Committee has under consideration the appeal of the M Company from an additional assessment made by the Income Tax Unit for the years 1917 and 1918. The single question at issue is: Whether the declaration of a dividend expressed in terms to be payable as convenient to the funds of the company of necessity imported a diminution of invested capital and surplus to an amount commensurate with the gross sum of the contemplated dividend, required to be adjusted as of the date of the dividend's declaration instead of as of the time or times of its actual payment.

Dividends were declared by this corporation in January, April, and July, 1917, and in the year 1918 in June, July, and October. In each instance the resolution of the board of directors was expressed in the terms to be "payable as convenient to the funds of the company." The first dividend in 1917 was actually paid in 10 installments between the dates of January 23 and May 29, inclusive, and the payments of the remaining dividends declared were, with the exception of that of October, 1918, made over similar extended periods of time and in varied amounts. The dividend declared October, 1918, was paid November, 1918.

In the current adjustment of invested capital in each of the taxable years the Income Tax Unit used the date of declaration of the dividends as the date of payment. The corporation contends that the actual dates of payment should govern.

It is not shown in the facts submitted in this case whether the dividends were actually accrued on the books of the corporation as of the dates when declared, or whether the charge was made against income of the taxable years at the time the payments were made.

Article 858 of Regulations 45, on which the Income Tax Unit relied in making its adjustment, reads as follows:

A dividend other than a stock dividend affects the computation of invested capital from the date when the dividend is payable and not from the date when it is declared, except that where no date is set for its payment the date when declared will be considered also the date when payable for the purpose of this article.

The regulations, as above quoted, clearly contemplate that a dividend must not affect the computation of invested capital, except from the date when the dividend is payable. In the instant case, the date payable is when the funds of the company are convenient. It is considered by the Committee that the expression "except where no date is set for its payment the date when declared will be considered also the date when payable" is on the assumption that the corporation has resources to pay and does immediately intend to pay. When the corporation can conveniently pay the dividend, so declared out of the funds of the company, is a matter of administrative decision by the officers of the company and until such decision, as a condition precedent, is reached there is, in effect, no dividend to be paid and no reciprocal right on the part of stockholders to immediately exact payment. The dividend resolutions were merely tentative declarations of the corporation's intent to pay certain dividends at a subsequent date to be determined by the condition of the company's treasury.

The Committee is accordingly of the opinion that the Income Tax Unit erred in considering the dates of the resolutions of the directors as determining the dates when the dividends were payable and recommends that computation of invested capital be revised to give effect to the condition precedent which makes the dividend, in each instance, payable when the funds are conveniently available.

Revenue Act of 1918. Dividends. Invested Capital.

Where earnings and profits accumulated from March 1, 1913, to the beginning of the taxable year are insufficient to cover dividends during the first 60 days of the taxable year but there are available for payment of such dividends not only sufficient earnings and profits of the taxable year but also sufficient undivided profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, any such dividends in excess of earnings and profits accumulated from March 1, 1913, to the beginning of the taxable year shall be considered as paid from earnings and profits of the taxable year and, accordingly, invested capital of the corporation as of the beginning of the taxable year shall not be reduced by the amount of such excess.

An opinion has been requested upon the question whether dividends paid by the M Company during the first 60 days of the taxable year 1918 should be treated as paid out of the accumulated earnings and profits of previous taxable years. This corporation had on December 31, 1917, outstanding capital stock fully paid up of the par value of 8x dollars and undivided profits amounting to 87x dollars. It paid dividends during the first 60 days of 1918 as follows: January 12, 1.2x dollars; January 18, 1.2x dollars; February 4, 1.2x dollars; February 13, 1.2x dollars; February 21, 1.2x dollars; and February 28, 1.2x dollars; a total of 7.2x dollars. March 1, 1913, it had undivided profits amounting to approximately 82x dollars. It has been the practice of this corporation since 1911 to distribute dividends as fast as its profits were earned. The dividends have been uniformly 1.2x dollars and have been paid at intervals varying from one week to one month. The president of the corporation has filed an affidavit stating that the dividends above enumerated were paid out of profits earned in 1918. The corporation seeks exceptions from the rule stated in article 858 of Regulations 45 (1920 edition) that—

* * * The surplus and undivided profits as of the beginning of the taxable year will be reduced as of the date when the dividend is payable by the entire amount of any dividend paid during the first 60 days of the taxable year. * * * on the ground that the dividends in question were in fact out of current earnings.

Section 201(e) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides:

Any distribution made during the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated during preceding taxable years; but any distribution made during the remainder of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated between the close of the preceding taxable year and the date of distribution, to the extent of such earnings or profits, and if the books of the corporation do not show the amount of such earnings or profits, the earnings or profits for the accounting period within which the distribution was made shall be deemed to have been accumulated ratably during such period.

The question is whether the phrase "shall be deemed" as used in the first clause of section 201(e) creates a conclusive presumption. It will be observed that the phrase is used three times in the subdivision. It is used six times in section 201, and many times in other parts of the statute. Nowhere does it appear to be used to create merely a rebuttable presumption, except in section 402, where the language is "shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed." The presumption, therefore, must be held to be conclusive.

While the presumption is held to be conclusive, the statute must be construed so as to give effect to all its provisions. The intention of section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1918 was to relieve from the tax dividends paid by a corporation out of earnings and profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. The Act provides, however, that before such earnings and profits may be distributed (free from tax) the corporation must first distribute its earnings and profits accumulated since March 1, 1913. This result is reached by section 201(b), which provides:

* * * Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, * * * but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed * * * exempt from tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

To construe the language of section 201(e) so as to hold that a distribution was made from earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, while there was still on hand earnings or profits accumulated since March 1, 1913, would be holding that this paragraph was in conflict with the language just quoted from paragraph (b) of the same section. However, construing the two paragraphs together, they provide that any distribution made during the first 60 days of the taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from earnings and profits accumulated during preceding taxable years, but all earnings and profits accumulated since March 1, 1913, must be distributed before earnings and profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed free from tax. The presumption contained in the first part of section 201(e) therefore applies only to earnings and profits accumulated between February 28, 1913, and January 1, 1918, and has no application to earnings accumulated in any other period. If the earnings or profits accumulated for the period from March 1, 1913, to January 1, 1918, are not sufficient to pay the dividends declared during the first 60 days of the taxable year, and there are other profits accumulated after March 1, 1913, such earnings and profits are to be applied to the dividends so declared.

In Advisory Tax Board Recommendation 43 (C. B. 1, pp. 26-27) the case considered was that of a corporation paying dividends during the first 60 days of 1918. It had no surplus earned between March 1, 1913, and January 1, 1918, but had surplus earned prior to March 1, 1913, and also sufficient earnings accumulated after January 1, 1918, and prior to each of such dividends out of which to pay it. It was held that the 60-day presumption was inapplicable and that the dividends were paid out of the earnings of 1918.

In Law Opinion 942 (C. B. 1, pp. 300-302) a case was considered where a corporation paid a dividend during the first 60 days of 1918. In the course of the opinion it was ruled, following Advisory Tax Board Recommendation 43, that if earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, and on hand at the beginning of the taxable year were insufficient to cover such dividend, a dividend paid during the first 60 days of the taxable year is deemed to be paid out of earnings of the taxable year.

In the present case there is no compelling reason for departing from previous rulings. It is held, therefore, that the dividends paid by the taxpayer during the first 60 days of 1918 were paid out of earnings and profits accumulated during the period from March 1, 1913, to January 1, 1918, to the extent of such earnings and profits on hand on January 1, 1918, which sum is to be determined by deducting from the earnings and profits of that period the dividends paid during that period, and that the balance of dividends paid during the first 60 days of 1918 were paid from earnings and profits of 1918. The invested capital of the taxpayer should be reduced by prorating such dividends paid out of earnings and profits accumulated from March 1, 1913, to January 1, 1918, but not such dividends paid out of earnings and profits of 1918.

CARL A. MAPES,
Solicitor of Internal Revenue.

Revenue Act of 1918.

The M Company, a foreign corporation, is a subsidiary of the O Company (known as the parent company), a domestic corporation. All of the stock of the former company is owned by the latter. The stock of the foreign company is being distributed to the stockholders of the domestic company. The question is presented as to whether the distribution of the stock of the subsidiary company among the stockholders of the parent company reduces the capital and surplus account of the parent company by the amount of the value of the stock so distributed.

Held, in view of the conclusive presumption in section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1918 that any distribution made by a corporation after the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made out of earnings and profits accumulated since the close of the preceding taxable year, that such distribution will not affect the invested capital of the parent company, provided the earnings for the current year as of the date of the distribution available for dividend purposes equaled the amount at which such stock was included in the invested capital of the company as of the beginning of the current year.

If the available earnings for the current year as of the date when the distribution took place were not sufficient, the invested capital as of the beginning of the year would be reduced accordingly.

Revenue Act of 1921.

With reference to a corporation having a fiscal year ending November 30, which discontinued its business and sold its plant in December, 1920, and which went into liquidation and paid a dividend on December 15, 1920, from the profits in part from the sale of the plant, it was held:

That under the provisions of section 201(f) of the Revenue Act of 1921 a dividend paid during the first 60 days of a taxable year is presumed conclusively to have been paid from earnings or profits accumulated during the preceding taxable years, so far as they are available, and that this presumption can not be rebutted by showing that earnings were accumulated during the first 60 days of the taxable year in an amount sufficient to pay the dividends in whole or in part.

That the surplus and undivided profits of the corporation on hand at November 30, 1920, which represented earnings accumulated during the period from March 1, 1913, to November 30, 1920, must be first applied against the amount of the dividend paid December 15, 1920.

That in case this dividend exceeded the amount of the surplus and undivided profits available for its payment, the excess will be deemed to have been paid out of the earnings of the taxable year available at the date when the dividend was paid, and that to the extent that such earnings are insufficient, the dividend will be deemed to have been paid out of the earned surplus accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, or to be a liquidation of paid-in surplus or capital.

The above methods of allocating the dividend must be followed, although profits were realized by the corporation through the sale of its plant December 1920, which were actually applied to the payment of the dividend.

Article 859.—Effect of Stock Dividend (Reg. 45—¶814, ante): (Reg. 62—¶1230, post).

1-19-7: T. B. R. 3.

Under the Revenue Act of 1917 stock dividends paid during any taxable year, and under the Revenue Act of 1918 stock dividends paid after the first 60 days of any taxable year, shall be deemed to have been paid from earnings or profits, but the payment of a stock dividend has no effect upon the amount of invested capital.

In determining the amount by which invested capital should be reduced on account of dividend payments made during the taxable year in excess of current earnings, should stock dividends be treated the same as cash dividends?

The following example illustrates the point in question:

Current earnings to Apr. 1, 1917.....	$33,000
Stock dividends, Apr. 1, 1917.....	30,000
Balance current earnings undistributed.....	3,000
Earnings for April, 1917.....	12,000
Current earnings on hand May 1, 1917.....	15,000
Cash dividend May 1, 1917.....	27,000
Dividend payments in excess of current earnings.....	12,000
12,000 averaged for eight months.....	8,000 which is the amount by which invested capital as of the beginning of the year should be reduced.

The provisions of section 31 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1917, and section 201 of the Revenue Act of 1918, place stock dividends upon the same basis as cash dividends in this connection. The latter section provides, "That the term 'dividend' * * * means any distribution made by a corporation * * * whether in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913," and the definition in the Act of 1917 is substantially the same. Section 31 (b) of the Act of 1917 provides that any distribution made during the year shall be deemed to have been made from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus. Section 201 (e) of the Act of 1918 provides that any distribution made after the first 60 days of any taxable year shall be deemed to have been made from current earnings or profits so far as possible. The language of these provisions is general and is susceptible of only one interpretation. It applies to all distributions of earnings, whether made in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation. And any such distributions in excess of earnings or profits of the taxable year will reduce the surplus at the beginning of the taxable year by the amount of such excess.

The payment of a stock dividend, however, has no effect upon the amount of invested capital, article 859, Regulations 45 (final edition). The distribution of a stock dividend is in effect a capitalization of current earnings or of earned surplus on hand at the beginning of the year. The capitalization of current earnings does not increase the invested capital and the capitalization of surplus on hand at the beginning of the year does not decrease the invested capital. Nevertheless a stock dividend distributed at any time during the year under the Act of 1917 or after the first 60 days of the taxable year under the Act of 1918 must be deemed to have been paid from current earnings or profits so far as possible, so that the accumulated earnings or profits of the taxable year available thereafter for cash dividends or other payments are correspondingly reduced. In the specific illustration given, therefore, the result is correct, but in a case in which the stock dividend was in whole or in part a capitalization of the surplus on hand at the beginning of the taxable year, no reduction in invested capital should be made because of the capitalization of such surplus.

Revenue Act of 1918.

During 1914 a corporation declared a stock dividend at a date when its surplus was sufficient to cover the amount of the dividend. A net operating loss was sustained for that year, however, so that at the close of the year the corporation's balance sheet showed a deficit by reason of the dividend declared. In 1915 a very large net loss was sustained and the stockholders returned to the corporation a majority of the stock which they had received through the stock dividend distributed during the preceding year.

The question was submitted as to whether the declaration and distribution of the stock dividend created paid-in capital stock within the meaning of section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918, so that the stock distributed through the dividend would not be affected by a subsequent operating deficit, and whether the return of a portion of this stock by the stockholders created paid-in surplus.

Held, that the conversion of earned surplus into capital stock through the declaration of a stock dividend did not create paid-in capital stock within the meaning of section 326 of the Revenue Act of 1918. The invested capital of the corporation, in so far as it was represented by the capital stock thus created, was subject to reduction on account of an operating deficit. The return of a portion of the stock received through the stock dividend, as a donation by the stockholders, did not create paid-in surplus equivalent to the par value of the stock donated.

Revenue Acts of 1918 and 1921.

The conversion of earned surplus into capital stock through the medium of a stock dividend does not exempt the capital of a corporation, to the extent that it was derived from earned surplus, from reduction on account of a subsequent operating deficit in computing invested capital.

A corporation was organized with a paid-in capital stock of 50x dollars which was later increased to 250x dollars through a stock dividend of 200x dollars declared out of earned surplus. Subsequent to the declaration of the stock dividend the corporation suffered operating losses for several years which caused a total operating deficit of approximately 80x dollars.

The question was submitted as to whether in computing the invested capital of the corporation it was entitled to the benefit of its full 250x dollars capital stock without any deduction for the operating deficit, or whether article 860, Regulations 45, refers only to the original capital paid in, and, therefore, requires a reduction to be made on account of any operating deficit to the extent of the stock dividend declared.

Held, that the conversion of earned surplus into capital stock through the medium of a stock dividend does not exempt the capital of a corporation, to the extent that it was derived from earned surplus, from reduction on account of a subsequent operating deficit in computing invested capital and that the invested capital of the corporation should be reduced by 80x dollars, although no reduction had taken place in its outstanding capital stock.

Law Section 326.—Invested Capital (1918 Act—¶555, ante): (1921 Act—¶1035, post).

Article 862.—Purchase of Stock (Reg. 45—¶817, ante): (Reg. 62—¶1233, post).

18-20-891: O. D. 479.

A corporation issued additional shares of stock equal to approximately 7 per cent of the amount previously outstanding, using the proceeds from the sale of the stock to purchase an additional plant which, however, was later abandoned as a manufacturing plant and sold. The proceeds of this sale were used to purchase equipment for carrying out Government contracts during the war. Upon the completion of the contracts the corporation had more funds than were needed in its business and retired approximately twice the amount of additional stock previously issued, paying for each share an amount in excess of its par value. The amount representing the par value of the stock was charged to capital account, and the amount paid in excess of its par value was charged to surplus accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. After the distribution, the corporation had no greater surplus than was reasonably required for the needs of its business.

Held, that the distribution was not a dividend within the meaning of section 201 (a) and (b) of the Revenue Act of 1918, but was a distribution in part liquidation of the corporation within the meaning of section 201 (c) of the Act.

The transaction should be treated as a voluntary purchase by the corporation of its capital stock for the purpose of its retirement, and the entire cost of such stock is a required deduction from invested capital of the company as of the beginning of the taxable year and effective from the date of purchase only to the extent that such stock has not been purchased out of the undivided profits of the taxable year.

The stockholders who sold their stock to the company should return as income, subject to both the normal and additional taxes, any excess over and above the cost of the stock to them, or its fair market value as of March 1, 1913, if acquired prior thereto.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing as a deduction from gross income the excess of the book value on January 1, 1917, of certain assets transferred over the book value as of that date of y shares of its capital stock acquired by such transfer and carried to treasury stock account, be sustained, and accordingly that the taxpayer's appeal be denied.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing a deduction for losses amounting to 13x dollars and claimed in the appellant's 1917 income and profits tax return.

The transaction giving rise to the point at issue may be briefly summarized as follows: The M Company was the operator of several stores which were located in different cities. The several stores were merely branches of the business, and were not separately incorporated. According to the records in the case, and the statements made by the appellant therein, the branch store located in Z was not operated with satisfactory results, and it had been the desire of the concern for some time prior to 1917 to divest itself of this branch business. It is shown that in October, 1917, agreement was made and contract entered into whereby the appellant transferred to A (one of its stockholders) the entire assets, business, good will, etc., of the branch store located in Z in consideration of y shares of its own capital stock, which at that time were owned and held by said A.

The taxpayer submits that book values as of January 1, 1917, as shown by its books on that date, were 67x dollars for the branch store at Z and 53x dollars for the y shares of stock held on that date by A. It is the taxpayer's contention that the transaction was one of sale wherein it sold capital assets (the Z business including physical assets, fixtures, inventory, good will, etc.), having a value of 67x dollars, which was in excess of the consideration received therefor (y shares of capital stock valued at 53x dollars), and consequently sustained a loss to the extent of such difference between values as might properly be deducted in computing taxable net income under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended by the Revenue Act of 1917, section 12(a)2. This provision of law reads that in the ascertainment of net income there shall be deducted:

All losses actually sustained and charged off within the year and not compensated by insurance or otherwise. * * *

The Income Tax Unit in its consideration of this question has held that the transaction was a capital one, i.e., one in which the appellant had purchased its own capital stock for a consideration, and that under such transaction, whether the consideration for such purchase of stock be in money or money's worth, there results no taxable gain or deductible loss for tax purposes. Accordingly, the amount deducted by the appellant has been restored to taxable net income and the necessary adjustment of invested capital has been made, resulting in an additional tax which the Unit proposes to assess. It is from such holding and proposed action on the part of the Unit that the taxpayer appeals.

It is apparent, therefore, that the question for determination by the Committee is whether the transaction is a capital one involving no gain or loss as contended by the Unit or one of sale consummated by the appellant wherein was sustained a loss which may properly be deducted in the computation of taxable net income as contended by the taxpayer. The taxpayer in contending for the latter view makes the following comments:

The Government takes the position that this was not a sale of the Z store, but a purchase of the shares in the corporation and that the excess of the value of the assets sold over the value of the stock received in payment therefor is a premium paid for the return of the shares to the corporation. This is entirely unjustified and we are unable to see upon what theory the Government can so distort the facts as to change a legitimate transaction from a sale into a purchase. The store in Z was the least successful of the stores owned by the corporation and was the subject of the most care and trouble. The motive which prompted the entire transaction was to be rid of the Z business. The sale was a legitimate one and the stock would not have been purchased under any circumstances had it not been taken in payment for the Z store. The transaction is closed and there is no reason why the loss can not be deducted.

The return in question was filed under the Act of September 8, 1916, as amended by the Act of October 3, 1917, and the loss is properly deductible under section 12(a) second, which provides for the deduction of "all losses actually sustained and charged off within the year and not compensated by insurance or otherwise." Attention is called to articles 101 and 124 of Regulations 33, revised, interpreting the Act under which this return was filed. The taxpayer is supported by the wording of the regulations in question.

If the M Company had taken in exchange for the Z store capital stock in its own company having a book value of 80x dollars, would the Government hold that the M Company was not obliged to return as income for the year 1917 the difference between 80x dollars and 67x dollars? We think not; and if a profit from such a sale is taxable and must be included in a return, then it follows that a loss is deductible.

If the M Company had taken from A, the purchaser of the Z store, a check for 53x dollars and had immediately purchased from A his y shares in the M Company for 53x dollars, giving him a check therefor, the Government would not have objected to the M Company claiming as a loss the difference between the value of the capital assets sold and the 53x dollars, but because the M Company dealt openly and above board and did not resort to an exchange of checks in the manner indicated, they are penalized for their honesty.

If the M Company had taken in exchange for the sale of the assets in question Liberty bonds or other securities of the value of the stock of the M Company taken in exchange, the Government would raise no objection to the deduction of the loss in question, and it is seriously contended that the medium of payment can make no difference in the principle involved in the transaction in question. We call the Government's attention to the regulations on dividend disbursements in which it is distinctly held that the medium of payment makes no difference.

It is observed that the appellant attempts to justify its position in this matter by applying article 101 of Regulations 33, revised, which provides:

Income from sale of capital assets.—If a corporation sells its capital assets in whole or in part, it will include in its gross income for the year in which the sale was made an amount equivalent to the excess of the sales price over the fair market price or value of such assets, as of March 1, 1913, if acquired prior to that date, or over cost, if acquired subsequent to that date. * * *

It is noted also that the taxpayer submits that had the book value of its own stock acquired in this transaction been in excess of the book value of the assets transferred therefor, the Government would have sought to tax such excess as a taxable gain or profit. The Committee has given thorough consideration to all of the arguments, briefs, and data submitted regarding the character of the transaction and the respective values of the assets and capital stock involved therein, and finds itself unable to sustain the view of the taxpayer.

It is the opinion of the Committee that as contended by the Unit the transaction was a capital one within the meaning of the law as defined by the regulations and not a sale of capital assets as argued by the taxpayer. That this transaction was one in which the appellant purchased its own stock rather than sold capital assets, seems to be borne out by the language of the contract entered into by it and A in 1917. The pertinent portion of that contract is here quoted:

This contract entered into this — day of October, 1917, between the M Company and A, witnesseth:

A sells to the M Company y shares of the capital stock of the M Company. In payment of said shares the M Company agrees as follows: * * *

(In the contract there follow certain stipulations relating to the payment and other things to be done by the M Company as considerations for the acquisition of y shares of its capital stock.)

The position taken by the Committee in this connection seems to be borne out further by articles of the regulations, legal opinions, and accounting authorities hereinafter quoted.

Article 98 of Regulations 33, revised, issued under the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended by the Act of 1917, provides:

Treasury stock—When taxable.—Treasury stock wherever and whenever that term is used in connection with the accounts of the corporation or for income tax purposes, will be held to mean stock which had been previously issued by the corporation and which had been repossessed by it through purchase or otherwise, and then carried on its books as an asset. If such stock is resold at a price in excess of its cost upon repossession, such excess shall be returned as income for the year in which resold. * * *

Article 542 of Regulations 45 issued under the Revenue Act of 1918 provides in part as follows:

Sale of capital stock.— * * * If the corporation purchases any of its stock and holds it as treasury stock, the sale of such stock will be considered a capital transaction, and the proceeds of such sale will be treated as capital and will not constitute income of the corporation. A corporation realizes no gain or loss from the purchase of its own stock. See articles 563, 861, and 862.

It should be here noted that the regulations issued under the two Acts materially differ so far as concerns the subsequent sale of treasury stock acquired by the issuing corporation after originally issued. This question, however, is not germane to the case under consideration and may be passed by merely stating that the provisions of article 542, Regulations 45, supersede article 98 of Regulations 33, revised, and should control in all cases involving such circumstances. While article 542 of Regulations 45 is issued under the Revenue Act of 1918 and applies primarily to returns filed under that Act, it is equally applicable to returns under prior Acts and is controlling in the instant case in that portion thereof which reads:

A corporation realizes no gain or loss from the purchase of its own stock.

As before stated, the Committee is of the opinion that the transaction involved is a capital one, and that for the purpose of determination it is immaterial that the consideration given in exchange for the capital stock repurchased was not money but money's worth, such as in the instant case.

The Solicitor of Internal Revenue stated in his Law Opinion 296 (not published), issued under the Revenue Act of October 3, 1913, that:

A corporation does not derive income from the acquisition of its own capital stock for cancellation.

In the discussion of the case under consideration at that time the Solicitor stated that:

The O Company was doing a prosperous business, and a syndicate was formed which secured control of all of its capital stock. The P Company was then organized which purchased for cash from the syndicate all of the shares of the company except directors' or qualifying shares. The P Company then had the O Company deed to it approximately 90 per cent of its assets in payment for which the P Company surrendered to the O Company 90 per cent of the capital stock of the O Company. The transaction was carried through, and the 90 per cent of the stock surrendered was canceled. * * *

In the argument of the question under discussion the Solicitor stated:

The stock of a corporation held by any person other than the corporation which issued it of course constitutes an asset and one receiving in exchange capital stock of ascertained market value greater than the cost to him of the asset given in exchange might realize a taxable profit from the transaction, but when stock is acquired by the corporation which issued it, in exchange for assets of the corporation, the transaction has an entirely different character. The stock is then necessarily diminished in value by the amount of the assets which the corporation has exchanged for it.

In the instant case, when the O Company acquired substantially all of its stock in exchange for 90 per cent of its assets, the stock immediately ceased to represent anything like its former value. The whole exchange from the standpoint of the O Company was a capital transaction; capital stock, a bookkeeping capital liability, was acquired and extinguished by a surrender of assets including capital assets, the beneficial interest in which was previously represented by the stock acquired. No income could or did accrue to the O Company from this transaction. Its capital account alone was affected. ***

It is observed that the Solicitor's law opinion just cited has to do with the question of taxable profit rather than a deductible loss as involved in the instant case, but it logically follows from the language of that opinion that the converse of the proposition would be true, and that under such circumstances where a taxable gain could not be realized, no deductible loss could be sustained. This latter view is supported by Solicitor's Law Opinion 426 (not published), issued under Revenue Act of 1916, in which the Solicitor held that:

* * * Amounts paid by a corporation for the purchase of its capital stock for cancellation constitute capital transactions, and no part of the amounts paid is an allowable deduction from income as a loss sustained.

In the argument of the case under consideration at that time, the Solicitor states that:

* * * This office has consistently held that where a corporation purchases its capital stock at a premium, it is not entitled to deduct the premium paid as a loss. Under date of April 11, 1917, this office wrote a letter to an inquirer in which it was held: "You are informed that this office will hold that the redeeming of stock at a price in excess of par represents a capital transaction in which there can be no gain or loss to the corporation, and therefore, the difference between the selling price of the stock and the price at which it was redeemed will not be taken up in the return of annual net income."

Each of the above cases had to do with the acquisition and cancellation of its stock by the company issuing such stock, while in the instant case, the stock acquired was carried as "Treasury stock." In the judgment of the Committee this difference is not material in the disposition of the question involved, and the rule laid down by the Solicitor is applicable to the appellant case.

It does not appear necessary to enter into a discussion of the analyses of book values of the corporate assets transferred or of the capital stock reacquired in view of the position taken by the Solicitor. It has been heretofore shown in this opinion that the contract entered into by the M Company and A refers in no uncertain terms to a sale by A to the appellant of y shares of its capital stock for certain considerations named in payment therefor. It is also shown by a statement taken from the books of the appellant that this transaction was treated primarily as a capital transaction and that there has been set up a treasury stock account with appropriate debits and credits thereto.

Esquerre in his work entitled, "Applied Theory of Accounts," in speaking of accounting for treasury stock, states in part as follows:

* * * No matter what the financing scheme may have been which suggested the purchase of stock, its purpose should have been accomplished without affecting the income since the question of reducing the capital stock liability was never at issue. It would undoubtedly be better accounting to accept the view that premiums on capital stock constitute liabilities while discounts constitute assets, or, at all events, that they represent facts which should be permitted to remain on the books until offset by subsequent transactions. Nor can it be said that such a treatment would be good financing since it would compel the supposed gains on discounts to remain in the business, while it would prevent the supposed losses on premiums from being charged to the present stockholders to the possible advantage of future stockholders.

In view of the foregoing matters, the Committee concludes that the transaction in the instant case was a capital one and not one in which there resulted a loss from the sale, exchange or other disposition of property such as may properly be deducted in the computation of taxable net income; therefore it is recommended, in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing as a deduction from gross income the excess of the book value on January 1, 1917, of certain assets transferred over the book value as of that date of y shares of its capital stock acquired in such transfer and carried to treasury stock account, be sustained, and accordingly that the taxpayer's appeal be denied.

Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, (1) That the value of patents acquired by said company at date of organization be placed at  $144\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars and the value of good will, trade-marks, etc., be placed at  $37x$  dollars (these figures being subject to verification by the Unit under the principles of valuation herein stated); (2) that the corporation be allowed to amortize its patents in the taxable year 1918 on basis of 1/17 of the values recommended herein; (3) that the preferred stock purchased by the corporation and held as treasury stock be excluded in determining the statutory limitation on intangibles for purposes of invested capital; (4) that the corporation be denied its inventory adjustment at December 31, 1918, because net inventory loss has not been established; (5) that the corporation be allowed the value of patents of A in the computation of prewar invested capital in accordance with the provisions of section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 934 of Regulations 45; (6) that the corporation be allowed income from royalties on patents owned by A in computing prewar income in accordance with the provisions of section 330 of the Act.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in adjusting its tax returns for the taxable years 1917 and 1918.

The exceptions taken by the taxpayer are summarized as follows:

1. That the Income Tax Unit did not give proper value to patents acquired at date of incorporation of the M Company.

2. That the Income Tax Unit was in error in refusing to allow the appellant to depreciate its patents for the year 1918.

3. That the Income Tax Unit was in error in refusing to take into consideration (in determining the value of intangible assets for purposes of invested capital) the proper value of the preferred stock originally issued and aggregating 20x dollars.

4. That the Income Tax Unit was in error in refusing to allow the appellant the right to correctly value its inventory at December 31, 1918.

5. That the Income Tax Unit was in error in failing to compute the invested capital for the prewar period in the same way as that employed in computing invested capital for the taxable year, as required by section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

6. That the Income Tax Unit was in error in excluding from the war profits credit, in violation of section 330, the net profits of one of the businesses acquired by the appellant at time of its organization, January, 1913.

The M Company was incorporated about January —, 1913. It immediately acquired the patents, assets, and business of the O Company, and of the P Company, and of one A. The O Company was, prior to that time, engaged in manufacturing an automobile fixture and owned certain patents relating to the same. A, prior to 1913, was also the owner of a number of patents relating to the manufacture of a similar fixture. He had given an exclusive license to the P Company under these patents and that company likewise owned some patents relating to and was in the business of manufacturing and selling the same kind of fixtures. Just prior to the organization of the M Company, the O Company, on the one hand, and A together with the P Company on the other, were in serious patent litigation. Countersuits had been brought for infringement and it is stated that under such conditions the business of each of the corporations was being seriously injured. In fact, patent counsel advised at the time that the pending litigation might not only but probably would result in absolute destruction of the particular business by virtue of the fact that each of the litigants could not only prevent the other from manufacturing the fixtures which they then manufactured, but there was then no known method by which commercially satisfactory fixtures could be manufactured without uniting in one owner the patents in controversy. It was thereupon determined that the M Company be organized with an authorized capital stock of 220x dollars, made up as follows:

Y shares of preferred stock of the par value of 5z dollars each and 10y shares of common stock of the par value of 5z dollars each, making a total capitalization of 220x dollars. All of this stock was immediately issued in consideration of the acquisition by the corporation of the patents and other assets of the O Company and of the patents and other assets of the P Company and all of the patents of A with respect to which he had previously given exclusive licenses to the P Company. Inventories made at the time show that cash and other tangible property acquired by the M Company were of the value of 37 1-5x dollars. The tangible assets to the amount thus determined were accordingly entered on the books of the new corporation, and all of the rest of the capital stock in excess of the par value of this amount, or 182x dollars, was entered upon the books of the corporation under the asset "patents, trade names, trade-marks and good will." The corporation, however, subsequently claimed that the value of its patents was really in excess of this amount and for the purpose of taxation reported this asset at a value of 182 1-5x dollars.

The Income Tax Unit, as a result of an examination of the taxpayer's books, determined that the value of patents, trade names, trade-marks, good will, etc., should have been stated as follows:

	Dollars
On basis of excess of par value of stock over tangible assets acquired by the corporation.....	182x
The value of patents on the books of the P Company when acquired by the corporation.....	1-50x
The value of patents on the books of the O Company when acquired by the corporation.....	1-2x
Total.....	182 13/25x
Less credits.....	1 1/5x
Total.....	181 8/25x

The corporation has accepted these figures, but contends they exclusively represent the value of patents acquired at date of organization, namely, January —, 1913. The Income Tax Unit arbitrarily reached the conclusion that this amount should be allocated on a basis of 50 per cent for the value of patents and 50 per cent for the value of good will, trade names, etc. This conclusion resulted in an exclusion from invested capital of the appellant at the beginning of the taxable year 1917 of 50x dollars.

Argument was made before the Committee to show, on the facts above stated, that the organization of the M Company was determined upon solely because of the value and protection of the patents owned by its predecessor companies and by A; that the value of these patents at that time was determined by the earnings of the corporations for a period of years prior to January 1, 1913, and that since January, 1913, the reorganized company has continued to demonstrate the value of these patents by its earnings resulting in an earned surplus of something over 80x dollars at December 31, 1917, after the consistent payment of dividends on the entire issue of preferred and common stock.

It is stated that prior to January 1, 1918, the company was engaged exclusively in the manufacture of the fixtures under these patents and that at the present time at least 70 per cent of all of the fixtures in use in this country are under the M Company patents.

The Income Tax Unit, in support of its position in allocating 50 per cent of the adjusted capital stock issued in excess of net tangible assets to good will, trade names, etc., refers to this Committee's Memorandum 34 (C. B. 2, p. 31). After deducting 10 per cent of the net tangible assets of the P Company and the O Company to cover earnings from such assets, the Unit attributed the remaining earnings to patents, good will, etc., which, capitalized on basis of five years' purchase, resulted in a value of 60x dollars. It must be borne in mind, however, that the Committee's recommendation above referred to dealt exclusively with such intangible assets as good will, trade-marks, trade brands, etc. Patents, under the 1917 law, had a somewhat different status.

The taxpayer has submitted the earnings for the years 1909 to 1912, inclusive, for the P Company and the average earnings for these years amounted to  $13x$  dollars, while the average invested capital for the same years was  $3\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars. This would indicate that the corporation earned more than \$3.71 for every dollar of capital employed in the business. There were no intangible assets on the books of this company and the only asset in the nature of an intangible was patents at  $1/50x$  dollars. Accordingly, the taxpayer submits that out of a return of 371.4 per cent on the average invested capital of P Company, 9 per cent of this return may reasonably be considered a manufacturing profit, although, as above stated, it manufactured no other commodities except the patented fixtures. It further claims that the balance of this percentage return of 371.4 per cent on this average invested capital should be assigned to patent earnings and the earnings so determined should be capitalized on basis of 6 per cent in order to arrive at the value of the patents acquired by M Company from P Company.

Similar calculations are made on the average capital and yearly earnings of the O Company, but the period is necessarily limited to two years prior to the organization of the M Company. There were no intangibles on the books of O Company and the only asset in nature of an intangible was patents at  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars. In this case the return on average invested capital is 17.25 per cent, and it is claimed that 8.25 per cent of the same should be applied to the average invested capital of the O Company on account of patent earnings. This amount of earnings it has also capitalized on a 6 per cent basis to determine the value of patents acquired from the O Company. In the instant case the Committee recognizes that 9 per cent is a fair return on average invested capital for manufacturing profit when there stand behind the invested capital substantially only tangible assets and the nature of the business is exclusively the production of patented articles. It can not, however, give sanction, in the instant case, to the capitalization of patent earnings on basis of 6 per cent when apportioned as above stated. It considers that a capitalization on basis of 10 per cent gives recognition to the value of the patents as indicated not only by the earnings of the companies prior to the reorganization of January, 1913, but also subsequent thereto. The Committee also has in mind the emphasis which was placed on the value of the patents when the two predecessor companies were in litigation. The Committee can not, however, ignore the fact that the trade names used on the patents of the predecessor companies had a good will or trade-mark value. This was recognized by the corporation in the trade name. Accordingly, using the average invested capital and the average earnings as submitted by the taxpayer for the years prior to organization of the M Company (these figures being subject to verification by the Unit), the Committee finds the value of the patents of P Company to be  $133\frac{8}{25}x$  dollars and the value of the patents acquired from the O Company to be  $11x$  dollars or a total valuation for the patents acquired by the M Company of  $144\frac{8}{25}x$  dollars in lieu of the value of  $181\frac{8}{25}x$  dollars, as claimed by the taxpayer. The difference,  $37\frac{1}{5}x$  dollars, fairly covers the value of the good will, trade-marks, etc., acquired by the M Company at the date of organization. This value of  $37\frac{1}{5}x$  dollars applicable to good will, trade-marks, etc., is, however, within the 20 per cent limitation prescribed by the statute for the inclusion of good will in invested capital. This, therefore, gives the M Company its full claim of  $181\frac{8}{25}x$  dollars for invested capital but not without due recognition on a sound basis of the value of the patents acquired from its predecessor companies.

In the consideration of the second exception taken by the appellant, to the effect that the Unit was in error in refusing to allow depreciation on patents for the year 1918, it is noted the following entries were made on the books of the corporation before they were closed for the taxable year ended December 31, 1918:

December 31, 1918.		Dollars	Dollars
Good will.....	10 7/10x
To surplus.....			10 7/10x
To set up on books as of Dec. 31, 1918, a value for good will arising from advertising, ownership of patents, etc., in a sum equal to 1/17 of the book value of patents as at Dec. 31, 1917.
This entry is made per instructions of president.
Amortization of patents.....	10 7/10x
To reserve for amortization of patents.....			10 7/10x
To set up on books as at Dec. 31, 1918, a reserve for the amortization of patents equal to 1/17 of the book value of these assets as shown by books Dec. 31, 1917, to wit, $182\frac{1}{4}x$ dollars $\times$ $1/17 = 10\frac{7}{10}x$ dollars.
This entry is made per instructions of president.
Surplus.....	10 7/10x
To amortization of patents.....			10 7/10x
To close the latter account into surplus.

The last entry above noted closes a nominal account (amortization of patents) into surplus without carrying the entry through the profit and loss account. Because the entry was made against surplus the corporation admits that its books do not show a deduction from income for amortization of patents. The Committee considers this merely a technical question of book-keeping and that the explanatory entries in journalizing these accounts clearly show the true intent of the corporation to amortize its patents on basis of 1/17 of the value as shown by the books at December 31, 1917, to wit,  $182\frac{1}{4}x$  dollars. It has been pointed out and confirmed that the item of good will is nothing more than an item of appreciation, and the taxpayer accordingly deducted under Schedule G in its 1919 tax return the surplus item of  $10\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars as an unallowable surplus adjustment of the prior year for invested capital purposes. The amount of allowable amortization must be adjusted to conform with the valuation of patents as determined by the Committee in this recommendation. With respect to the adjustment for prior years affecting invested capital at the beginning of the taxable year 1918, attention is directed to the following provision in article 843 of Regulations 45:

It can not be said that the correct computation of surplus and undivided profits necessarily requires a deduction in respect of the expiration of patents. It follows, therefore, that where a corporation in the exercise of its option has not written down the cost of patents, it is not ordinarily necessary to reduce the surplus and undivided profits in computing invested capital, whether the patents have been acquired for stock or shares or for cash or other tangible property. Due consideration will be given to the facts in any case in which this rule seems obviously unreasonable.

Article 167 of Regulations 45 reads, in part, as follows:

The fact that depreciation has not been taken in prior years does not entitle the taxpayer to deduct in any taxable year a greater amount for depreciation than would otherwise be allowable.

It is, therefore, clear that the corporation was within the provisions of the regulations in claiming amortization for the taxable year 1918 under article 167 without reducing its surplus at the beginning of the taxable year.

In consideration of the third exception taken by the appellant, to the effect that the Unit was in error in refusing to take into consideration (in determining the value of intangible assets for purposes of invested capital) the proper value of the preferred stock originally issued and aggregating 20% dollars, it is noted that prior to January 1, 1917, the entire issue of preferred stock had been purchased by the corporation and was held in its treasury. It was so held until the company amended its charter in the year 1919, at which time the stock was canceled. In the computation for the allowance of intangibles, as prescribed by section 207 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 326(a)4 of the Revenue Act of 1918, the Unit declined to take into consideration this preferred stock.

Section 207(a) of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides, in part, as follows:

* * * Good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchise of a corporation * * * or other intangible property, bona fide purchases, * * * for and with shares in the capital stock of a corporation * * * in an amount not to exceed * * * 20 per centum * * * of the total shares of the capital stock of the corporation, shall be included in invested capital * * *.

Article 57 of Regulations 41 prescribes the limitation to be:

Twenty per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares outstanding on that date (Mar. 3, 1917).

Section 326(a)4 of the Revenue Act of 1918 reads as follows:

Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares prior to March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate of 25 per centum of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding on March 3, 1917, whichever is lowest.

In an informal opinion the Solicitor of Internal Revenue has held:

The company's contention is that by the purchase the stock in question became treasury stock and as such it was an asset, in that the company might have at any time sold the same for a consideration. Treasury stock as generally defined in the decided cases has usually been held to mean such portion of the shares of capital stock originally issued in consideration of property or cash contributed to the corporation as have been returned to the corporation by way of a gift or a loan in order to enable the corporation to raise working capital with which to operate. Having once been issued as paid-up shares, such stock, when returned to the corporation after it has been issued in the manner specified, becomes a part of the general assets of the company and may be sold or disposed of in the same manner as other personal property. The essential feature is, however, that it is paid-up stock, which by its transfer back to the corporation has not been changed in character. With reference to stock it may be said that the same object could be attained in the usual case by the sale by the stockholder of such shares and thereafter turning over to the corporation the proceeds of such sale. The original number of shares of stock issued in such a case remains constant and the capital stock liability of the corporation likewise remains the same. (Crosby v. Stratton, 17 Colo. Appeals, 212; 68 Pac., 130, 133; Machey v. Burns et al., 16 Colo. Appeals, 6; 64 Pac., 485, 490; Enright v. Heckscher, 240 Fed., 863, 874; Davies v. Ball, 64 Wash., 292; 116 Pac., 83; Camden Land Company v. Lewis, 63 Atl., 523; Davis v. Montgomery Furnace & Chemical Company, 101 Ala., 127; 8 So., 496, 497; Mosher v. Sinnott, 20 Colo. Appeals, 454; 79 Pac., 742.)

It will be seen that the above definition can not include a corporation's own stock which it has purchased from its stockholders in the open market for the simple reason that whatever the corporation pays to the stockholder for his share of stock is a withdrawal by such stockholder of the amount of capital originally contributed to the capital stock of the company. By such withdrawal the share which his interest represented is extinguished because it has been so withdrawn. The amount of capital originally contributed still in the hands of the corporation constitutes the remaining capital stock, of which it can not be said that the interest formerly represented by the share of the withdrawing stockholder is a part. In considering a case very similar to the present one, the Supreme Court of Louisiana, in Belknap v. Adams (49 La. Annual, 1350; 22 So., 382, 383), said:

But, instead of a division of property, we have in this case the division of purchased stock, which, by the purchase, was canceled and remained canceled for all purposes until reissued. (1 Mor. Priv. Corp., secs. 112, 114; Cook, Corp., sec. 282.) This is the well-defined result when the corporation purchases its stock. The purchase is an unauthorized use of the corporate funds, but, when permitted to stand or is unassailed, the purchase simply extinguishes the stock, increases the rights of the remaining stockholders. This division or donation of the purchased stock was not, in any sense, a distribution of corporate property.

In Steel v. Farmers & Merchants Mutual Telephone Association (Supreme Court, Kansas, May 8, 1915; 148 Pac., 661) the court said:

The use of the means or assets of a corporation to buy up its own capital stock permits the withdrawal of a stockholder without substituting another in its place, repays to the withdrawing member his share of the capital, reduces the amount of the fund contributed to the common venture, and to that extent injures the continuing stockholders and creditors and opens the door to mismanagement and unfairness.

See also Bank v. Fox (Federal case 2683), wherein the court speaks of the purchase by a corporation of its own stock as being an extinguishment of such stock.

In any view of the case, this is the logical legal result of the purchase by a corporation of outstanding shares of its own capital stock, for it is but returning to the stockholder the original contribution advanced by him and for which advance he was entitled to an interest in the capital stock of the corporation represented by his share of stock. This also appears to be the correct view from the standpoint of accounting principles. Dickinson, "Accounting, Practice and Procedure," at page 130, says:

An important question arises as to the treatment of stock of a corporation held in its own treasury. Many corporations still treat this as an investment asset, either under a special division of the balance sheet or among the current assets.

* * * A little consideration will show that such a practice is entirely erroneous and misleading, and, moreover, that it also raises difficult questions of valuation. The capital stock represents the manner in which its property and assets are distributed among those who constitute the corporation. If one of these owners disposes of his share of the corporation, he withdraws therefrom taking with him what he considers his fair proportion of the asset value, and leaving the rest to be divided among the remaining owners. Assuming that the seller gets full value, the value remaining to the others is neither more nor less in fact than it was before, although if the stock is actually worth more or less than its par value, there will be an apparent profit or loss on the transaction: the effect of which may be thus illustrated: A corporation has a capital stock of $1,000,000, divided into 10,000 shares of $100 each, and represented by assets of equal value. The holders of 1,000 shares withdraw, i. e., sell their shares to the company at the book value, which in this case is par. The stock is thereby reduced to 9,000 shares, i. e., $900,000, and the assets are similarly reduced by the payment of $100,000 to $900,000. There is clearly no reason whatever for pretending that there are still 10,000 shareholders and assets of $1,000,000, when as a matter of fact there are only 9,000 with assets of $900,000, and the position of those 9,000 is entirely unchanged.

On page 132 of Dickinson, "Accounting, Practice and Procedure," the author continues as follows:

As a matter of convenience small amounts of such stock are carried as marketable investments when the same are held temporarily; but even this practice is open to criticism as lending itself to a use of the funds of a corporation for influencing the market in its own stock, which is not one of the purposes for which it is permitted to exist.

See also Montgomery, "Income Tax Procedure, 1921," page 386.

In the instant case it appears quite clearly that this corporation did not purchase this stock for temporary purposes, but that such purchase was actually a part of a scheme to retire such stock in a general plan to rearrange the stockholdings in the corporation. The purchase was a retirement of the stock for all purposes. It is immaterial for our purposes that the corporation was required to pay taxes to the State upon the basis of the original capitalization (as they state in their brief they were required to do), for such payment may have been required by the State because of failure on the part of the corporation to give proper notice of the reduction in its capital stock as provided for by the State statutes. At any rate, it is not a point of importance in this case.

In view of the above, it is the opinion of this office that the action of the Income Tax Unit in refusing to recognize the preferred stock so purchased by the corporation for the purposes of its computation with respect to the allowance of intangibles for invested capital purposes was correct.

In this opinion the Committee concurs.

In consideration of the fourth exception taken by the appellant, to the effect that the Unit was in error in refusing to allow the right to correct the value of its inventory at December 31, 1918, it is noted that certain products were included in its inventory of December 31, 1918, priced at the market as of January 22, 1919, as quoted by the market report, the first market quotations after the Government's release of control of prices for these products. This adjustment decreased the profits for 1918 in the sum of  $x$  dollars. It is admitted by the taxpayer that the prices so fixed did not cover the entire stock on hand at December 31, 1918. In view of this appellant's contention that it suffered an inventory loss under section 234(a)14 of the Revenue Act of 1918 can not be sustained. The Advisory Tax Board, in passing opinion July 24 in its Memorandum 52 (C. B. 1, p. 155), gave reference to article 267 of Regulations 45, which provides, inter alia, that:

Not later than 30 days after the close of the taxable year 1919 a taxpayer who has filed either a claim in abatement or a claim for refund, or both, shall submit to the Commissioner a descriptive statement showing the quantity and kind of all goods included in the 1918 inventory which have been (a) sold at a loss in the taxable year 1919, (b) sold at a profit during the taxable year 1919, or (c) not sold or otherwise disposed of during the taxable year 1919 * * *.

Commenting on these provisions, the Advisory Tax Board said:

The regulations thus clearly require a statement showing the disposition of all the inventory, and the regulations conform to the statute which speaks of the inventory. An inventory is a well-understood concept and where the term is used without qualification it means the inventory as a whole, and not merely some part of the goods included in the inventory. The Advisory Tax Board is, therefore, of the opinion that an inventory loss can not be proved by a submission of evidence showing that a loss has been sustained in respect of a part of the inventory, without showing at least that the amount of the loss for which claim has been filed has not been offset by profits made on the remainder of the inventory.

If, therefore, a claim can only be sustained on basis of net loss in the inventory of the appellant, the adjustment which the taxpayer made in the inventory as of December 31, 1918, can not be sustained, because it does not reflect a net loss. The opinion of the Advisory Tax Board has been confirmed by this Committee in its Recommendation 487 (C. B. 4, p. 205), dated March 1, 1921.

The fifth and sixth exceptions taken by the appellant are to the effect that for the purpose of computing prewar income and invested capital the earnings of A from royalties on patents must be included and that under section 330 the value of patents as used in the computation of invested capital for the taxable year must be included in prewar invested capital in the same amount. It is noted that A, in 1906, gave the P Company the exclusive right to use his patents subject to the payment to him of certain royalties. These royalties were regularly paid him by the company, such payments constituting a deduction from the income of the P Company. The cost to A of procuring and developing the original patents is not in evidence.

The M Company acquired, on the date of its organization—

- (a) The assets of the O Company;
- (b) The assets of the P Company; and
- (c) The business of A in so far as it related to owning and licensing patents to the P Company.

In the computation of prewar income and invested capital the Income Tax Unit did not take into consideration the income or the invested capital of A as owner of a portion of the patents acquired. The Unit, however, in submitting the case for consideration by this Committee, gives approval under section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918 to the claim of the appellant, but makes the point that under article 934 of Regulations 45 the excess of the valuation of any asset in existence during both the taxable year and any prewar year, but included in invested capital for the prewar year at a lesser value than for the taxable year, shall not be included in determining the difference, 10 per cent of which is added to or deducted from the war profits credit.

The Committee concurs in this conclusion and considers that the excess value of patents for the taxable year over the value at which they were carried on the books of the predecessor corporations and A should be eliminated for computation of the increase in invested capital for the war profits credit. It is not considered that the income of A from royalties on patents can be capitalized to determine the invested capital of A for the prewar period.

Summing up, the Committee recommends:

1. That, in the appeal of the M Company, the value of patents acquired by said company at date of organization be placed at  $144\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars and the value of good will, trade-marks, etc., be placed at  $37\frac{1}{5}x$  dollars (these figures being subject to verification by the Unit under the principles of valuation herein stated).

2. That the corporation be allowed to amortize its patents in the taxable year 1918 on basis of one-seventeenth of the value recommended herein.

3. That the preferred stock purchased by the corporation and held as treasury stock be excluded in determining the statutory limitation on intangibles for purposes of invested capital.

4. That the corporation be denied its inventory adjustment at December 31, 1918, because net inventory loss has not been established.

5. That the corporation be allowed the value of patents of A in the computation of prewar invested capital in accordance with provisions of section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 934 of Regulations 45.

6. That the corporation be allowed income from royalties on patents owned by A in computing prewar income in accordance with the provisions of section 330 of the Act.

Revenue Acts of 1917, 1918, and 1921.

A corporation purchased its own stock with its own bonds for a price fixed by the parties, which was in excess of the par value of the stock. The difference between the par value of the stock and the face value of the bonds does not represent bond discount.

In 1914 a corporation bought shares of its own stock at 263 per cent of their par value, and issued bonds in payment for the same together with a small cash payment. The taxpayer contended that the bonds were issued at a discount representing the difference between the par value of the stock and the face value of the bonds, and that this bond discount should be set up as an asset, and that the loss represented by such discount should be realized through the income account by a deduction from income each year in an amount determined upon the basis of the life of the bonds. The taxpayer argued that since the bond discount could be amortized over the life of the bonds, this amount represented an asset until it was written off by deductions from the income account.

Held, that the transaction in question had the effect of reducing the invested capital of the taxpayer to the extent of the face value of the bonds, and that this amount should be deducted in determining invested capital for 1917 and subsequent years. The difference between the par value of the stock and the face value of the bonds issued in payment for the stock did not represent bond discount. The price paid for the stock represented its fair market value as fixed by the parties to the contract, and the bonds accordingly were issued for a value which was received by the corporation as a loan. No deduction from income on account of bond amortization can be made by the corporation.

Revenue Act of 1917.

The reserve funds of life insurance companies, the net additions to which are deductible from gross income under section 12(a) of the statute, can not be included in computing invested capital.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in treating as a liability, in the computation of statutory capital for 1917, the amount of  $x$  dollars set up as a legal reserve as at December 31, 1913.

Prior to January 1, 1913, the appellant operated under regulations of the State of S applying to fraternal beneficiary associations, which were not required to set up reserves for protection of policyholders. Pursuant to the provisions of a statute enacted by the State of S Legislature in 1912, the taxpayer since January 1, 1913, has operated on the mutual plan, and as at December 31, 1913, in accordance with the requirements of the State of S statutes, passed to a legal reserve  $1.31x$  dollars, of which  $x$  dollars represented surplus accumulated as at December 31, 1912, and  $.31x$  dollars, the net addition thereto for the year 1913. As at January 1, 1917, the total amount of  $x$  dollars (together with additions thereto taken as deductions in the computation of net income for respective years) appears to have stood as a part of the required legal reserve of the company. The taxpayer writes industrial life and sick benefit insurance, and accordingly is within the purview of article 870 of Regulations 45, as amended by T. D. 3153 (C. B. 4, p. 398). Article 870 as so amended provides in part that:

The reserve funds of life insurance companies, the net additions to which are deductible from gross income under the provisions of section 234 of the statute, can not be included in computing invested capital.

Section 12(a) second allows, in the case of insurance companies, a deduction for the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds. This provision is similar to the provisions of section 234(a) 10 of the Revenue Act of 1918, so that the rule announced in article 870 is applicable to 1917.

There is no question that the reserve created as at the end of 1913 and maintained during 1917 was a legal reserve, the net additions to which are deductible from gross income under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1916, as amended, and the total amount of such legal reserve so comprised as at January 1, 1917, must be treated as a liability of the taxpayer in the computation of the statutory capital, in accordance with article 870 of Regulations 45 and paragraph 11 of Bulletin "H," covering rulings peculiar to insurance companies.

The Committee accordingly recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained and the appeal denied.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The M Company, a foreign manufacturing corporation, is said to be in reality no more than a branch of the N Company, a very much larger foreign corporation. The facts with regard to the corporate organization and business of the taxpayer and the parent corporation are shown in the record to be as follows:

The parent corporation was organized about 1877 to take over the business established many years ago and continuously conducted by members of an English family. This corporation has, on a very large scale, continued down to the present time the manufacture and sale of the goods and had outstanding, in 1917, ordinary shares of the par value of 66 $\times$  pounds, which had then a market value of 297 $\times$  pounds, or nearly 1,450 $\times$  dollars.

The parent company and its subsidiaries then, as they do now, manufactured and marketed this product in many parts of the world.

Previous to 1901, the parent company had sold its products in the United States through an agent; but, in or about that year, the company established its own agency in this country and continued to sell its products through that agency down to 1908.

In the year 1908, the company purchased a factory in this country, and then began the manufacture of its goods in this country. Late in 1907 it was found desirable to organize a new English corporation which should carry on the American business of the company. Accordingly, the M Company, this taxpayer, was organized under the English Companies Act with an issued capital of  $\times$  pounds, equivalent in dollars at \$4.86 in the pound to 4.86 $\times$  dollars, and the new company immediately took over the parent company's plant and entire assets in this country. The amount of this capitalization is said to have been approximately equivalent to the net income from the American business for one year at that time, and it is asserted and insisted upon that such capitalization bore absolutely no relation whatever to the value of the assets acquired by the new company, "for (so asserts the taxpayer's brief) in these assets were included, at a nominal valuation, the trade-marks and good will of the parent company, which had a real value of say 100 $\times$  dollars."

It is further asserted that the entire capital stock of the taxpayer which, ever since 1908, has nominally carried on the American business, is and always has been owned by the parent company.

It is said that the majority of the board of directors of taxpayer company are all members of the said English family, as are the directors of the parent corporation, and the entire net income from the operations of the business goes into the treasury of the parent company, no appreciable portion of such income being retained for any considerable period of time in the treasury of the taxpayer; and that the taxpayer is only able to carry on its business and finance itself, without accumulating a surplus, because it can depend upon the vast resources of the parent company.

In filing its income and excess profits tax return for the taxable year ended November 30, 1917, the taxpayer, in its excess profits tax return, set forth that the income for that year was 10 $\frac{1}{2}$  $\times$  dollars, which was subsequently amended and fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at 10 $\times$  dollars.

In this return it was suggested to the Department by the taxpayer that a fair constructed capital should be fixed after giving due weight to the foreign invested capital and taking into account the very great value of the foreign trade marks; a transfer of which, so far as they were used in America, had been made to the taxpayer in 1908 at the time of its incorporation.

In May, 1918, the taxpayer was notified by the Commissioner, of a tax of  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars; which was promptly paid and nothing further was heard by the taxpayer from the Government until March 8, 1920, when the company was notified of the proposed assessment of an additional tax in the sum of  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars. In arriving at this additional tax, the Income Tax Unit recognized that the assessment should be made under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and gave to the taxpayer a total constructed capital of  $28x$  dollars, being an additional allowance of approximately  $10x$  dollars above the invested capital as shown by the books of the taxpayer; and it is from this action on the part of the Unit that the taxpayer now appeals.

It is the understanding of this Committee that there is no controversy as to the correctness of the facts substantially as advanced by the taxpayer in his brief submitted upon appeal to the Committee, and which are set forth above.

It is the contention of the taxpayer that no fair comparison can be made for the purpose of computing the tax under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, except with the parent corporation, and the taxpayer prays that under such circumstances it should be assessed under that section on the same basis on which it would be assessed if it were a branch of the parent company; or, if not on that basis, then directly as a branch of the parent company, and that an estimate of the capital of the parent company employed in this country be made under article 48 of Regulations 41 relative to the war excess profits tax imposed by the War Revenue Act approved October 3, 1917.

This case is unique, at least in the experience of the Committee, in that the taxpayer is a foreign corporation, of which the entire business is transacted and the profits therefrom earned in the United States, and in that it is also a subsidiary of another foreign corporation which owns or controls all of the taxpayers' capital stock.

A situation is here presented which does not seem to have been contemplated or exactly provided for by the framers of the Act. Nevertheless, the Committee finds no warrant in the law or regulations which would permit or justify the disposition of the case which is sought by the taxpayer; nor is it all certain that such consideration, if possible, would afford to the taxpayer any further relief than that which has heretofore been granted to it by the Commissioner, acting through the Unit.

Treasury Decision 2662 reads in part as follows:

Pursuant to article 78 of Regulations 41, relative to war excess profits tax, affiliated corporations as limited and defined in paragraphs C and D below are hereby directed to make consolidated returns for the purpose of excess profits tax. Affiliated corporations other than those falling within the provisions of paragraphs C and D may make a consolidated return only after having secured permission in writing from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Treasury decision then proceeds to quote article 77 of the regulations in definition of "affiliated corporations," and in paragraphs A to H enlarges upon the definition contained in that article of the regulations.

It seems unnecessary to refer more in detail, either to this Treasury decision or to articles 77 and 78 of Regulations 41, for the reason that, as has already been said, the instant case presents a feature apparently not contemplated or provided for in either the law or the regulation, namely, that both the taxpayer and its parent company are foreign corporations, while the taxpayer alone does business within the United States.

It has been consistently held by the Department that the privilege of filing a consolidated return can not be granted to a taxpayer in cases where the Department would be without power to require such a return. Clearly this is such a case, for it is obvious that the Department has no such authority in the case of the two foreign corporations.

It would seem, therefore, that the request of the taxpayer for the privilege of filing such a consolidated return must be denied, if upon no other ground than the sufficient one that the Department is entirely without power to grant such a privilege. But it is doubtful, even though the Department had the power, and the privilege were granted, that the taxpayer would experience the anticipated relief, for it seems to the Committee that the application by the Unit to this case of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 produces substantially the situation that the taxpayer seeks to attain, through article 48 of Regulations 41, which provides that:

When used in reference to a foreign corporation or partnership, or a nonresident alien individual, the term "invested capital" means that portion of the entire invested capital as defined and limited by these regulations which the net income from sources within the United States is of the entire net income.

This is substantially the condition produced by the application of section 210 to the taxpayer's case under consideration, and it does not appear to the Committee, therefore, that any further relief can be granted to the taxpayer than has already been afforded by the Unit; nor, as a matter of fact, that any hardship or injustice has been done to the taxpayer by such application, since the taxpayer's earnings, based on its actual investment, were 215 per cent, and its excess profits tax, computed under the provisions of section 210, is 38.25 per cent of its net income.

1-19-119: T. B. M. 7.

The same principle stated in the Revenue Act of 1918 that assessment will not be made as a special case under section 328, when the tax is high “merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital” is applicable to the Revenue Act of 1917 in cases in which application is made for assessment under section 210 of that act.

14-19-441: T. B. M. 58.

This is an application by the X Company for assessment for the year 1917 under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917, or, if this application is denied, for assessment under section 210.

The corporation was engaged in a manufacturing business.

The application for assessment under section 209 should be denied. Under the definition of nominal capital contained in article 74 of Regulations 41 this is not a “case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital.” (See section 209.) It “belongs to a class which necessarily and customarily requires capital for its operation.” (See article 74.)

The application for assessment under section 210 should also be denied. It is true that the excess profits tax rate determined without the benefit of section 210 is very high, approximately 59 per cent, but the profits on the business were clearly war profits, and thus of a kind which were intended to be taxed at a high rate. The case does not come within any of the classes of exceptional cases enumerated in article 52 of Regulations 41 as within the scope of section 210. Obviously it is not within any of these classes unless it is within that:

(4) Where the invested capital is seriously disproportionate to the taxable income.

While the Regulations do not enumerate all the ways in which such cases may arise, this class of cases is limited to cases enumerated or those similar in character. The cases enumerated are those which arise through:

(a) The realization in one year of the earnings of capital unproductively invested through a period of years or of the fruits of activities antedating the taxable year; or,

(b) Inability to recognize or properly allow for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depreciation due to the present war, or to the necessity in connection with the present war of providing plant which will not be wanted for the purposes of the trade or business after the termination of the war.

The present case does not arise in either of these ways, or in any similar manner. Properly speaking, this is a case where taxable income is “high” with respect to invested capital rather than where invested capital is “seriously disproportionate” to such income. Section 210, as interpreted in the Regulations, like paragraph (d) of section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918, was not intended to afford relief where the only reason therefor is a high rate of tax—that is, a high ratio of taxable income to invested capital. There must be in addition some abnormality with respect to invested capital, taxable income, or both. There is no such abnormality in the present case.

Recommendation in the case of the application of A, for assessment under section 210 [1917 Act]. Request denied.

The appeal in this case for assessment under section 210 is based upon the fact that A began to liquidate the business in 1917 and therefore had abnormal profits during that year. This is supported by argument to show that by reason of such liquidation there was a sacrifice of the value of trade brands and other intangibles which should receive consideration.

The record makes it doubtful whether there was any actual liquidation in 1917; but assuming that there was, it has been repeatedly held that a taxpayer who had liquidated all or part of his business in a particular year is not entitled to assessment under section 210, unless such liquidation results in throwing into a single year profits so abnormally high as to result in a tax which, compared with the taxes imposed upon representative business concerns in the same line of business, is seriously disproportionate and productive of exceptional hardship.

A comparison of the return of A with representative concerns in the same line of business discloses the fact that no material change in the tax would result by fixing his tax on the basis of the experience of such representative concerns. It further appears that the amount of the invested capital can be satisfactorily determined without special difficulty, and that under the conditions prevailing in 1917 the profits were not seriously disproportionate to such invested capital. With respect to the alleged liquidation or shrinkage in the value of intangible assets, there were in the year 1917 no facts or events affecting these intangibles sufficiently definite and conclusive to warrant special deductions either as extraordinary depreciation (including obsolescence) or loss. The case plainly does not come within the time limits controlling allowances for the obsolescence of intangible assets in the liquor business, laid down in Advisory Tax Board Recommendation No. 44. The Advisory Tax Board, therefore, recommends that the petition of the taxpayer be denied.

The limitation of the tax under the Revenue Act of 1918 on profits derived from the sale of a discovered mine can not be applied to the assessment of 1917 taxes, nor can such limitation or any modification thereof be used as a basis for an assessment under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917. A case in which income as compared with invested capital has been abnormally increased by the sale of all capital assets, may be considered under section 210, Revenue Act of 1917.

Ruling Under Revenue Act of 1917.

The M Company appealed to the Advisory Tax Board to be taxed under section 209 of the act of October 3, 1917, and as a personal service corporation under the Revenue Act of 1918.

The facts appear to be as follows:

The M Company is a corporation engaged in the business of retailing, and the return under consideration is for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918. The stock of this corporation is owned by two stockholders who are actively engaged in the business and are the principal salesmen. There is but one other salesman employed by the corporation, and he works on a commission basis. The claim filed by this corporation sets forth the fact that the employment of capital is unnecessary in the business, except in paying for merchandise consigned to claimant by the factory and for the payment of the freight charges assessed thereon. The claim also shows how the direct use of the capital of the corporation can be avoided by having the purchaser make the customary deposit when placing his order and the funds thus secured would enable the corporation to transact business without the use of its own capital, no stock being carried other than that passing through the shop for test before delivery. The statements made by the corporation show that capital is necessary in the conduct of the business. The nature of the business is also well known and the statements made in the claim clearly establish the fact that the business conducted by this corporation is purely a commercial enterprise. Section 209 was not intended to apply to a commercial business, even though the capital used should be small in amount, and the definition of a personal-service corporation in section 200 of the Revenue Act of 1918 excludes any corporation 50 per cent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal.

Article 71 of Regulations No. 41 provides:

Section 209 * * * applies primarily to occupations, professions, trades, and businesses engaged principally in rendering personal service in which the employment of capital is not necessary and the earnings of which are to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the owners.

While the business of the M Company is evidently commercial it is of a nature, however, wherein salesmanship largely governs the volume of business, and in this case the two stockholders are actively engaged as salesmen for the corporation; and, while the income of the corporation is derived from purchase and sale, the volume of business would appear to rest practically upon the individual efforts of the two stockholders.

The examination of a number of returns of similar concerns indicates that many of them belong in section 210 of the act of October 3, 1917, and section 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918. The data on which a recommendation with respect to assessment under sections 210 and 328 might be based was not transmitted to the Advisory Tax Board, but in numerous cases where a commercial business is dependent upon the personal efforts of the stockholders and but a nominal capital is used, assessment has been so made.

The Advisory Tax Board, therefore, recommends that the decision of the Income Tax Unit declining to consider the claim of the M Company for taxation for the year 1917 under section 209 of the act of October 3, 1917, and for the year 1918 as a personal-service corporation, be sustained, and that the return of the corporation be examined with the view of determining whether assessment should be made under sections 210 and 328 of the 1917 and 1918 Revenue Acts, respectively.

5-20-722: A. R. R. 19.

The firm of A is engaged in the produce commission business, but a proportion of its income is derived from buying produce outright and selling it for its own account. This proportion, however, is entirely problematical and speculative.

The Committee finds difficulty in arriving at the facts in this case for the reason that it is apparent from the papers submitted that the books of the partnership are not kept with precision. Nevertheless from the balance sheets submitted by the firm and from its own statements it appears that it was in the enjoyment of a "substantial credit" in addition to the capital invested by the partners. It appears certain that the income of the firm was derived about evenly from commissions on sales of produce belonging to others and from profits on sales of produce purchased for its own account.

Under these circumstances the firm is not entitled to consideration under Section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Article 73 of Regulations 41 provides that—

Commission houses regularly employing a substantial amount of capital, whether to lend to principals or to carry goods on their own account, are not deemed to be agents or brokers and are taxable under the provisions of article 16.

Article 74 of the same regulations provides that—

The following will not be construed as businesses having a nominal capital for purposes of excess profits tax; (b) corporations which, although their capitalization is nominal, employ a substantial amount of capital in their business.

The Committee is of the opinion that the facts, so far as they are known or asserted by the taxpayer, construed in the light of the regulations above quoted, clearly exclude the taxpayer from whatever benefit might be derived from the application of section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and therefore the Committee recommends that the appeal of the taxpayer for consideration under such section be denied and that the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing tax under Section 210 of the above Act be approved and confirmed.

19-20-927: O. 1000—A.

The provisions of section 327(d) of the Revenue Act of 1918 are applicable to cases of hardship caused by abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation for the prewar period or for the taxable year.

A reconsideration of Law Opinion 1000, in which it is decided that the provisions of section 327 (d) of the Revenue Act of 1918 do not apply where hardship is caused by some abnormal condition affecting the capital or income of the prewar period of the corporation, has been requested. Section 327(d) provides as follows:

(d) Where upon application by the corporation the Commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without the benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profits upon a normal invested capital nor (2) in which 50 per cent or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under section 233 of Title II) consist of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

This subdivision is not in terms limited in its application to cases arising out of abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation for the taxable year. The words "capital or income of the corporation" are general words applicable to the income or capital of any year and can not be limited by construction unless there is a clear, necessary, and irresistible implication from other parts of the Act that such a limitation should be made. Faw v. Marsletter, 3 Cranch, 10, 23; United States v. Coombs, 12 Peters, 72, 80. Furthermore, in the same subdivision Congress has in two instances specified that the income or profits referred to is that of the taxable year, although the context made that meaning clear without specification. The use of such a limiting clause in two instances and the absence of it in the third instance indicates that the words were there used without limitation. Therefore, unless there is some clear and necessary inference from the other parts of the statute, it seems evident that subdivision (d) includes cases of hardship caused by abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income for the prewar period.

The prewar data is used in computing the war profits credit. Section 311 defines the war profits credit. It may consist of (a) $3,000 plus the average net income for the prewar period with an adjustment for changes in capital; or (b) $3,000 plus a percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year based on the median average established by the prewar experience of a general class of trade or business. This credit is used by concerns having no prewar history; or (c) a minimum war profits credit of $3,000 plus 10 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year.

It is suggested that because of the minimum war profits credit provided for in section 311(b) in case a corporation had no income in the prewar period or earned less than 10 per cent of its invested capital, it should be presumed that Congress intended to include in section 311 all relief which should be granted because of abnormal conditions existing in the prewar period, and that there is a clear and necessary inference that Congress did not intend to grant further relief of the same nature under section 327 on account of the same conditions.

It should be noted, however, that the relief granted in section 311 and that granted in section 327 are not of the same nature. Section 311 establishes certain rules applicable to general classes and which apply in all cases whether hardship actually exists or not. It gives relief to industries which passed through a period of depression in the prewar years. It also applies to concerns which earned less than 10 per cent in the prewar period, even though their tax is not grossly disproportionate to that of their competitors. Neither of these cases would be helped by section 327.

Section 327 on the other hand deals not with general classes but with specific instances and grants relief in special cases according to the facts of each case where, without such relief, there would be a hardship as compared with representative concerns because of some abnormal condition affecting the capital or income of the corporation. The two sections are of a different nature. Section 311 would give no relief to a corporation belonging to a class which normally earned 20 per cent if that corporation, due to some abnormal condition affecting the income of the prewar period, earned only 12 per cent during the prewar period. Such concerns do not receive even partial relief under section 311. They would receive relief under section 327 if that applies. Section 311 lays down a number of general rules applicable to general classes which apply in all cases without reference to their effect. Section 327 deals with specific cases and applies only where the failure to give relief will cause hardship. These sections have different purposes, apply to different classes of cases, and measure the relief in a different way. In my opinion, the fact that they may both affect the same case does not make section 311 exclusive in that case.

It is concluded that the fact that the general rules established by section 311 will in some cases grant partial relief against an abnormally low income in the prewar period, does not clearly and necessarily limit the application of section 327 to cases of hardship arising out of abnormal conditions affecting the capital and income for the taxable year only. No other reason has been suggested for limiting the literal interpretation of the general words used in section 327(d). They should, therefore, be given their ordinary and natural meaning so that section 327(d) will apply to cases of hardship due to abnormal conditions affecting the capital and income of the prewar period or of the taxable year.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

During its fiscal year, which ended May 31, 1911, this corporation commenced the erection and operation of a refinery wherein the crude product manufactured by it could be refined and made into high-grade finished products, thus adding a new department to its business which had theretofore been confined to purchasing and manufacturing the raw material into the finished product as above outlined and selling the residue of the raw material.

The building of this additional plant and the experimental operation and development of this new line of business extended over several years, requiring the withdrawal from its other lines of business of a large share of the corporation's available capital, thus greatly curtailing its earning power and reducing its profits for these years in which this experimentation and development was in progress, and requiring, also, the investment of a considerable portion of its working capital, so withdrawn from its other lines of industry, in real estate, buildings, machinery, etc., and necessitating the spending of the remainder for supplies and accessories to the refinery business; and in advertising, and in other ways exploiting the particular trade brands adopted by this company for its finished product.

It is set forth in the corporation's brief that all of the capital thus required and so employed was, for the time being, unproductive; but that it was of necessity included on its books of account and in its annual statements as a part of its invested capital; that it not only earned nothing and thereby reduced the percentage of profit for the business as a whole; but for practically all of the time designated as the "prewar period," this development and these expenses resulted in an actual loss in its refinery business.

In support of this contention the corporation submits a statement from which it appears that its earnings on the capital actually invested in its business, exclusive of the refinery, during the prewar period, were at the rate of 11.1 per cent of the capital so invested, and in addition it submits a statement of the annual earnings of its business as a whole from June 1, 1898, to May 31, 1918, which statement follows:

Percentage of Earnings to Investment.

Year ended May 31:	Per cent.	Year ended May 31:	Per cent.
1899.....	27.5	1909.....	40.6
1900.....	24.8	1910.....	16.4
1901.....	.....	1911.....	3.5
1902.....	61.9	1912.....	16.8
1903.....	48.7	1913.....	1.2
1904.....	21.7	1914.....	13.0
1905.....	22.2	1915.....	11.6
1906.....	23.2	1916.....	1.4
1907.....	21.9	1917.....	44.5
1908.....	19.6

From this statement it appears that during the period to and inclusive of the year 1910 the earnings never fell below 16.4 per cent on its invested capital (except in the year 1901, when there was a loss) and ran as high as 61.9 per cent in 1902, the average for the 12 years being 26.1 per cent.

In computing the tax of this taxpayer for the year 1917, the Income Tax Unit applied the provisions of sections 203 and 205 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and established comparisons with corporations with capital between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 which were engaged in a similar line of business. In this classification were found only three corporations beside the taxpayer, and the earnings of these were about 7 per cent of their invested capital. From this comparison by the Unit the taxpayer appeals on the ground that the corporations selected are not representative so far as its business is concerned, for the reason that none of them engages in all the different lines of activities which comprise the business of the taxpayer, and also on the ground that its own average earnings of 26.1 per cent over a period of 12 years prior to the prewar period and 44.5 per cent for its taxable year 1917 are more truly an indication of its earning power than can justly and equitably be arrived at by the use of the comparatives selected by the Unit.

Section 203 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides:

That for the purpose of this title the deduction shall be as follows, except as otherwise in this title provided:

(a) In the case of a domestic corporation, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than seven or more than nine per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year) * * *

Section 205 provides:

(a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint, finds * * * (2) that during the prewar period the percentage, which the net income was of the invested capital, was low as compared with the percentage, which the net income during such period of representative corporations, * * * engaged in a like or similar trade or business, was of their invested capital, then the deduction shall be the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of its invested capital for the taxable year which the average deduction (determined in the same manner as provided in section two hundred and three, without including the $3,000 or $6,000 therein referred to) for such year of representative corporations * * * engaged in a like or similar trade or business is of their average invested capital for such year plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000 * * *.

In the enactment of these two sections of the law Congress assumed that the business of the three years immediately preceding the outbreak of the war on August 1, 1914, would, in general, afford a reliable measure of the average normal business of the corporation; but in the instant case, the application of section 203 appears to work an injustice because this period (referred to in the law as the "prewar period") was, for this taxpayer, rendered abnormal and not a true measure of its normal average business, by reason of the fact that it was in this very period that it undertook the development of its business of refining in addition to the business theretofore conducted by it.

For the alternative consideration of this case under section 205, the Committee requested the Unit to furnish statistics covering a broader field than that represented by the three comparatives previously used, in view of the taxpayer's protest that these are not truly representative for the reason that, so far as it knows, it is the only corporation of this character which engages in the purchase of raw material direct and disposes of such material after the portion used for the finished product has been separated therefrom.

From the statistics presented by the Unit in compliance with this request, and which include 249 corporations capitalized at from $10,000 to $10,000,000 it appears that 103 of them had prewar earnings of 7 per cent, and 124 had prewar earnings between 8.80 per cent and 8.99 per cent—the average for the entire 249 corporations being 8.1 per cent.

The Committee is of the opinion that, under the circumstances, this broader field presents a truer basis of comparison than do the three companies whose capital is in the class with that of the taxpayer but whose business, according to the taxpayer, is much more limited in its scope.

In consideration of these facts and of the fact of this company's high rate of earnings prior to the year 1911 when it began the installation and development of the new branch of its business and that in the prewar period its earnings, exclusive of the loss on its capital invested in its refinery business then being developed, were 11.1 per cent, and of the fact that in the taxable year 1917 itself this company's earnings were 44.5 per cent of its invested capital, the Committee is of the opinion that this taxpayer, for the year 1917, is entitled to further relief than that heretofore granted to it by the Income Tax Unit, and that its deduction under sections 203 and 205 of the Revenue Act of 1917 should be computed at 8.1 per cent of its invested capital.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended in re appeal of N Company, that its application for assessment under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 be granted.

The Committee on Appeals and Review has had under consideration the appeal of the N Company from a decision of the Income Tax Unit denying its application for assessment under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and assessing the tax for that year under the provisions

It appears that this corporation was organized in 1909, with an authorized capital stock of 10x dollars fully paid in, of which 4x dollars is represented by cash and 6x dollars is represented by working models turned in by A, president of the corporation, for which he received stock in that amount. The corporation since the date of its organization has been engaged in the manufacture of machinery, and on January 1, 1917, it had an accumulated surplus of 85x dollars and capital stock of 10x dollars or a total capital as shown on the return for 1917 of 95x dollars.

The corporation has concurred in all the adjustments made by the Income Tax Unit with the exception of two. It protests against the failure on the part of the Unit to allow the addition to invested capital of an item of 30x dollars originally claimed on account of the patents, good will, and other assets, partly tangible and partly intangible, which were put into the corporation by one of its officers and stockholders at the time of organization and also against the disallowance of 15x dollars as a deduction in computing net income for 1917 set up as a reserve for cost of construction, etc. This reserve was set up on the books of the corporation to take care of the expense of installing machinery sold during the year 1917, but which had not been installed at the close of the year. It subsequently developed that the amount actually paid out for installation in 1918 and charged to this reserve was 10x dollars. This amount has been allowed to the corporation in office letter dated March 1, 1920. In this letter the corporation's application for assessment under the provisions of section 209 was denied and it was notified that its correct tax liability for 1917 was 24x dollars.

It is urged that it would have been impossible for the present company to have succeeded on the small capitalization had it not been for the other property, both tangible and intangible, put into the business by A for which he received no stock. It is further urged that at the time the corporation was organized no consideration was given to the fact that the property turned in by A, including the patterns valued at 6x dollars had a value largely in excess of the par value of the stock issued to A for the patterns alone. In this way it is urged that the corporation is penalized through not having issued capital stock for the full valuation of both the tangibles and intangibles paid into the corporation by A.

The record further discloses that at the time of dissolution of the M Company, the patterns which were given to A by that company and later turned over by him to the N Company were carried on the books of the M Company at a valuation of 16x dollars, and that the patents were also carried on its books at a valuation of 45x dollars. No part of the good will or the patents is represented in the capitalization of the present company. This, it is urged, entitles the corporation to consideration under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

The excess profits tax of this corporation has been determined under the provisions of sections 201 and 207 at 48.58 per cent of the net income. The corporation, through its accountants, contends that this is due to the conservative accounting and low capitalization at the time of organization, and also to the fact that the corporation is denied in the computation of its invested capital amounts, such as patents, good will, etc., actually paid into the business and actually earning income for the corporation on which it is paying a tax.

The Committee has carefully considered the points at issue and the arguments made by the representatives of the corporation, and has reached the conclusion that this corporation has capital which is earning income but which can not be used in the computation of its invested capital for 1917 under the statutory provisions of section 207.

Article 52 of Regulations 41 provides among other things, that a claim for assessment under the provisions of section 210 may arise in cases where—long-established business concerns, which by reason of ultra-conservative accounting or the form and manner of their organization would, through the operation of section 207, be placed at a serious disadvantage in competing with representative concerns in a like or similar trade or business.

In view of the foregoing the Committee feels that this corporation should be taxed under the provisions of section 210 and recommends that the decision of the Income Tax Unit be reversed for the reasons stated above.

10

31-20-1111: A. R. R. 209.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration an appeal by the M Company against the constructive capital determined by the Income Tax Unit under the provisions of section 210, Revenue Act of 1917, claiming that the constructive capital determined by reference to representative concerns is not only less by a considerable amount than the invested capital claimed, but is also less than the invested capital which can be definitely established to the satisfaction of the Bureau.

The questions at issue as stated by the Unit in the letter of transmission are:

1. Has the department a right to fix the tax under section 210 without application by and against the wishes of the taxpayer?

2. Is the constructive capital determined by the Income Tax Unit unconscionable to the taxpayer?

Section 210 reads in part as follows:

That if the Secretary of the Treasury is unable in any case satisfactorily to determine the invested capital, the amount of the deduction shall be * * *.

Upon a strict and literal interpretation of this language the Secretary of the Treasury is unquestionably authorized to determine that the invested capital can not be satisfactorily determined, and therefore that the assessment should be determined as further provided in the section.

However, it is manifestly the purpose and intent of the excess-profits tax law that the taxpayer shall have a deduction upon all the statutory invested capital which he can establish, and if in any case the taxpayer is able to show to the satisfaction of the Unit that he has statutory invested capital which can be recognized in excess of constructive capital found upon application of section 210 the taxpayer should not be deprived of his right to have assessment based upon such statutory capital as he can show, because there are other items of invested capital which can not be determined and which he taxpayer concedes the right of the Unit to ignore.

45-20-1288: A. R. M. 89.

The provision of section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918, denying the benefits of that section to corporations 50 per cent or more of the gross income of which consists of income derived from Government contracts on a cost-plus basis was, in the opinion of the Committee, designed to cover cases in which the contractor was assured of a profit irrespective of cost, and in which the Government rather than the contractor assumed the risk of loss.

Where the unfinished work of a contractor was commandeered by the Government and it was agreed that he should receive the same compensation as he would have received under the private contract, the fact that he was subsequently compensated on a cost-plus basis after the work was completed does not, in the opinion of the Committee, operate to change the legal situation in this respect.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that taxpayer having clearly shown substantial intangible value in a business with small capitalization, the success of which business is not dependent on personal services except as may be normally required for the management of any property of any company, is entitled to relief under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and may not establish his invested capital for excess profits tax in any other manner.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company and the N Company from the findings of the Income Tax Unit in making assessment of taxes for the year 1917, under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

In the year 191-, A, B, and C acquired the business of the M Company and the N Company for cash. In each instance the business of the company was acquired and not capital stock. Each company so acquired was immediately incorporated with a capital stock of  $x$  dollars and A, B, and C, the stockholders, turned over to D and E, without other consideration from these two gentlemen than their promise and agreement to conduct the business and do the advertising, one-half in the aggregate of the said stock. In the year 191- D and E sold half of their interest to outside parties and received therefor in cash  $64x$  dollars per share.

Both companies were engaged in the manufacture and sale of a certain commodity and in the year 1917, because of nominal capital outstanding, filed income tax returns as personal service corporations. The audit in the Income Tax Unit brought the two corporations under consolidation and the tax was finally assessed under the provisions of section 210, resulting in a percentage of 3y per cent of excess profits tax to net income as compared with a percentage of 5y per cent, had assessment been made under section 201. The taxpayer submits that the assessment under section 210 imposes too high a tax and that in lieu thereof the tax should be based on certain other methods of determining invested capital, which it does not seem necessary to now refer to in detail.

The business of each company is that of an ordinary commercial enterprise. The value of the capital stock of each is conclusively shown by the original purchases by A, B, and C, and by cash sales between individuals in the year 191—, one year after incorporation. This value is not supported by personal services but by the earning power (potential or otherwise) of certain property not reflected in the capitalization. This certain property is an intangible asset which was actually paid into the company at incorporation but at a nominal value. Had the certain property been a tangible asset, article 63, of Regulations 41, could be invoked for claiming a paid-in surplus.

Article 74, of Regulations 41, defines "nominal capital" and prescribes certain tests, one of which is that corporations having a nominal capitalization but employing a substantial amount of capital in their business will not be construed as businesses having a nominal capital for purposes of excess profits tax. There is no provision in the law or regulations which gives effect to the inclusion of a substantial amount of capital of intangible nature when specifically paid in at nominal value. Manifestly, however, under such conditions the taxpayer is entitled to relief under the equitable provisions of the statute.

Accordingly the Committee recommends that action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing the tax under section 210 of the Act be sustained. In further support of this recommendation attention is directed to Advisory Tax Board Memorandum 9 [which reads as follows: A claim for assessment as a personal service corporation should be denied where the income of the corporation is derived entirely as the result of the ownership of certain property (such as patents) and is in no sense derived from the personal activities of any of the stockholders.].

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M. Company against the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 for 1918.

Two grounds are urged as a basis for relief under the provisions of sections 327 and 328: (1) That the taxpayer's invested capital can not be satisfactorily determined, and (2) that owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital and income of the corporation, denial would work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion of the tax computed without the benefit of section 327 and the tax computed with reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328.

The grounds for the claim that the invested capital can not be determined are (a) that the company has a water power site in connection with its factory which is included in the value of land and buildings but the value of which is not susceptible of accurate ascertainment, and (b) that considerable sums of money were expended prior to 1918, in building up its trade-mark and good will.

With respect to the value of the water power site it was brought out at the hearing that the original cost of such water-power site and development is included in the cost of the land and buildings and consequently is reflected in invested capital to the extent permitted under the law.

With respect to the building up of good will, no evidence whatever is presented as to expenditures in this connection. The Committee therefore finds no ground on which to hold that the capital can not be satisfactorily determined.

The abnormal conditions affecting capital and income are apparently that in the prewar period and prior to 1915, the business was not efficiently operated but that since 1915, under new management a reorganization has been effected with results in much greater profit to the company. The Committee is unable to agree that inefficient management, constitutes such an abnormal condition as to be recognizable under the statute.

It is therefore recommended that the action of the Unit in denying assessment in accordance with sections 327 and 328 be affirmed.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, a corporation, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment of taxes for the calendar year 1917, upon the basis of section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917. The company was incorporated in June, 1911, taking over the assets and liabilities of the business of A who, with B, was engaged in developing certain patents. The assets so taken over consisted of  $x$  dollars. Against these assets there were accounts payable aggregating  $\frac{3}{4}x$  dollars, which were assumed. For these net assets capital stock, in the amount of  $2x$  dollars was issued, of which 49 per cent was issued to B, 50 per cent to A, and 1 per cent to D. No additional funds were paid in to the corporation since it appears that A possessed no funds which he could invest, and B, having no faith in the practical ability of the patents, refused further financial assistance. The patents did not prove a success but, as a result of several years of experimental and development work, the corporation secured various patents for automobile bumpers, the use of which it sold to the N Company, which operated the same on a license, paying the M Company royalties on the number of bumpers manufactured. The only income received by the corporation in the year 1917, was from these royalties and it amounted to  $4x$  dollars. The only disbursements made were salaries, attorney's fees, commissions, and certain miscellaneous expenses, the aggregate amount being  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, leaving net income for the year 1917 of  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars.

It is contended by the taxpayer that the income of the corporation consisted of royalties received from these bumper patents developed by the ingenuity and personal services of the stockholders, and the continuance of these personal services on the part of such stockholders is absolutely essential if the income of the corporation is to continue. The license agreement with the N Company provides that A shall devote his time to demonstrating, improving, and developing the bumper patents, and it is claimed that the result of these efforts is being reflected in the royalties received by the corporation.

The books of the company are kept on a cash receipts and disbursements basis, and at January 1, 1917, the cash book and stock record book show an asset of cash,  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, liabilities, attorney's fees, and capital stock,  $2\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars.

Article 71 of Regulations 41 provides:

Section 209 * * * applies primarily to occupations, professions, trades, and businesses engaged principally in rendering personal service, in which the employment of capital is not necessary, and the earnings of which are to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the owners.

Advisory Tax Board Memorandum 9, published in Bulletin 1-19, covers a case quite analogous to this. The memorandum reads, in part, as follows:

The facts are briefly that the net income of  $9\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars was derived entirely from license fees paid by users of machines embodying the company's patents. This is the only source of revenue that the company now has or ever has had. Certain patents on a new form of mold for vulcanizing tires were assigned to the company. It originally intended to manufacture the tires, but later determined to grant licenses under the patents, and has never engaged in manufacturing. The paid-in capital is  $x$  dollars.

Inasmuch as the income of the corporation is derived entirely as a result of the ownership of certain property, namely, patents; and is in no sense derived from the personal activities of any of the stockholders, other than such activities as are normally required for the management of any property of any company, it is recommended that the claim under section 209 should be denied.

In the instant case capital (patents) is employed in the business. Royalties are the result of the employment of this capital, and it can not be denied that the volume of the business rests practically upon the individual efforts of the stockholders of this corporation. This is true, more or less, in every corporation, and the distinction must be noted between personal service and commercial service.

The company has paid-in capital, but its true invested capital for the taxable year can not be actually determined. At any rate, the income for the taxable year justifies the consideration given the case under section 210 of the Revenue Act by the Income Tax Unit.

The Committee accordingly recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment of taxes against this corporation under section 209 of the Revenue Act be sustained, and that its action in assessing the tax under section 210 be approved.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of M Company, a partnership, from a decision of the Income Tax Unit rejecting the excess profits tax return filed for the calendar year ended December 31, 1917, under the provisions of section 209, and making an assessment of excess profits tax under the provisions of section 210.

It appears from the records in the case that the partnership was formed in 190— for the purpose of conducting a wholesale merchandise brokerage business, the firm acting as local brokers of foreign principals in negotiating sales on a commission basis. In addition to its regular business of negotiating sales of merchandise as brokers the firm purchased merchandise from time to time in "pooled cars" which it sold at a profit. The sales negotiated on a commission basis during the year 1917 aggregated 100x dollars and yielded gross brokerage charges of x dollars, while the amount of merchandise purchased aggregated 22x dollars, which merchandise was sold at a gross profit of  $\frac{1}{2}$ x dollars. A, in an affidavit, states that it is his opinion that the expense of conducting the business could be fairly apportioned so as to charge brokerage sales with 40 per cent and merchandise sales with 60 per cent of the total expense. An allocation of expense on the basis stated by A to each line of business conducted shows that approximately 30 per cent of the firm's net income was derived from sales of merchandise. In reply to inquiries made by the Income Tax Unit the firm stated that it had no branches during the year 1917, employed only one salesman, and that it was not responsible in any event for losses in shipments, bad debts, etc.; that such responsibility rested upon its foreign principals or was a matter of adjustment between foreign sellers and local buyers, and that it did not either directly or indirectly make loans or advances to customers, but did extend short-time credits on merchandise.

The partnership in rendering its returns for the year 1917 computed excess profits tax under the provisions of section 209 based on the contention that its principal net income was due primarily to the personal activities of the two partners. The balance sheets accompanying the returns show, as of January 1 and December 31, 1917, moneys borrowed in considerable amounts and accounts receivable and payable, indicating the use of capital more than nominal in amount of the business.

Because of the volume of business transacted by the partnership during the year 1917 through direct buying and selling of merchandise, and the numerous accounts receivable and payable shown on the firm's balance sheets, both at the beginning and close of the taxable year, the Unit denied assessment under section 209, but, holding that a statutory invested capital of  $\frac{1}{3}$ x dollars was negligible in comparison with the volume of business transacted and seriously disproportionate to the invested capital of other taxpayers doing a like or similar business, assessed tax under the provisions of section 210, basing such assessment upon comparative data compiled in the Unit. The comparatives used appear to be representative and give a tax which is both fair to the Government and to the taxpayer.

In view of the foregoing, the Committee is of the opinion that classification under the provisions of section 209 was properly denied, and that the assessment of the tax as made by the Unit under the provisions of section 210 should be sustained.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended, where respective values of mixed aggregates of tangible and intangible properties paid in for stocks and bonds can not be satisfactorily determined, that the tax should be assessed under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and articles 18, 24, and 52, Regulations 41.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, a corporation, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in assessing taxes for the year 1917 under section 210 instead of under section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

In June, 189—, the M Company acquired the business of a partnership owning and publishing a certain publication. The assets of the partnership consisted of cash, typesetting plant, library, stock of bound volumes, office furniture and fixtures, and copyrights. It is also alleged the partnership had a valuable good will asset. The consideration received by the partnership from the corporation consisted of shares of capital stock (par value 20x dollars) and bonds amounting to 7x dollars.

The corporation, in filing its 1917 tax return, failed to furnish balance sheets at the beginning and end of the taxable year, explaining that the business was entirely on a cash basis. At the request of the Income Tax Unit it subsequently constructed balance sheets as of December 31, 1916, and as of December 31, 1917. The constructed balance sheet as of December 31, 1916, reads as follows:

ASSETS.

Paid for copyright and good will at organization of company in 189—, half assigned to each—

Copyright.....	13x dollars
Good will.....	13x dollars
Typesetting plant.....	13x dollars
Library and stock.....	13x dollars
Furniture and fixtures.....	13x dollars
Cash.....	23x dollars

303x dollars

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock.....	20x dollars
Bonds issued in 189— and subsequently paid off.....	7x dollars
Increase in cash and other tangible assets since 189—.....	33x dollars

303x dollars

The bonds aggregating 7x dollars, which were issued, were retired within a period of 12 years subsequent to date of issue out of the earnings of the corporation. It is, therefore, contended that retirement of this liability gives the corporation a surplus in amount equivalent to the bond issue of 7x dollars. It is also claimed, as stated in the above balance sheet, that the increase in cash and other tangible assets since 189— gives the corporation additional surplus of 33x dollars. It is further contended that in addition to this surplus aggregating 103x dollars the corporation is entitled to good will of 4x dollars, based on 20 per cent of the capital stock of the corporation outstanding as at March 3, 1917.

A dividend adjustment of 4x dollars has been made by taxpayer, leaving 133x dollars, which the taxpayer claims as statutory invested capital, as against the invested capital of 11x dollars constructed by the Income Tax Unit under the provisions of section 210. This is a case where stocks and bonds were issued by the corporation prior to March 3, 1917, for a mixed aggregate of—

- (a) Tangible property,
- (b) Copyrights, and
- (c) Good will subject to the determination of values as prescribed in article (59) (1) (2) of Regulations 41.

The claim is made that tangible assets at acquisition (189—) could not have been less than x dollars. There is no evidence to support this assertion. The corresponding tangible assets (eliminating cash) at January 1, 1917, are shown at values aggregating 23x dollars and the difference of 13x dollars is unexplained. This increase may or may not represent appreciation.

Assuming the surplus has been increased 7x dollars by the retirement of a liability through income, no evidence has been submitted to show that the value of the copyrights and good will alleged to have been acquired in 189— was in excess of this amount of borrowed capital. On this basis of valuation no cash value could be placed on the capital stock issue of 20x dollars. Only an assertion is made that—

The tangible assets consisting of cash, typesetting plant, library, stock of bound volumes, and office furniture and fixtures had a value of x dollars, thus making the value of the copyrights and good will 26x dollars (20x dollars attributable to stock and 6x dollars attributable to bonds).

and that—

While it is true that the copyrights of the publication have always been and will always continue to be the most valuable asset possessed by the M Company, and in view of the fact that at this late date we can not satisfactorily state its actual worth at the time of its acquisition, we have therefore waived our privilege of having any portion of this 26x dollars treated as copyright and consent to have the entire sum treated as good will.

Article 59 (1) provides that:

In the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed in the case of a corporation, that its stock was issued for the following purposes in the order named:

- (a) Good will or other intangible property,
- (b) Patents and copyrights, and
- (c) Tangible property.

This article (2) further provides that:

Upon the production by the taxpayer of evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the actual values at the date of acquisition of (a) the tangible property, and (b) the patents and copyrights, the sum of these two items may be applied against the total par value of the securities issued and the remainder will then be deemed to represent the par value of the securities issued for the good will or other intangible property. (3) Cases where mixed aggregates of tangible and intangible property have been paid in for stock and bonds shall, if the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to determine satisfactorily the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, be treated as coming under articles 18 and 24 and the tax shall be assessed accordingly.

Articles 18 and 24 are regulations applicable to section 210 of the Revenue Act and from what has been stated it is clearly apparent that the respective values of the tangible and intangible properties acquired by the corporation in 189— can not be satisfactorily determined. The Committee accordingly recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit, in disposing of this case under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, be sustained.

20

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

17-21-1588: A. R. R. 464

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917 be sustained, and that the said corporation's excess profits tax liability be determined under the provisions of section 210 of that statute.

The committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and assessing excess profits tax under the provisions of section 201 for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917.

It appears from the records in the case that during the taxable year in question the four officers of the company owned all of the stock and gave their entire time and attention to the business, that of obtaining exclusive selling contracts covering lots, tracts, and other parcels of land and the disposal of such lands on a commission basis. It does not appear that the company made any purchases and sales of lands on its own account nor that it assisted in the financing of real estate operations, except that in a very few cases where the purchasers of lands were unable to continue their payments under the terms of their contracts and the company would lose its commission should such contracts lapse, and in one or two instances where such losses and lapse of contracts would result in a serious hardship to the purchaser of the lands the company assumed such contracts and resold them.

It further appears that the company was organized with an authorized capital of $3,000, of which amount $2,000 was subscribed for and paid in prior to January 1, 1917, and that no addition to capital has been made since the organization from any source other than from earned income, funds, however, being borrowed occasionally to meet payrolls and expenses at times when the collection of commissions earned has been deferred. The taxpayer contends that it requires and employs no more than a nominal capital in the conduct of its business, that the character of its business is such that capital is not required, and that its success is due to and its net income is derived solely from the activities of its officers, all of whom are stockholders. To this contention the Committee does not agree for the reason that it is shown that in the conduct of its business the corporation does require capital and that its income is derived in a large part from services rendered by others.

Under its usual form of contract the company, in taking over a subdivision for sale, obligates itself to bear all selling expenses such as newspaper advertisements, printed matter, signs, and the cost of erecting branch offices on the property offered for sale. During the year in question advertising, auto expenses, miscellaneous expenses, and supplies, as shown by taxpayer's original return, amounted to 4x dollars. It also obligates itself to render various forms of service, such as planning and supervising the placing of properties on the market, the making of sales and collections, and the accounting for and remitting of collections made, to furnish surety bonds for the faithful performance of its contracts, to supervise the entire work of preparing the property for market, including the negotiation and letting of contracts, subject to the approval of the owners of the land, with all engineers and contractors, and the laying out and construction of improvements by such engineers and contractors, to negotiate with all public and private corporations and public authorities for permission to construct and connect improvements in conformity with private rights and public law, and to prepare and publish such advertising matter as is deemed necessary. These duties are discharged in part by the four officers of the corporation and in a large part by its superintendents and salesmen working on a commission basis and its salaried office force. The compensation of the corporation for the rendition of such services is received in the form of commissions based on the amount of sales made by its salesmen, an average of twenty-five being employed, each of whom receives a stated percentage of the commissions received on the sales made by him. The superintendents who direct and supervise the activities of the salesmen and perform other duties receive a commission of 2 per cent on all sales made. The balance of the commissions received accrues to the corporation.

In view of these facts it is the opinion of the Committee that the business of the corporation is such as that ordinarily requiring the use of capital, and inasmuch as a substantial part of the income received is derived from services rendered by the company's superintendents and salesmen, the Committee holds that the Unit was correct in denying assessment under section 209 and recommends that such action be sustained.

The corporation in preparing its return for the fiscal year 1917, reported on the accrual basis, showed a net income of 35x dollars, and computed the excess profits tax thereon under the provisions of section 209. It is shown that the corporation is entitled, under its usual form of contract, to a commission of from 10 per cent to 30 per cent on the gross sales price of each property sold, that it usually deducts 5 per cent of such sales price from the initial or "down" payment, in part payment of its commission, and a portion of each subsequent installment payment until its entire commission is satisfied. Under this plan of realizing its commissions the company must wait from two and one-half to five years, and in some instances a much longer period, before it finally receives payment in full for its services. It is stated that the company attempted to make a return on the actual receipt and disbursement basis but was forced by the Collector of its district to report on the accrual basis.

It is the opinion of the Committee that the alleged action of the collector in refusing to permit the corporation to report on an actual receipt and disbursement basis was not justified. It is shown that the responsibilities and duties of the company under its usual form of contract with the owners of the properties to be sold, in consideration for the assumption of which responsibilities and the discharge of such duties, commissions are to be received, are not fully discharged and the commissions fully earned until the last installment payment is received from the purchaser, and therefore to report the full amount of commissions called for under sales contracts as income for the year during which such contracts are entered into is to report as income for that year commissions which have not been fully earned and which, in case of default, will never be received.

The revenue agent reported a net income of 14x dollars, computed on the actual receipt and disbursement basis, and an invested capital of 10x dollars for the fiscal year 1917, and stated that the company and its accountant agreed with this report except in respect to his decision that the company was not entitled to classification as a personal service corporation.

After a careful consideration of all the facts presented the Committee is of the opinion that the M Company is not entitled, for the fiscal year 1917, to assessment under the provisions of section 209 as a personal service corporation or one employing only a nominal capital. In connection with this case, however, the Unit has prepared a comparative data sheet, using a number of comparatives.

From these comparatives it is apparent that the amount of statutory invested capital allowable to the M Company for the taxable year 1917, is small when compared with that of other taxpayers engaged in a like or similar business, which fact would, through the operation of section 207, place that corporation at a serious disadvantage in comparison with such other taxpayers, and that the percentage of excess profits tax to net income assessed against it for the said taxable year is grossly disproportionate to such percentage in the case of other corporations engaged in a like or similar business. In comparison with the amount of business done the appellant does not appear to have a normal amount of capital invested in its business, owing to which fact it found itself obliged from time to time to borrow funds with which to meet its pay rolls and current expenses. It does not appear to have enjoyed any particular advantage over other corporations doing a similar business.

Article 52 of Regulations 41 provides, in part, as follows:

Section 210 provides for exceptional cases in which the invested capital can not be satisfactorily determined. In such cases the taxpayer may submit to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue evidence in support of a claim for assessment under the provisions of section 210. (See articles 18 and 24.) Such exceptional cases may consist, among others, of the following:

(3) Long-established business concerns which by reason of ultraconservative accounting or the form and manner of their organization would, through the operation of section 207, be placed at a serious disadvantage in competing with representative concerns in a like or similar trade or business.

Section 327(d) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides, in part, that—

Where upon application by the corporation the Commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328.

While the above-quoted provision of the Revenue Act of 1918 will not be applied in any case in which the tax computed without its benefit is high merely because the corporation earned in the taxable year a high rate of profits upon a normal invested capital, in the opinion of the Committee it confirms the interpretation which has been placed upon section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and articles 18, 24, and 52 of Regulations 41.

It having been shown that the M Company employed more than a nominal amount of capital in its business during the taxable year ended March 31, 1917, and derived a considerable part of its net income from services rendered by others than its four stockholders, the Committee recommends that the action of the Unit in denying assessment under the provisions of section 209 be sustained. And further, in view of the fact that the said corporation was ultraconservative in its capitalization and the further fact that the amount of capital it had invested in the business was insufficient at times to meet the needs of that business and was less than normal as compared with the amount of business transacted and as compared with the amount of capital employed by other concerns doing a similar business, the Committee recommends that the case be returned to the Unit for adjustment and assessment of excess profits tax under the provisions of section 210 on the basis of the average percentages shown on the data sheet submitted to the Committee.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company that the action of the Income Tax Unit be reversed and that assessment of the excess profits tax of this corporation be made in accordance with the provisions of section 209 of the Revenue Act.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment of taxes for the year 1917 under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

The M Company was organized in March, 1917, for the purpose of doing a brokerage business in metals. The company has paid-in capital stock of  $\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars issued in three shares. Its gross sales for the year 1917 amounted to 183x dollars and its cost of goods sold amounted to 165x dollars. The only expense of the corporation consisted of a salary of  $1\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars paid to its president, who owns one share of stock, and  $\frac{1}{6}x$  dollars paid for incorporation and legal services. Its net income was, accordingly, 16x dollars and its balance sheet at the close of December 31, 1917, shows capital stock,  $\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars, surplus, 16x dollars, this latter amount representing the net income of the year as stated. The treasurer and the secretary of the corporation are its other stockholders.

The Income Tax Unit denied the right of assessment under section 209, and because of the relation of the corporation's income to its invested capital the tax was assessed under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act.

This assessment resulted in an excess profits tax of  $y$  per cent of net income, resulting in an additional tax of  $4x$  dollars.

The taxpayer under his contention for assessment under section 209 claims that 99 per cent of the business of the company consisted of brokerage collected on sales made to the N Company, that the arrangement with this company was that it should be furnished with a certain product in quantities such as they might order, and that the broker should be paid a certain brokerage over and above the mill price, the mill price being known to the purchasers. The taxpayer made the collections from the N Company and paid to the mills the price of the product purchased. It is stated that it was so arranged that capital was not necessary in these transactions, since the N Company was required to pay for the product furnished it prior to the date on which the M Company was required to pay the mills. The corporation accordingly rests its case on its claim that it transacts brokerage business only, that it has a mere nominal capital of  $\frac{1}{3}x$  dollars, and that during the year of 1917 it was the personal equation of its president that made it possible for this corporation to conduct any business whatever.

The Income Tax Unit contends that the corporation was trading as a principal, making contracts direct with the purchaser and assuming responsibility thereunder, and that accordingly its tax can not be adjusted under section 209 of the Revenue Act.

Article 73 of Regulations 41, revised, provides that:

Agents and brokers requiring and using no capital or merely a nominal capital in their business are taxable under article 15, but commission houses regularly employing a substantial amount of capital, whether to lend to principals or to carry goods on their own account, are not deemed to be agents or brokers and are taxable under the provisions of article 16.

In the instant case it is clearly apparent that only nominal capital was employed in the business. No advances were made to the manufacturer, and collections from the purchaser only passed through the hands of the brokers. The goods were shipped direct to the purchaser, and therefore the officers of the corporation required no offices and no clerical assistance. It was merely a matter of securing orders for the product and placing these orders with the manufacturer. It was admitted in conference that under the contracts with the purchaser the M Company might be sued, but in view of the recognition by the purchaser that the M Company was merely acting in a brokerage capacity, without capital to insure recovery under any breach of contract, the real responsibility rested in the manufacturer, and that in event there should be any right of action it would rest against the purchaser. In view of this, the representatives of the taxpayer contend that for the purpose of arriving at a proper tax the Department should look beyond corporate form if it is considered the corporation was trading as a principal.

The Committee recognizes that it is only on the theory that the M Company might be held responsible under its contracts that assessment under section 209 can be denied. It considers, however, that the nominal capital of the corporation clearly establishes the fact that it was not contemplated it should be held responsible except by way of personal service to both the buyer and seller, and accordingly the corporation clearly comes within the contemplation of the section of the Act itself which provides that a corporation doing business on a nominal capital, or without any capital, should be assessed for excess profits tax at the rate of 8 per cent on its net income.

The Committee accordingly recommends, in the instant case, that the action of the Income Tax Unit be reversed and that assessment of the excess profits tax of this corporation be made in accordance with the provisions of section 209 of the Revenue Act.

REVENUE ACTS OF 1917 AND 1918.

Recommended, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the M Company special consideration under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and under sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, be sustained.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

The M Company was organized and incorporated in 1906 with capital stock issued and outstanding amounting to 8x dollars. Of this amount x dollars was issued to A and charged to good will on the books of the corporation. This contribution was in recognition of the experience of A and his success as a salesman in the territory in which the corporation was located.

The corporation filed its returns for the fiscal year ended May 31 1918, computing income and profits taxes under the provisions of section 201, and under the provisions of section 328 at the rate of 50 per cent of its net income. The corporation subsequently filed a claim for consideration under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, based on the following reasons:

1. That the case of the taxpayer is an exceptional one, and its invested capital can not be used as the basis for assessing the excess profits tax without resulting in an unduly burdensome tax, because the invested capital is seriously disproportionate to the taxable income.

2. That the income of the taxable year represents the fruit of activities antedating the taxable year.

3. That the operation of section 207 would place it at a disadvantage in competing with representative concerns.

The books of the corporation have been examined by a revenue agent and its invested capital has been clearly established. This is recognized by the taxpayer who relies, under the above contentions, principally on the value of the services of A who is president of the corporation and who, in 1917, acquired practically all of the stock of the corporation, and upon the fact that in 1916 a very satisfactory contract was made from which it is claimed about one-fourth of the income of the company is derived. This contract, in effect, provided for the purchase of a finished product to be made from steel at a price which would yield a reasonable profit over all costs, whatever they might prove to be. It is stated, however, that the purchase amounted to more than a normal year's supply and that delivery has not yet been completed. The taxpayer was accordingly able to supply its customers at the high prevailing prices in the year 1918 and to realize the correspondingly large profits. Its net income for the fiscal year ended May 31, 1917, was 8x dollars and its net income for the fiscal year ended May 31, 1918, was 22x dollars. The invested capital at the beginning of the fiscal year ended May 31, 1917, was 30x dollars and at the beginning of the fiscal year ended May 31, 1918, was 38x dollars, while at the close of the fiscal year ended May 31, 1918, it was 61x dollars, which reflected the undistributed income of 22x dollars for that year. The income and profits taxes assessed by the Unit for the fiscal year ended May 31, 1918, amounted to 12x dollars, which amount, deducted from the income for the year, leaves a balance of 10x dollars for dividends, or approximately 27 per cent of the invested capital at the beginning of the taxable year.

It is contended that A's personality is a most important factor in the business and that possibly consideration should be given for assessment of the company's taxes under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917, but this section of the law manifestly is not applicable because of the amount of capital employed in the business nor can A's services be considered as creating an abnormal condition because he had been constantly employed in the development of the business since its incorporation and the value of his services was recognized in the first instance by the corporation's contribution of  $x$  dollars of its stock which it charged to good will.

Section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides for an equitable adjustment of the tax when the invested capital of a corporation can not be satisfactorily determined, and in giving recognition to the intent of this section, article 52 of Regulations 41 provides that when invested capital is seriously disproportionate to taxable income because of the realization in one year of the earnings of capital unproductively invested through a period of years or of the fruits of activities antedating the taxable year, adjustment of the tax may be made under the provisions of section 210.

The Committee, after careful consideration of all the facts in the instant case, finds that the business of the M Company gradually and satisfactorily developed from the date of its incorporation with consistent earnings in the years 1916, 1917, and 1918 available for dividends. The capital stock of the company was only  $8x$  dollars and yet at the beginning of the year 1916 the company has a surplus of  $22x$  dollars.

In the final analysis of the case it would seem that taxpayer's contention substantially rests only on an abnormal condition brought about by a business contract which resulted in material advantage to the taxpayer by virtue of circumstances which, in the year 1918, were reflected in very high prices for the product of this corporation. It is not thought this is such an abnormal condition as might be contemplated under article 52 of Regulations 41 or under section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918. The contract was a simple business proposition which, like many other contracts, resulted in large profits during the year 1918 and it might be said in corresponding losses in subsequent years. The right to claim such losses is recognized in certain sections of the Revenue Act of 1918 and in the regulations promulgated thereunder. Surely, under such conditions, there is no good reason why a corporation receiving large profits in the year 1918 in the ordinary conduct of its business should not pay taxes under the prescribed provisions of the law without special consideration under the equitable provisions of the law. The ratio of excess profits tax, in the instant case, is something in excess of 50 per cent, but there are other corporations having similar favorable contracts made in the ordinary course of business which paid tax at equally as high a rate.

The Committee accordingly recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the M Company special consideration under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and under sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, be sustained.

Recommended, that the M Company, formerly the N Company, be granted the benefit of assessment of excess profits and war profits taxes for the year 1918 under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918; that in the preparation of a comparative data sheet particular care be used to select only such comparatives as are fair both to the Government and to the taxpayer; and that the Unit be sustained in restoring to the closing inventory for that year the fruit on hand in warehouses and in transit to market but not marketed and sold as of December 31, 1918.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, formerly the N Company, from the action of the Income Tax Unit in computing the amount of war profits credit to be allowed the corporation for the year 1918 under the provisions of section 311(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 and including in the closing inventory for that year the amount of fruit on hand in warehouses ready for sale.

It appears from the records in the case that in 190— the N Company was organized for the purpose of taking over certain real estate and securities owned by a partnership and the business of growing, shipping, and selling fruits conducted by it, and incorporated with an authorized capital stock issue of 10x dollars which was in 1917 reduced to 7½x dollars. The name of the corporation was changed in 1920 to the M Company and the revenue agent who investigated the corporation's income tax returns for the years 1909-1919 reported:

The corporation was formed to take over certain real estate and securities which were owned by A and B and operated by them as a partnership. In setting up these accounts on the books at the time of incorporation the officers placed very conservative figures upon the buildings and equipment and upon the real estate. * * * An examination of the books of the partnership for 1905 and the first half of 1906 would indicate that the value of the good will based upon the earnings for this period would be at least three times the total value claimed.

which statement indicates that the corporation was very conservatively capitalized.

During the prewar period 1911-1913 the corporation's orchard was divided into two units, one containing about r acres in full bearing, the other about r acres of young trees which had not yet reached the productive state and in which a considerable portion of the corporation's invested capital was tied up, due to which fact the corporation claims its net income for the prewar period was abnormally low as compared with its invested capital for the same period.

In an affidavit executed by A under date of October 13, 1920, it is stated that the average yearly yield of the old orchard for the prewar period was 38y boxes of fruit, that the profit per year for that period was z dollars plus per box. For the year 1918 the yield of both old and new orchards was 72y boxes and the average net profit per box z dollars plus.

The corporation contends that inasmuch as the figures submitted show conclusively that it did not benefit by war profits it should not be called upon to pay a war profits tax, and submits the following:

In order to arrive at a fair basis for assessing the war profits tax we suggest that the war profits credit be computed as follows:

To the average net income for the prewar period add a figure representing the increased production in 1918 in boxes over the prewar period times the average profit per box in the prewar period. In other words, if during the prewar period our orchards had been in the same bearing condition they were in 1918 it is reasonable to assume that they would have produced as much fruit as they did in 1918, or 72y boxes a year instead of an average of 38y boxes. Therefore an amount representing the increase in 1918, namely 34y boxes, times the average prewar profit per box should be added to our average prewar profit in determining the war profits credit.

This contention and suggestion may be dismissed upon the mere statement that the net income of a corporation need not be derived solely from so-called "war profits," that is, the increase in normal profits by reason of a greater demand and higher prices due to war conditions, to be subject to the tax complained of, and that there is no provision in the Revenue Act of 1918 which would permit the allowance of a war profits credit computed on the basis suggested by the appellant corporation. The Committee is, however, of the opinion that due to conservative capitalization, the realization of net income in 1918 resulting from the investment of capital which was nonincome producing during the prewar period and for a number of years subsequent thereto, and the payment of salaries to officers which were extremely low as compared to salaries paid by other concerns engaged in the same line of business of similar volume (one salary only being paid to an officer of the company for 1918), abnormal conditions existed during 1918 and that the assessment of excess profits and war profits taxes for that year under section 301 of the Revenue Act of 1918 will work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax so computed and the tax assessed against representative corporations. The Committee therefore recommends that, bearing these abnormal conditions in mind, the Unit carefully prepare a comparative data sheet and grant the corporation assessment under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

With reference to the question of inventory the taxpayer states:

From the time that this corporation was first organized an inventory of the fruit in storage in the packing house had been made weekly, principally for insurance purposes, and erroneously at the end of every year the estimated value of the fruit in the packing house and shipped, but not marketed and sold, was carried on to the books, and this policy of carrying the fruit inventory on to the books was continued until the year 1918, at which time the inventory was omitted owing to the fact that it is our understanding that farmers and farming corporations are required to make their returns on the basis of produce actually marketed and sold during the year, and it was the intention of the corporation, as explained to the revenue agent who investigated the returns, prior to the commencement of his examination, to file amended returns for previous years eliminating the fruit inventory and adjusting the income so that it would show only the profits on fruit actually marketed and sold.

The taxpayer further states various reasons which in its opinion precludes an exact determination of a fruit-growing corporation's true net income if the fruit gathered and in warehouse, together with fruit en route to market but not sold, is included in the inventory.

The revenue agent who investigated the corporation's books reported that—

For 1918 the company purposely left out of the books  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars of fruit in packing house on the theory that it had the right to make a return on the basis of farmer who keeps no books and report only the income derived from products actually marketed and sold.

The agent restored to the closing inventory for 1918 this item of  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars, which action was approved by the Unit and appealed from by the taxpayer.

As shown by the records in the case the corporation, from the time it was organized down to the close of 1918, kept books of account and regularly took inventories which were carried to those books and in which was included the fruit on hand in warehouses and in transit to market, but not marketed and sold. Its net income for each year was determined and its tax returns rendered on this basis, and there is nothing to show and the taxpayer does not claim that it ever applied for permission to change from the method regularly employed to an actual receipt and disbursement basis. The Committee is therefore of the opinion that the Unit should be sustained in its refusal to accept the 1918 tax return of the M Company as originally rendered.

It was optional with the taxpayer whether it should return for tax purposes on an inventory basis or on the basis of actual receipts and disbursements. It adopted the first-mentioned method and followed the same for a number of years. An approved method of reporting income for tax purposes once adopted should be consistently followed from year to year, and permission to change from one approved method to another should not be lightly granted and only granted after a formal request for permission to change has been received from the taxpayer and approved by the Commissioner. While in the instant case the taxpayer now claims that returns rendered on a basis which requires the inclusion in inventories of fruit on hand in warehouses and in transit at the close of a taxable year, but not marketed and sold, does not truly reflect its net income for that year it followed such a method of accounting and rendering of returns for nearly ten years without protest. At the close of 1918 it realized that market conditions were such that a return rendered on the basis of actual receipts and disbursements would, if accepted, show as taxable net income an amount much less than would be shown by a return rendered on the basis formerly followed, and this appears to be the controlling reason for a desire to change; and, in the opinion of the Committee, it is such a one as can not, under the circumstances, be properly recognized.

In view of the foregoing the Committee recommends that the M Company, formerly the N Company, be granted the benefit of assessment of excess profits and war profits taxes for the year 1918 under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918; that in the preparation of a comparative data sheet particular care be used to select only such comparatives as are fair both to the Government and to the taxpayer; and that the Unit be sustained in restoring to the closing inventory for that year the fruit on hand in warehouses and in transit to market, but not marketed and sold as of December 31, 1918.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying to the said company assessment of profits tax for the year 1917 under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and for the year 1918 under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be sustained.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying to the taxpayer assessment of profits taxes for the year 1917 under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and for the year 1918 under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of that year.

The grounds upon which the taxpayer contends that profits taxes for the years 1917 and 1918 should be assessed under the provisions of the said sections as stated in its appeal of February 26, 1921, addressed to this Committee, are as follows:

In view of the fact that our corporation is denied the inclusion in invested capital of a part of the good will asset which was acquired for capital stock, and in view of the further fact that this good will value is in reality much greater than the amount of capital stock issued therefor, it appears that the Income Tax Unit is in error in stating that there is nothing abnormal in regard to the invested capital of this corporation.

Supplementary Bulletin Rulings.

It also appears that asset account representing machinery actually in use in the business was charged off in 1907 and subsequent years thereby making the capital amount appear smaller in the books than is really the case if the true investment of the corporation could actually be shown.

In regard to the income of the corporation, the figures now at your disposal as contained on the income tax returns for the years 1917 and 1918 indicate very plainly that the profits of these years are abnormal as compared with earnings of our corporation for previous years. This fact in itself indicates that the large profits made in the years for which relief is claimed through your Committee are based to a great extent upon the building efforts of the previous years when incomes were very much smaller.

The records in the case indicate that prior to 1907 the taxpayer was operating under a charter granted under the laws of the State of Y and that in 1907 it was reorganized under the laws of Z in order that it might hold legal title to real property in that State. Upon reorganization its authorized capital stock was increased from 10x dollars to 50x dollars and the stock of the reorganized company was issued to the holders of the old stock in proportion to their original holdings.

The revenue agent who investigated the returns of the taxpayer reported that its opening balance sheet at time of reorganization was as follows:

Cash .....	10x dollars.
Merchandise .....	9x dollars.
Bills receivable .....	1x dollars.
Machinery .....	16x dollars.
Accounts receivable .....	6x dollars.	Accounts payable .....	5x dollars.
Good will .....	13x dollars.	Capital stock .....	50x dollars.
	55x dollars.		55x dollars.

The revenue agent reported that the officers of the appellant company state that the reorganization was made solely for the purpose of securing a charter in Z in order the the taxpayer could hold legal title to real property in that State. No new stockholders were admitted. The ownership of the stock in the reorganized company being the same as the ownership of stock in the original, the item of 13x dollars set up on the books as good will serves as a balancing entry, or offset, to the increase in capital stock over net assets. It does not appear that the company as reorganized possessed one dollar's worth more of any tangible or intangible asset than it possessed immediately prior to that reorganization. It took over the assets and assumed the liabilities of the old organization together with any and all good will attached to the business. It has not been shown, nor claimed, that any amount was ever actually expended by either the old or the new organization in the acquirement of good will and yet, because of the fact that a reorganization was effected and an item of good will was entered upon the books in an amount equal to the excess of par value of new stock over the net value of the assets taken over, the taxpayer is now in a position to claim and be allowed under the provisions of section 207(a) of the Revenue Act of 1917 as statutory invested capital 10x dollars for the year 1917 on account of good will and 12½x dollars for the year 1918 under the provisions of section 326(4) of the Revenue Act of 1918. The mere fact that the taxpayer can not be allowed to include in its statutory invested capital the full amount of good will it wrote on its books at time of reorganization, even though that amount is less than the actual value of the good will at that time, as is claimed in this case, does not, as it contends, create such an abnormal condition with regard to statutory invested capital as would entitle it to assessment of profits taxes under the provisions of the said sections 210, 327, and 328.

In support of its claim that "asset account representing machinery actually in use in the business was charged off in 1907 and subsequent years" the tax payer has submitted no specific and detailed statement, although it apparently has been afforded full opportunity to do so.

From the records in the case it appears that the books of account have been carefully kept and that no great difficulty would be experienced in determining just what amounts, if any, charged off to any asset account may now be properly restored under the provisions of the law and regulations as an increase in invested capital. If this be true, the mere fact that an asset account has been, in the past, improperly reduced through excessive depreciation charges or otherwise, does not in itself preclude adjustment now nor a satisfactory determination of the company's statutory invested capital, and it does not in itself entitle the company to assessment under section 210, nor sections 327 and 328. The records in the case do not disclose any abnormal condition here.

The third reason advanced by the taxpayer in support of its contention that it is entitled to assessment of profits taxes under the provisions of the said sections 210, 327, and 328, is that its profits for the years 1917 and 1918 "are abnormal as compared with earnings of our corporation for the previous years" and that "this fact in itself indicates that the large profits made in the years for which relief is claimed * * * are based to a great extent upon the building efforts of the previous years when incomes were very much smaller."

After a careful consideration of all the facts disclosed by the records in the case the Committee is of the opinion that there was not in 1917 nor 1918 a realization of the earnings of capital unproductively invested or employed through a period of years, nor of the fruits of activities antedating the years 1917 and 1918. The realization of large profits during the years 1917 and 1918 was undoubtedly due in a large measure to war conditions. The taxpayer is engaged in the manufacture and sale of certain articles, and, as has been repeatedly demonstrated to this Committee in similar cases relating to concerns engaged in a like or similar business, the demand for and production of such articles of manufacture were greatly increased by the entrance of the United States into the World War, with a corresponding increase in the profits derived from their larger manufacture and sale.

The taxpayer's return for 1916, the year just preceding that during which the United States entered the war, shows gross sales amounting to 104½ dollars, its 1917 return shows this item increased to 142½ dollars, and its 1918 return to 191½ dollars. The taxpayer was engaged in the same trade or business during the years 1917 and 1918, as it was for many years previous. It has not been shown that any great amount of its capital, if any, remained unproductively employed through a period of years, nor that any asset in which any of its capital was invested remained inactive through such a period. Under the circumstances the realization of greater profits in 1917 and 1918 than in prior years does not indicate to this Committee the existence of any abnormal condition. As a matter of fact the failure of the taxpayer to realize greater profits in 1917 and 1918, in view of the greater volume of business transacted would more clearly indicate the existence of such a condition.

In view of the foregoing, the Committee recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying to the M Company assessment of profits tax for the year 1917 under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and for the year 1918 under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be sustained.

THE REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing a deduction of 15x dollars claimed for the year 1917 on account of depreciation in the value of liquor license be sustained, and that the corporation be granted assessment of excess profits tax for the year 1917 under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company for the allowance of a deduction of 15x dollars for the year 1917 to cover depreciation in the value of a liquor license and for the assessment of excess profits tax for that year under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

The records in the case show that A, from 1905 until his death in 1913, conducted a wholesale and retail liquor business. After his death, B, his sole legatee, continued the business until November, 1913, and then incorporated the same under the name of the M Company with an authorized capital stock issue of 50x dollars, which stock she accepted in exchange for all the fixtures, leases, stock in trade, etc., of the business, said to have been appraised at about the time of the incorporation as having a value of 200x dollars. In an affidavit dated January, 1921, one E states that he was associated with A from 1905 until 1910 as manager of the latter's store, that he had access to A's books of account from 1905 to 1913 and knew fully the extent of the said business and the profits derived therefrom during such time. E further states that in 1910, when he left A's employ, the latter had approximately 150x dollars invested in the business, that subsequent to 1910 and until the death of A in 1913, the latter's capital investment had increased approximately 25 per cent and that the yearly profits from the business from 1905 to 1913 were equal to 50 per cent or better on the invested capital; and he expressed the belief that at the time B incorporated the business its assets were worth in excess of 150x dollars.

In February, 1915, B disposed of all her stock in the M Company to one C, at a price which is not stated, and he managed and controlled the business until June, 1915, when he disposed of all its capital stock to D and E for 175x dollars. In determining the amount to be paid for the capital stock D and E appraised the assets of the business back of the capital stock to be worth the following amounts:

Bills and accounts receivable.....	42¼x dollars.
Fixtures and furnishings.....	34½x dollars.
Merchandise.....	83¼x dollars.
Liquor license.....	15x dollars.
	175x dollars.

In the merchandise account was included the actual cash surrender value of the liquor license under which the business was operated, or 3½x dollars, which license had been taken out September, 1914, at a cost of 10x dollars to run for one year. The additional value of 15x dollars placed upon this license was its estimated selling value over its cash surrender value at the time the capital stock of the corporation was purchased from C. At that time local laws restricted the number of licenses that could be outstanding and operative in the city. Each license was for the operation of a liquor business at a certain specified street address and was renewable from year to year. It could not be transferred to another address but was transferable from one holder to another. This created a ready market for each such license outstanding and license sales were being made at from 15x dollars to 30x dollars over and above the cash surrender value of the license. Immediately after their purchase of the capital stock of the M Company D and E installed a new set of corporate books and in opening same they had set up a license account showing a value of 15x dollars. In 1917, due to the enactment of prohibition laws, it was considered that this license right had become worthless and the item of 15x dollars was charged off as a loss and claimed as a deduction against gross income for that year, which deduction was disallowed by the Income Tax Unit.

In the opinion of the Committee the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing the said deduction of 15x dollars should be sustained for the following reasons: The transaction in which B sold her holding of capital stock in the M Company to C was a transaction solely between two individuals and not one between an individual and a corporation. It resulted in the sale of the said capital stock and not in a sale of the corporation's assets. It was a transaction to which the corporation itself was not a party. The same is true of the transaction in which C sold the same stock to D and E. The latter paid 175x dollars for the capital stock of the M Company. They did not purchase that corporation's assets as such and neither transaction effected any change in the corporation's invested capital. The only amount the corporation ever had invested in the license was the amount paid therefor, or 10x dollars, and inasmuch as that license was taken out September, 1914, and ran for only one year, the corporation was entitled to claim the proportionate part of that amount properly chargeable to the period September to December 31, 1914, as an expense deduction for the year 1914 and the balance as a deduction for the succeeding year. In a similar manner the amount paid for a renewal of the license in 1915, 1916, and 1917 could have been and probably was claimed as a deduction. Even though the license had been regarded as a capital asset and not as an expense deduction, appreciation in its value over cost was not properly returnable as income for tax purposes nor allowable as a deduction when wiped out by subsequent events.

The Revenue Act of 1917 provides that if the Secretary of the Treasury is unable in any case to satisfactorily determine the invested capital the provisions of section 210 of that Act shall apply. The taxpayer in the instant case claims assessment under that section, and, in the opinion of the Committee, that claim should be granted. It appears clear from the records in the case that at the time the business of A was incorporated the assets transferred in exchange for capital stock of the par value of 50x dollars were worth approximately 150x dollars or more. B when selling her stock retained the books of the corporation and has since refused to surrender them. C, as sole owner of the corporation's capital stock, apparently conducted the business more or less as his own individual business and kept very incomplete corporate records. When disposing of his stock in the corporation to D and E, he turned over to them the corporation's stock book, stock ledger, and corporate seal, and a statement showing the names of the corporation's debtors and creditors and the amounts due and payable. None of the account books, with the exception of a cash book, were turned over to the purchasers of the stock, and the corporation is not now in possession of sufficient records to clearly establish its statutory invested capital.

The Unit in its final audit of the appellant company's return for 1917, established a statutory invested capital as of the beginning of that year on the following basis:

Capital stock.....	50x dollars.
Surplus (undivided profits).....	85x dollars.
	<hr/>
	135x dollars.
Less 1916 income tax prorated.....	x dollars.
	<hr/>
Adjusted invested capital.....	134x dollars.

No consideration was given to the fact that at the time the business was incorporated the value of the assets taken over by the corporation in exchange for its stock was greater than the par value of the stock issued therefor.

Article 63 of Regulations 41 provides that—

Where it can be shown by evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that tangible property has been conveyed to a corporation or partnership by gift or at a value, accurately ascertainable or definitely known as at the date of the conveyance, clearly and substantially in excess of the cash or the par value of the stock or shares paid therefor, then the amount of the excess shall be deemed to be paid in surplus. * * *

It is clearly evident from the records in the case that tangible property of a value substantially in excess of the par value of the stock paid therefor was conveyed by B to the M Company and that the corporation would be entitled to an allowance of paid-in surplus if it were now in possession of records showing the actual cash value of the tangible property at the time of conveyance. However, such records are not now available nor are there any records available from which a complete history of the corporation's invested capital from time of incorporation to the beginning of 1917 may be obtained and the amount of statutory invested capital allowable to the corporation for that year clearly established.

In view of the foregoing the Committee recommends that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing a deduction of 15x dollars claimed by the M Company for the year 1917 to cover depreciation in the value of liquor license be sustained, and that the corporation be granted assessment of excess profits tax for the year 1917 under the provisions of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Revenue Act of 1918.

1. The phrase "abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation" is defined to include the following: (a) Where a corporation is placed in a position of substantial inequality because of the time or manner of organization; (b) where the capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small, or in large part borrowed; (c) where there is excluded from invested capital under section 326 intangible assets of recognized value and substantial in amount which have been developed by the taxpayer (in view of the specific limitations upon the admission of intangibles into invested capital contained in sec. 326 of the Act applications for assessments under sec. 328 upon this ground should be carefully scrutinized and the application denied where its allowance would result in defeating the avowed purpose of the limitations contained in sec. 326); (d) where the net income for the year is abnormally high, due to realization in one year of income earned during a period of years; (e) where extraordinary gains are derived from the sale of property where its principal value has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration; and (f) where proper recognition can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the World War.

2. Where application is made under section 327(d) for assessment under section 328 of the Act of 1918, the abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the taxpayer must be established by proof. Abnormal conditions affecting capital or income in the present case have been established.

Supplementary Bulletin Rulings.

3. The term "exceptional hardships," as used in section 327(d) of the Revenue Act of 1918, means the hardship of inequality evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without the benefit of sections 327 and 328 and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328, but inequality alone is not sufficient to grant relief under section 328; the inequality must be due to abnormal conditions affecting capital or income.

4. In selecting corporations with which to compare the taxpayer in a given case, great care should be exercised, and only corporations which are truly representative should be used. The word "representative," as used in the Act, means "typical" or "symbolical," and the Act requires the comparatives used to be typical as near as may be in respect to capital employed, gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted, amount and rate of war and excess profits tax, and all other relevant facts and circumstances. The corporations used as comparatives must not only be in the same general line of business, but as nearly as possible representative in all the particulars mentioned in the Act. In the present case, comparatives Nos. 1 and 2 are not representative within the meaning of section 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918. Their use in this case creates and does not correct an inequality.

Reference is made to the claim filed by the M Company for the abatement of  $71\frac{1}{3}\%$  dollars excess profits taxes for the year 1918. The claim is based upon the application for assessment under sections 327 and 328 of the Act of 1918. The Unit allowed relief under the above sections, and after selecting comparatives provided for in the last paragraph of section 328, computed the tax thereunder and found the corporation entitled to an abatement in the sum of  $71\frac{1}{3}\%$  dollars and, in addition thereto, has suggested a refund of  $40\%$  dollars of the taxes already paid.

The question is whether the corporation is entitled to relief under these sections, and, if so, whether the proper comparatives have been used in computing the tax.

The M Company appears to have begun business about 1901 and to have organized under its present name in 1905 with a cash capital of  $60\%$  dollars. In 1909 it took over the assets of the O Company and the P Company and increased its capital stock to  $600\%$  dollars. Under the plan of reorganization the par value of the stock was \$100, and  $15\frac{3}{4}\%$  shares appear to have been issued for tangible assets and  $14\frac{1}{4}\%$  shares for intangible assets, making the total outstanding shares  $30\%$ .

In its early years and up until 1916 this corporation's earnings were small, and it was its policy to reinvest its earnings and surplus in plant property. From 1917 on its earnings have been very large, due no doubt in large part to war conditions. In 1918 its invested capital was over  $1,200\%$  dollars and its net income approximately  $700\%$  dollars.

Over  $200\%$  dollars written up on the books as good will has been disallowed as invested capital, and the company bases its claim for relief under sections 327 and 328 on the fact that it has spent large sums in experimental work, and that as a result thereof it has developed secret formulas for the manufacture of . . . , which gives it a practical monopoly in certain kinds of . . . . That none of the amounts spent in experimental and discovery work has been capitalized, and it now has valuable intangible property which is not shown in its invested capital, which by the proper method of bookkeeping should be so included, and that by reason thereof it is subject to an exceptional hardship when compared with other corporations in its class which have capitalized such expenditures.

In order to determine whether or not the corporation in question is entitled to relief under section 327 and 328 of the Act of 1918, and if so whether the proper comparatives have been used, it is necessary to refer to the Act and its history and examine the case and the comparatives used in the light of the language of the Act. The sections of the Act in so far as material are as follows:

Sec. 327. That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

(a) Where the Commissioner is unable to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the Commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

(d) Where upon application by the corporation the Commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax is determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profits upon a normal invested capital, nor (2) in which 50 per centum or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under section 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

Sec. 328. (a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year, as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In the case of a foreign corporation the tax shall be computed without deducting the specific exemption of $3,000 either for the taxpayer or the representative corporations.

In computing the tax under this section the Commissioner shall compare the taxpayer only with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326 and which are, as nearly as may be, similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

The provisions of the bill as first introduced in the House of Representatives were very different from the Act as it finally passed. Section 327 as originally introduced was as follows:

(a) That in the following cases the invested capital shall be determined as provided in subdivision (b) of this section; (1) where the Commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326; or (2) where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the Commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively; or (3) where capital is a material income-producing factor, but where, because of the fact that the capital employed is in large part borrowed, there is no invested capital or the invested capital is materially disproportionate to the net income as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business. This section shall not apply in the case of a corporation 50 per centum or more of whose gross income (as defined in section 213 for income tax purposes) consists of gain, profits or commissions derived from Government contracts, unless the Commissioner is satisfied that such corporation is overcapitalized.

(b) In the cases specified in subdivision (a) the invested capital shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the corporation for the taxable year as the average invested capital for the taxable year of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income for such year.

After much discussion, the bill was amended, passed the House, and was transferred to the Senate. When section 327 passed the Senate it read as follows:

That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

(a) Where the Commissioner is unable (satisfactorily) to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the Commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

(d) Where, as compared with representative corporations, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, the taxpayer would (under section 326) be placed in a position of substantial inequality, because of the time or manner of organization, or because the actual value of the assets on March 1, 1913, was substantially in excess of the amount at which such assets would be valued for the purpose of computing invested capital under the provisions of section 326;

(e) Where the invested capital is materially disproportionate to the net income as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business because:

1. The capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small or is in large part borrowed;

2. There are excluded from the invested capital as computed under the provisions of section 326, intangible assets of recognized and substantial value built up or developed by the taxpayer;

3. The net income for the taxable year is abnormally high due to the realization in one year of (a) gains, profits, or income earned or accrued during a period of years, or (b) extraordinary gains or profits derived from the sale of property the principal value of which has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer. When the tax is determined under this paragraph proper allowance shall be made for the taxes which would have been payable in prior years if the gains, profits, or income earned or accrued in such years has been taxed at the rates then applicable;

4. Proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the present war, or to the necessity in connection with the present war of providing plant which will not be wanted for the purpose of the trade or business after the termination of the war.

In the conference committee, composed of House and Senate members, the section was again very materially altered, and was finally passed in the form in which it is now contained in the Act.

Mr. Kitchin, who was in charge of the bill in the House and who was a member of the committee composed of House and Senate members, in his report from the committee to the House referred to the changes made in the Senate and in the conference committee as follows:

The House bill in the so-called relief provisions provided that in certain specified cases the invested capital of a corporation shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the corporation for the taxable year as the average invested capital for the taxable year of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income for such year.

The Senate amendment increases the classes of cases in which the tax is to be fixed by reference to the experience of representative corporations; included therein all foreign corporations, and provides that in such cases the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income for such years.

The House recedes with amendments:

(1) Making clerical changes;

(2) *Consolidating a number of separate classes of cases differentiated in the Senate amendment into a single class of cases in which upon application by the corporation * * ** and continues in the same language of the Act.

Mr. Kitchin later, in a speech before the House, stated what the committee intended by the use of the language used in section 327. After reading paragraph (d) of section 327, he proceeded as follows:

The bill provides that in the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be an amount which bears the same proportion to the net income of the taxpayer, in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000, for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income, in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000 for such year. Under the specific provisions no official had any particular responsibility, and one could take any case he desired, whether it was an exceptional hardship or not, and make application that the tax should be computed on the basis of representative corporations.

The conferees, as I said a while ago, as a matter of safety to the Government, without doing any injustice to the taxpayer, in case he is actually entitled to relief, provide that the taxpayer, in order to get relief under this representative corporation section, must apply to the Commissioner and must show to the Commissioner that it is an exceptional hardship; not that he is making an exceedingly large profit on invested capital and therefore his tax is exceedingly large, but it must be an exceptional hardship owing to the peculiar and exceptional conditions surrounding the taxpayer's business, income, invested capital, and so forth; and the Commissioner must find, and so declare of record, that the case is one of exceptional hardship before it can be considered under section 328.

This provision gives a taxpayer only that to which he is entitled, because he ought not to have relief unless, owing to the peculiar situation of his business or capital or income or something, the payment of the tax would be an exceptional hardship upon him without the benefit of the relief provision.

This language leaves a very vague and indefinite idea in the mind as to what was intended by "abnormal condition" but it is a very definite statement that no relief is to be given under the section unless there is "exceptional hardship." The language indicates also that it is not an "exceedingly large tax" to be paid upon "exceedingly large profits" which gives the taxpayer right to relief under the section, but "exceptional hardship" due "to the peculiar situation" of the "business or capital or income or something" so that "the payment of the tax would be an exceptional hardship * * * without the benefit of this section."

Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, who was in charge of the bill in the Senate, in his speech on Tuesday, December 10, 1918, Congressional Record, page 529, had the following to say in connection with relief measures:

We have also recommended a series of relief amendments relating to amortization, depletion, and shrinkage in inventories, which, if ratified by the Senate and not eliminated in conference, I think will answer to a very large extent the criticisms of the present law and correct many discriminations and inequalities which have confronted the department in the administration of the existing law. In addition, the committee has prepared a general amendment which we have been in the habit in the committee of speaking of as the relief amendment, authorizing the Commissioner to classify in groups certain exceptional cases which seemed to require special treatment to safeguard the taxpayer against injustice. Every corporation which brings itself within the provisions of these classifications is given the benefit, in computing its deductions, of the like or "similar business" section of the bill; that is to say, it will be entitled to the same percentage of deductions that representative concerns in the same line of business are found to be entitled to.

Senator Penrose, in a speech delivered Wednesday, February 12, 1919, after the meeting of the conferees of the Senate and House, made the following statement in connection with the relief provisions:

A similar change was made in the conference in connection with the war profits credit or deduction for new corporations; that is, corporations organized after January 1, 1913. The House gave new corporations a deduction of 10 per cent of their invested capital for the taxable year. The Senate liberalized this and made the deduction of new corporations the same percentage of their invested capital for the taxable year as was earned by corporations in the same general class of trade or business during the prewar period. The conferees adopted the Senate method, but excepted newly organized subsidiaries and corporations whose principal income is derived from war contracts. Similar action was taken with respect to the so-called relief provisions, which permit the profits tax in any case of exceptional hardship to be fixed by reference to the experience of representative concerns. This amendment, to my mind, is a most admirable one. The Senate greatly increased the classes of cases entitled to this relief. The conferees amalgamated all these classes into a single general class, but denied the relief to corporations whose principal income consists of profits derived on a cost-plus basis from war contracts. Relief also was granted to certain partnerships doing business with invested capital which reorganize as corporations prior to July 1, 1919. Such partnerships are authorized to pay income taxes, profits taxes, and capital-stock taxes for 1918 as corporations in lieu of the income taxes to which, under existing law, the members of the partnership would be liable. This extends immediate relief to a class of partnerships in which the exigencies of business require most of the profits to be reinvested and which, under existing law, have been taxed much more severely than their competitors organized in the corporate form.

This amendment, Mr. President, put into the bill at the last hour, furnishes, in my opinion, a striking illustration of the relief provisions abounding in the measure. There was a particular case, typical of many others, in which it was discovered that some seven or eight hundred thousand dollars of taxes would have had to have been paid by a certain partnership in excess of that required under the corporate form, thereby involving a most rank and indefensible discrimination between one concern as a partnership and, perchance, a competitor as a corporation. This amendment was put in giving such a partnership the option of becoming incorporated and paying the profits taxes as a corporation. I only refer to this as a fine illustration, to my mind, of very many similar provisions put in the bill to correct inequalities; not put in to favor any individual, but to relieve the hardship of inequality which the legislator can not defend or explain to the injured taxpayer.

The above-quoted statements indicate that Congress intended to retain the relief provisions of the Senate in the bill as finally passed, but that it intended to consolidate all the provisions into one general class. The Senate greatly increased the classes of cases entitled to this relief, and the conferees amalgamated all these classes into a single general class. A better idea may be gained of the relief intended, therefore, when a comparison is made of the bill as it passed the House, as it passed the Senate, and as it finally passed after conference. If all the classes of cases which were embodied in the bill as it passed the Senate were "amalgamated" or "consolidated" into one general class, we receive some idea of what was intended by the use of the phrase "abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation" by referring to the bill as it passed the Senate. By this reference the phrase may be defined to include the following: (a) Where a corporation is placed in a position of substantial inequality because of the time or manner of organization; (b) where the capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small or in large part borrowed; (c) where there is excluded from invested capital under section 326 intangible assets of recognized and substantial value developed by the taxpayer (in view of the specific limitations placed upon the admission of intangibles into invested capital contained in section 326 of the Act, applications for assessment under 328 for this reason should be closely scrutinized and the application denied where allowance of the application would result in defeating the avowed purpose of the limitations contained in sec. 326); (d) where the net income for the year is abnormally high, due to realization in one year of income earned during a period of years; (e) where extraordinary gains are derived from the sale of property where its principal value has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration; and (f) where proper recognition can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the World War. One other, "where the invested capital is materially disproportionate to the net income," was included in the Senate bill but was excluded by the conferees by the use of the following: "This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital." This provision was inserted in the Act by the conferees and was evidently for the purpose of restricting the section to a smaller class of cases, because without this provision the Act as amended in the Senate would clearly have applied to such a case.

The phrase "exceptional hardship" is defined in the above quotations more clearly than the provision as to "abnormal conditions." Senator Simmons, in speaking of "certain exceptional cases," used the words "to safeguard the taxpayer against injustice," and Senator Penrose in speaking of the relief provisions in the bill used more emphatic language, such as "to correst inequalities” and “most rank and indefensible discrimination,” and directly defines what he means by “exceptional hardship” as the “hardship of inequality which the legislator can not defend or explain to the injured taxpayer.” The plan evidently was to give the Commissioner the power to administer the excess profits tax law with as few inequalities as possible to taxpayers falling in the same class. If, due to abnormal conditions, an exceptional hardship of inequality appears to have been imposed upon any taxpayer by computing its invested capital under section 326, such taxpayer has the right to appeal to the Commissioner and show that it is having to pay a higher rate of tax than other corporations which are similarly circumstanced and ask that it be allowed to pay a tax equal to the average rate of tax paid by other corporations which are in its class and similarly circumstanced. Such a taxpayer, to be entitled to the provisions of section 328, must be able to show that when compared to other corporations which are similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the rate of war profits or excess profits tax imposed upon it is higher than the rate imposed upon such other corporations. However, when it has shown the inequality, before it is entitled to the relief sought it must go further and show that the inequality is due not merely to large profits earned upon a normal capital, but to abnormal conditions affecting its income or invested capital.

The thought in the minds of those in charge of the bill was centered upon preventing inequalities and unjust discriminations. If the corporation's tax is high merely because it made large profits upon a normal invested capital, no relief is to be granted. If, however, owing to some abnormal condition affecting its business it is compelled to pay a higher rate of tax than other corporations in its class, then it may show that it is under the “hardship of inequality” and gain relief under sections 327 and 328. The power placed in the hands of the Commissioner is first to determine whether the “hardship of inequality” exists, and if it does and it is due to abnormal conditions, he is to average the taxpayer's tax with comparatives selected according to the Act.

Manifestly, if the discriminations referred to in the debates are to be avoided, the greatest care should be exercised in selecting the comparatives. It is easy, without effort or intent, to select comparatives so differently circumstanced as to cause rather than correct glaring inequalities between taxpayers of the same class. Granting one taxpayer relief under section 328 and comparing it with corporations which are not similarly circumstanced in all of the particulars mentioned in the Act, and giving it a lower rate of tax than corporations so circumstanced, is creating, not correcting, the “hardship of inequality.” Congress has provided that the comparatives shall be representative corporations similarly circumstanced as to gross income, net income, and profits per unit of business transacted, “the amount and rate of excess profits and capital employed and all other relevant facts and circumstances,” and that the taxpayer seeking such relief shall be compared only with such representative corporations. The term “capital employed” as used in section 328, as applied to the taxpayer, means total capital employed as distinguished from statutory invested capital. The word “representative,” as used in this section, means “typical” or “symbolical,” and the Act requires that the comparatives used be as nearly as possible representative in all the particulars mentioned therein, and where it is not possible to find comparatives which are representative in all the particulars named in the Act it should be kept in mind that the intention of Congress was to equalize taxes rather than reduce any particular taxpayer's taxes.

It does not appear to this office that the comparatives used in the present case meet with the requirements of the Act. Comparatives 3, 4, 5, and 6 appear to have been well taken. These comparatives are all located in . . . . ., their capital employed is very nearly the capital of the claimant, and while their gross sales are less, their net income compares favorably with that of the taxpayer. Their ordinary expense accounts, repairs, interest and taxes, and rate of excess profits compare favorably with the taxpayer's. The taxpayer's rate of tax computed under section 326 is a little higher than any one of them, but the tax rate of three of these comparatives ranges from . . . . . per cent to . . . . . per cent. The other one is below . . . . . per cent. The taxpayer's rate is . . . . . per cent.

Comparatives 1 and 2, however, do not compare with the taxpayer in hardly any particular, and are so unlike the taxpayer that the impression might be gained that they have been used for no other purpose than to reduce the taxpayer's rate of tax. Their invested capital is approximately four times as large as the invested capital of the taxpayer; their gross income is nearly twice as much; and their expense accounts compare in no particular favorably with the taxpayer. The item of repairs alone should cause these comparatives to be closely scrutinized. The taxpayer's repairs are considerably less than 200x dollars. Each of the repair accounts of comparatives 1 and 2 is nearly 700x dollars, or over three times as much as the taxpayer's. Their taxes and interest accounts are much larger, and in comparative 2 nearly thirty times as large as the taxpayer's. Their excess profits tax rate is only one-third to one-half as high as the other comparatives. They are not similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted, as to capital employed, as to the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, nor in any other particular. They produce, and do not correct, an inequality. When used in this case, they reduce the taxpayer's rate of tax to . . . . . per cent, while the comparatives which are similarly circumstanced to the taxpayer must pay their taxes at rates ranging from . . . . . per cent to . . . . . per cent.

Senator Smoot, when he was speaking on the subject on the floor of the Senate, December 14, 1918 (Congressional Record, p. 666), foresaw what might happen if these sections were not administered with great care, and said:

Mr. President, those are the relief provisions as provided in the bill. Some of them are very sweeping in their scope, and if not administered by the department in absolute fairness will work an unjust discrimination against the business of the country. I want Senators to know that in these provisions there is placed in the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, a power that has never been granted to department officials before. If exercised wisely it will be a relief to the institutions of the country, and many of them will need it, but if exercised unjustly or unwisely there will be a frightful discrimination between business concerns and industries of the country.

From the foregoing it follows that the taxpayer in this case has established an abnormal condition within the meaning of section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918 by showing that it has developed in connection with its business intangible assets of recognized value and substantial in amount which are excluded from its invested capital under section 326 of the Act, and is therefore entitled to relief under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918, if comparatives selected in accordance with the provisions of section 328 show the existence of an exceptional hardship as defined herein; that comparatives Nos. 1 and 2 should be eliminated from the comparative data and other comparatives selected which meet the requirements of the Act.

CARL A. MAPES,
Solicitor of Internal Revenue.

I('22)-14-205: A. R. R. 845

Revenue Act of 1918—Sections 327 and 328.

Recommended, in the appeal of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying assessment under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be affirmed, and, accordingly, that the appeal of the taxpayer be denied.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying application for assessment of the 1919 tax under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

The attorneys for the taxpayer contend that the contracts entered into between the M Company and the United States Government are not "cost plus" contracts within the meaning of that term as used in section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

Inasmuch as the question presented is one of law rather than of fact, the entire file was referred to the Solicitor with request for an opinion. Under date of February 2, 1922, the Committee is in receipt of an opinion from the Solicitor, which reads as follows:

The pertinent provisions of the contract may be summarized as follows:

1. The contractor agreed to construct for the United States a manufacturing plant to consist of nine sections of the aggregate capacity of  $y$  pounds per day of 24 hours, capable of being operated for 27 days per month. The total cost was estimated at  $75x$  dollars. The United States agreed to reimburse the contractor for all costs and expenses of every character and description incurred or made in connection with the construction and equipment of the plant.

2. The contractor agreed upon the completion of each section of the plant to operate it and to do all things necessary or convenient in this connection, including the purchase and procurement of all necessary materials and labor therefor. The United States agreed to bear all the cost and expenditures of every character and description incurred or made in connection with the operation of the plant or any part thereof. In addition to reimbursement by the United States for all costs and expenditures incurred in operating the plant, or any part thereof, it was agreed that the United States should pay the contractor  $z$  cents per pound for each and every pound of the product delivered and accepted under the contract; and in addition thereto, one-half of the difference, if any, between the estimated cost of producing each pound, determined in accordance with the provisions of the contract, and the actual cost of production, as ascertained in paragraph (a) of such article, where such actual cost was less than the estimated cost so determined.

It will be noted that there was to be paid to the contractor as a guaranteed fixed profit  $z$  cents per pound for the product delivered and accepted and that reimbursement was to be made by the United States to the contractor for "all costs and expenditures of every character and description."

For the purpose of determining the amount of additional compensation, if any, to be paid over and above the guaranteed profit of  $z$  cents per pound of the product delivered and accepted, one article sets forth an estimated price list per pound of five component materials. Upon the basis of this price list estimated base prices per pound were fixed for five grades of the product to be manufactured under the contract (that is, an estimated cost of manufacturing a pound of product of the respective grades). Of the several grades specified only one grade has been manufactured at the time of the suspension of work under the contract after the signing of the armistice, of which approximately  $39\frac{1}{2}y$  pounds were manufactured. The estimated price of this grade was originally fixed at  $12.7z$  cents per pound. It was provided, however, that if the cost of any of the component materials should so change as to increase or decrease the actual cost of the product, then the estimated price per pound should be increased or decreased accordingly. As stated, this estimated price was fixed only for the purpose of measuring the additional profit to be paid to the contractor, if it should be able to produce the product at an actual cost less than the estimated price so fixed.

Paragraph (a) of article — provided that the actual cost per pound of the product should be all the costs and expenditures incurred or made in operation, excluding, however, (1) the cost of placing finished product in storehouses, (2) the cost of boxes, and (3) the expense of maintaining guards at the plant. These latter costs, although not included in the computation for ascertaining the actual cost of the product for the purpose stated, were nevertheless a part of the actual cost of operation to be borne by the Government.

In the actual working out of the contract it was necessary to make an adjustment of the estimated price of 12.7% cents per pound for the product delivered and accepted, because the contractor was compelled to pay higher prices for certain component materials than the estimated prices specified therefor. The estimated price was, therefore, increased to approximately 13.1% cents per pound. The actual cost per pound of the product manufactured was 11.6% cents per pound, resulting in a so-called saving of 1.5% cents per pound under the readjusted base price of 13.1% cents per pound. The actual cost of producing such product upon this basis was approximately  $1\frac{3}{4}\%$  dollars less than the estimated cost upon the basis of the readjusted estimated base price per pound. Pursuant to the terms of the contract, the contractor became entitled thereby to one-half of the so-called saving, or  $\frac{3}{8}\%$  dollars, which, as stated, was in addition to the guaranteed profit of  $\frac{1}{2}\%$  cents per pound for each pound of the product delivered and accepted.

The taxpayer has applied for the assessment of its 1919 taxes under section 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918. Section 327 of the Revenue Act of 1918 provides in part as follows: "Sec. 327. That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

(d) Where upon application by the corporation the Commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without the benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case * * * (2) in which 50 per centum of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under section 233 of Title II) consists of gains, profits, commissions or other income derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive."

The contract in question was made on March —, 1918, and is within the time prescribed by clause (2) of subdivision (d) of the section quoted.

The question for determination is whether the income from the product manufactured under the contract here in question is derived on a cost plus basis. Words in a statute are to be construed in their ordinary and generally accepted sense, unless the context in which they are used implies that a different meaning was intended. On behalf of the taxpayer it has been contended that the phrase is equivalent in meaning to the phrase "income derived on a cost basis," that is to say that income derived on a cost basis must bear some relation to total cost, the amount thereof being arrived at by a computation based upon the amount of such total cost. In other words, that cost is the measure of income derived, computed at some rate upon the basis of the total cost. It has, therefore, been contended that the application of the phrase "income derived on a cost-plus basis" must be limited to income derived upon a cost plus a percentage basis from a Government contract within the time prescribed by the statute.

In my opinion "income derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract" means simply income derived from such a contract wherein the method of compensating the contractor is by way of reimbursing him the total actual cost of the work done or the article furnished and the payment to such contractor in addition thereto of a guaranteed profit, consisting either of (1) a fixed percentage of total cost, (2) a fixed profit of a definite sum agreed upon at the time of the closing of the contract, or (3) such fixed profit of a definite sum plus a percentage of any so-called saving effected by the contractor by the doing of such work or the production of such article at a cost below an agreed estimated cost of production fixed at the time of the closing of the contract. In common usage the term "cost-plus basis" has been used merely as a means of distinction from the term "lump-sum basis," which is a method of compensation whereby the parties agree that the contractor will do certain work at an agreed total cost to the owner of a lump or fixed sum fixed at the time of the closing of the contract. See Kester, "Accounting, Theory and Practice," volume 3, pages 318 and 319. See also Crowell, "Government War Contracts," volume 25, "Preliminary Economic Studies of the War," published by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. In prewar days the "cost-plus basis" of contracting was used in order to assure good workmanship and good materials in connection with building contracts and to prevent the restricting of costs by the contractor. It consisted simply of the assumption of costs by the owner and the payment of a fee as the contractor's compensation, determined in either of the three ways mentioned above. During the recent war it was used in Government war contracting where speed and a quantity production were required and where there were no ready estimates at hand to enable the parties to fix a lump-sum contract-price. It was also used in letting contracts to some contractors of proven ability, but who could not finance operations upon as large a scale as the Government required. The "cost-plus basis" of contracting has, therefore, been used as indicating a method of making compensation rather than as a basis for the determination of the amount of compensation to be paid. Such compensation may or may not be computed upon the basis of or in direct relation to cost, but in either case it satisfies the term "plus." This interpretation appears to be in accord with the common understanding of the term "cost-plus basis" by the governmental departments charged with war contracting, as appears from the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Cost Conference held on July 31, 1917. (See full reprint of such recommendations in Nicholson & Rohrbach on Cost Accounting, p. 488, et seq.) Accordingly, this office holds that the "cost-plus basis" of contracting within the meaning of the statute applies to those cases wherein the contractor is to be reimbursed the actual cost of operations and is to be paid in addition (or "plus") an assured profit, determined by any of the methods above mentioned, whereby the burden of the cost of production is put upon the Government.

As appears above, the method of compensation agreed upon by the parties to the contract here considered consisted of a reimbursement to the contractor of its total actual cost of operations and the payment in addition thereto of a fixed profit of a definite sum for each and every pound of product delivered and accepted, with a provision for the payment of an additional profit of 50 per cent of a so-called saving in case the contractor produced the product at an actual cost of production in an amount less than the estimated cost of production as determined under the contract. Income derived upon this basis or method of compensation is "income derived on a cost-plus basis."

In view of the foregoing opinion of the Solicitor, in which the Committee concurs, it is recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit in rejecting the corporation's application for assessment of the profits tax for 1919 under the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be affirmed, and accordingly that the appeal of the taxpayer be denied, inasmuch as 50 per cent or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

Excess-Profits Tax—Sections 327 and 328, Revenue Act of 1918.

1. The phrase "abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation" includes the following cases, among others: (a) Where a corporation is placed in a position of substantial inequality because of the time or manner of organization; (b) where the capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small or is in a large part borrowed; (c) where there are excluded from invested capital computed under section 326 intangible assets of recognized value and substantial in amount, built up or developed by the taxpayer; (d) where the net income for the year is abnormally high, due to the realization in one year of (1) income earned during a period of years, or (2) extraordinary profit derived from the sale of property the principal value of which has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, or (3) gain derived in one year from the sale of property the increase in value of which had accrued over a period of years; (e) where proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the World War.

2. Where application is made under section 327(d) for assessment under section 328 of the Act of 1918, the abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the taxpayer must be established by evidence. Abnormal conditions affecting capital or income in the present case have been established.

3. The term "exceptional hardship," as used in section 327(d) of the Revenue Act of 1918, means the hardship of inequality evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without the benefits of sections 327 and 328 and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328, but inequality alone is not sufficient to entitle a taxpayer to assessment under section 328; the inequality must be due to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income.

4. In selecting corporations with which to compare the taxpayer in a given case, great care should be exercised and only corporations which are truly representative should be used. The word "representative," as used in the Act, means "typical" or "average," and the Act requires the comparatives used to be representative and to be similarly circumstanced as nearly as may be in respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances. The corporations used as comparatives must not only be engaged in a like or similar trade or business, but as nearly as possible similarly circumstanced in all the particulars mentioned in the Act. In the present case the comparatives selected comply with the provisions of the statute.

5. Law Opinion 1090 (C. B. I-1, p. 383) [Sec. 327. Art. 901-31, herein] is hereby revoked.

Due to the difficulty which has been experienced in interpreting and applying Law Opinion 1090, it appears advisable to reconsider that opinion. Furthermore, it is necessary to give further consideration to the question of what constitutes proper comparatives for the M Company, the case which was under consideration in Law Opinion 1090.

The facts in the case of the M Company are as follows:

The M Company appears to have begun business about 1901 and to have organized under its present name in 1905, with a cash capital of 60x dollars. In 1909 it took over the assets of the O Company and the P Company and increased its capital stock to 600x dollars. Under the reorganization, 15 $\frac{3}{4}$ y shares of stock of the par value of \$100 were issued for tangible assets, and 14 $\frac{1}{4}$ y shares of the same par value for intangible assets. Until 1916 the corporation's earnings were small, and it was its policy to reinvest its earnings and surplus in plant property. Since 1917 the company's earnings have been very large, due, no doubt, in a large part to war conditions. In 1918, its statutory invested capital was over \$1200x dollars and its net income approximately 700x dollars.

The company has made claim for the abatement of 71.3x dollars excess-profits taxes for the year 1918, the claim being based upon an application for assessment under sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918. The Income Tax Unit allowed relief under the above sections and computed the tax by means of comparatives under section 328, and found the corporation entitled to an abatement in the sum of 71.3x dollars and a refund in the amount of 40x dollars.

The claim of the taxpayer for assessment under sections 327 and 328 is based on the fact that it has spent large sums in experimental work and that as a result thereof it has developed secret formulas which give it a practical monopoly in the manufacture of certain types of high-grade —; that none of the amounts spent in experimental and discovery work has been capitalized; that it now has valuable intangible property which is not reflected in its invested capital, and that by reason thereof it is subject to an exceptional hardship when compared with other corporations in its class which have capitalized such expenditures.

The question presented is whether the M Company is entitled to relief under the provisions of sections 327 and 328, and if so, whether the comparatives used in computing the tax under section 328 are proper.

The pertinent provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918 follow:

Sec. 327. That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

(a) Where the Commissioner is unable to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the Commissioner is unable to satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

(d) Where upon application by the corporation the Commissioner finds and so declares of record that the tax if determined without benefit of this section would, owing to abnormal conditions affecting the capital or income of the corporation, work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of this section and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328. This subdivision shall not apply to any case (1) in which the tax (computed without benefit of this section) is high merely because the corporation earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital, nor (2) in which

50 per centum or more of the gross income of the corporation for the taxable year (computed under section 233 of Title 11) consists of gains, profits, commissions, or other income, derived on a cost-plus basis from a Government contract or contracts made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive.

Sec. 328. (a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year, as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In the case of a foreign corporation the tax shall be computed without deducting the specific exemption of $3,000 either for the taxpayer or the representative corporations.

In computing the tax under this section the Commissioner shall compare the taxpayer only with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326 and which are, as nearly as may be, similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

While it is manifestly impossible to enumerate all the classes of cases in which there exists an abnormality affecting the capital or income of a corporation which may entitle the corporation to assessment under section 328, it is thought advisable to set out some of the more usual conditions or circumstances which result in such an abnormality as may form the basis for assessment under that section. The following enumeration is by no means an exclusive one; no attempt is made to enumerate all the conditions or circumstances which result in an abnormality under the statute. However, a statement of the typical and usual cases in which an abnormality exists affecting income or capital is of value in that it shows the type of cases contemplated by the statute and answers some of the questions which most often arise regarding the construction and application of the section of the statute. It should be borne in mind, however, in determining a specific case whether there exists such an abnormality as to entitle the corporation to assessment under section 328, that sections 327 and 328 are obviously relief sections and should be construed and applied so as to carry into effect the clear intention of Congress.

It is my opinion that the following represent the typical and common cases in which there is present an abnormal condition affecting capital or income of a corporation: (1) Where a corporation is placed in a position of substantial inequality because of the time or manner of organization; (2) where the capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small or is in a large part borrowed; (3) where there are excluded from invested capital computed under section 326 intangible assets, of recognized value and substantial in amount, built up or developed by the taxpayer; (4) where the net income for the year is abnormally high, due to the realization in one year of (a) income earned during a period of years, or (b) extraordinary profit derived from the sale of property the principal value of which has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, or (c) gain derived in one year from the sale of property the increase in value of which had accrued over a period of years; and (5) where proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the World War.

The above alone, however, is not sufficient to entitle the taxpayer to the benefit of assessment under section 328. The circumstances outlined above must work upon the corporation an exceptional hardship, evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without the benefit of sections 327 and 328 and the tax computed under section 328, in order that the taxpayer may be entitled to special relief. "Exceptional hardship," which is a prerequisite to assessment under section 328, must be evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without the benefit of the relief sections and the tax computed under section 328 by a comparison with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business and similarly circumstanced with the taxpayer as nearly as may be with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

In determining whether a taxpayer is entitled to assessment under section 328 because of any of the reasons given above, the limitation contained in section 327 (d) should be constantly borne in mind. A taxpayer is not entitled to relief if its tax is high merely because it earned within the taxable year a high rate of profit upon a normal invested capital. The distinction between those cases in which the tax, computed without benefit of the relief provision, is exceptionally high because of abnormal conditions affecting invested capital or net income and those cases in which the tax is high merely because the corporation earned exceptionally high profits upon a normal invested capital, is an important one; in the first case, the corporation may be entitled to relief; in the second case, it is not entitled to relief.

Applying the above to the instant case, it is my opinion that the M Company is entitled to assessment under the provisions of section 328, since the tax, if determined without the benefit of the relief section, would, owing to the existence of an abnormal condition affecting the capital of the company, work upon the company an exceptional hardship evidenced by gross disproportion between the tax computed without benefit of the relief sections and the tax computed by reference to the representative corporations specified in section 328.

Under sections 327 and 328, where an abnormality exists affecting the net income or invested capital of the corporation, so that the corporation is entitled to special relief, the rate of tax of the corporation shall be based upon the average rate of tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business and similarly circumstanced as nearly as may be with the taxpayer. Representative corporations, within the meaning of this section, are the typical or average ones in that trade or business, as distinguished from the ones having peculiar characteristics. The intent of the section, therefore, is that the rate of tax of a corporation entitled to special relief shall be based upon the average rate of tax of the typical or average corporations in that trade or business which are similarly circumstanced, as nearly as may be, with the taxpayer. Great care should be exercised in the selection of these comparatives, because the granting of relief under Section 328 and the comparison with other corporations which are either not representative of the trade or business or not similarly circumstanced in all particulars specified in the Act, may create inequalities rather than correct them.

However, it must be recognized as a practical matter that it is not always, and in fact is seldom, possible to find comparatives representative of the trade or business which are similarly circumstanced with the taxpayer in all particulars specified in the Act. In fact, the statute expressly recognizes this fact by providing that the corporations with which the taxpayer entitled to special relief is compared must be similarly circumstanced "as nearly as may be" with respect to the various facts and circumstances specified.

These six comparatives given on the data sheet, I am advised, comprise the corporations representative of the same trade or business as the M Company, which are most similarly circumstanced with respect to the items specified in section 328, with the taxpayer. It may be noted, however, that none of these six corporations is in exactly the same position as the taxpayer. The invested capital of comparatives 1 and 2 is approximately four times as large as the invested capital of the taxpayer; their gross income is nearly twice as large; their expense accounts do not compare favorably with that of the taxpayer. The amount of gross sales of comparative 6 is less than one-half that of the taxpayer. Its cost of goods sold is less than one-third that of the taxpayer, as is its expense account; its net income is considerably less than that of the taxpayer, while the proportion of its net income to gross sales is approximately twice that of the taxpayer. Furthermore, comparatives 3, 4, and 5, as may be seen, are circumstanced in many respects quite differently from the taxpayer. Thus, none of the six comparatives which are most nearly similarly circumstanced with the taxpayer is ideal. Nevertheless, the taxpayer is entitled to relief under section 328, and corporations must be used as comparatives which are similarly circumstanced as nearly as may be with the taxpayer. The six corporations used as comparatives in this case are those, I am advised, most similarly circumstanced with the taxpayer with respect to the items specified in section 328. Furthermore, the items of some which are dissimilar to the taxpayer are balanced by the corresponding items of the other comparatives, and the correctness of the result reached by the use of these comparatives is shown by the fact that the average obtained by grouping the six comparatives compares very closely with the taxpayer.

In the instant case the comparatives used are the ones most comparable to the taxpayer with respect to the items specified in section 328 and the average of these comparatives compares in every respect favorably with the taxpayer. It is my opinion, therefore, that the comparatives used in the data sheet prepared in this case comply with the provisions of section 328.

Law Opinion 1090 [Sec. 327. Art. 901.-31, herein.] is hereby revoked.

Revenue Act of 1917.

The M corporation operated a so-called card-rate advertising agency. The use of capital was an essential income-producing factor in its business, and was essential in order to establish its financial responsibilities and to enable it to secure credit. It is, therefore, not entitled to assessment of 1917 taxes under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

The M corporation, which conducted an advertising agency, computed its excess-profits tax for the period ended December 31, 1917, under the provisions of section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917. The corporation secured advertising space from publishers and was allowed a discount of — per cent or less and then it billed such space to its own clients at the full agreed price. Its principal source of income was derived from these discounts. All bills for space were made out to the corporation by the publishers and the corporation in turn rendered its bills to its clients. On receipt of the payments from its clients, the taxpayer remitted the amount to the publishers less its discount. The corporation had an average capital stock in excess of 180x dollars for the period from February 1, 1917, to January 1, 1918, and during this period it carried a large amount of accounts and notes receivable and a substantial amount of accounts payable, representing its commitments for advertising space. At the close of the year, 42x dollars was invested in Liberty bonds. It was the custom of the corporation to advance the money necessary for mechanical work and printing, engraving, and electrotyping on behalf of its clients.

Advertising agencies with a few exceptions carry on their business as principals and not as agencies. The so-called card-rate agencies are in reality independent contractors with independent relations with publishers and advertisers. In case of default of an advertiser the loss falls upon the agency. This was admitted to be true in the case of the M Company, at an oral hearing which was accorded its representatives, but it was stated that no defaults occurred in the taxpayer's business in 1917. This responsibility has been held to contemplate the employment of capital. Indeed, it would appear that the special rates made to card-rate agencies are not available to an agency unless it can establish its financial responsibility, thus indicating that capital for credit purposes at least is absolutely essential in the conduct of the business. While it was admitted by the taxpayer that it would have to bear any loss caused by the default of a client, it has argued that no income could possibly be produced through such use of capital, since no income could result from loss, and hence that capital is not a material income-producing factor in its business. This argument does not, in the opinion of this office, affect the soundness of the rule. Obviously the use of capital in such manner is a material income-producing factor, since the agency could not hope, if it were not in a position to make good the accounts with the publishers, to continue in this line of business.

The fact that the taxpayer carried on its books a large amount of receivables representing space bills for which at some time it had been responsible to the publishers; that it carried a substantial amount of accounts payable for such space, and advanced funds in respect of art work and like expenses, indicates the necessity of the use of capital in substantial amounts in excess of that required for mere office expenses. Its investment of 42x dollars in Liberty bonds is not to be taken as having withdrawn such funds from the business, for such assets are necessary for the agency to have in order to secure credit with publishers.

It is, therefore, held that the M corporation is not entitled to assessment under section 209 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Computation of tax on the basis of 50 per cent of the net income under section 328, Revenue Act of 1918, relates only to war excess profits tax. It is not permissible to file bond in lieu of cash payments of tax determined on 50 per cent basis pending final determination of tax due.

6-19-285: T. B. M. 30.

The application of section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act of 1918 to fiscal year returns.

A corporation having a fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, filed income and excess profits tax returns for that period under the Revenue Act of 1917. Its tax was finally assessed under section 210 of the Revenue Act of 1917. The taxpayer in making its supplemental return for the same fiscal year under the Revenue Act of 1918 wishes to use the same constructive capital as a basis for computing its excess profits tax under the Revenue Act of 1918, and appeals from a decision of the Unit advising it that this can not be done.

Section 335 of the Revenue Act of 1918, which levies the war profits and excess profits taxes for a fiscal year ending in 1918, reads in part as follows.

Sec. 335 (a). That if a corporation (other than a personal service corporation) makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the tax for the first taxable year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) The same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the Revenue Act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period.

In the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board the effect of this section of the statute is that the excess profits tax for a fiscal year ending in 1918 is computed in two ways. First, it is computed as if the entire income had been earned during the calendar year 1917. This involves in some cases an assessment under section 210. Second, it is computed as if the entire net income had been earned during the calendar year 1918. This involves in some cases an assessment under section 328. The proper proportions of the resulting taxes are used to determine the tax for the fiscal year.

Where possible, it would be desirable to consider the application for assessment under section 210 and the application for assessment under section 327 together. Where, as in this case, the assessment under section 210 has already been made, the taxpayer should be notified to file with its supplemental return an application for assessment under section 327. Pending decision upon its application it will be necessary for the taxpayer to compute the additional tax due upon the assumption that the excess profits tax computed under the Revenue Act of 1918 will be not more than 50 per cent of its net income, as is provided in section 328 and article 912-914, Regulations 45. In no case would the constructive capital determined under section 210 be used in making the assessment under section 328.

Revenue Act of 1918.

The installments of the tax in the case of a corporation coming within the provisions of article 912, Regulations 45, and which made its return on the basis of a fiscal year ended in 1919, should be determined as follows:

- (1) Compute the tax at 1918 rates upon the entire net income for the taxable year; that is, 50 per cent of the net income.
- (2) Compute the tax at the 1919 rates upon the entire net income for the taxable year; that is, 20 per cent of the net income in excess of $3,000 but not in excess of $20,000 plus 40 per cent of the net income in excess of $20,000.
- (3) Ascertain that proportion of item 1 which the number of months within the calendar year 1918 is of the number of months in the entire period.
- (4) Ascertain that proportion of item 2 which the number of months in the calendar year 1919 is of the number of months in the entire period.
- (5) The total tax equals the sum of item 3 and item 4.

The instalments of the tax for 1919 of a foreign corporation shall be determined upon the basis of an excess profits tax computed by using its invested capital for the taxable year 1917 properly adjusted by reason of subsequent changes. Because of the provisions of section 302 this tax can in no case be more than 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 40 per cent of the amount of net income in excess of $20,000. Final determination of the tax will be made according to the provisions of sections 327 and 328.

The provisions of section 327 (d) of the Revenue Act of 1918 will not debar a corporation deriving income from Government contracts on the "per unit" basis from filing a claim for assessment under the provisions of section 328. If the claim is filed prior to the due date of the fourth installment of tax and the three installments already paid are equal to the sum of the normal tax plus a war profits and excess profits tax equal to 50 per cent of the net income of the corporation, it will not be necessary to pay the fourth installment, but the additional payments of tax, if any, with interest, may be made when the claim for readjustment of the tax is finally disposed of. The corporation should file a claim for abatement of any taxes assessed in excess of the tax computed.

In cases where application has been made at the time of filing the return for assessment of war profits and excess profits tax in accordance with section 328, Revenue Act of 1918, and the installments of tax determined and assessment made on the basis of 50 per cent of the net income for the taxable year, no abatement claim is required to cover the difference between the tax so computed and the tax computed without the benefit of section 328. If the tax has been computed and assessment made without reference to section 328, and application is made subsequently for assessment of the tax in accordance with section 328, payment of the entire tax as originally computed will be required unless a claim is filed for the abatement of the amount assessed in excess of 50 per cent of the net income.

If the tax has been computed and payment made without reference to section 138, and application is made subsequently for abatement of the tax in accordance with section 138, payment of the entire tax as originally computed will be required unless a claim is filed for the abatement of the amount determined to be in excess of 50 per cent of the net income.

WAR PROFITS AND EXCESS PROFITS TAX—REVENUE ACT OF 1918, INVESTED CAPITAL

A merger of two or more corporations takes place when one of such corporations retains its corporate existence and absorbs the other or others, which thereby lose their corporate existence.

A consolidation of two or more corporations is effected when a new corporation is created to take the place of the constituent corporations, which are themselves dissolved in the process.

This case involves the formation in 1904 of the M Company through a so-called merger or consolidation of three New Jersey corporations: the N Company, the O Company, and the P Company, the latter of which owned a controlling proportion of the stock of the two other constituent corporations. The question upon which advice is desired in computing the invested capital of the M Company is whether it was formed as a new corporation in 1904 in connection with the dissolution of the three constituent corporations, or whether, as claimed by the company, it was the same corporate entity (only under a different name) as the P Company which by merger had absorbed the N and O Companies.

Strictly speaking, a merger of two or more corporations takes place when one of such corporations retains its corporate existence and absorbs the other or others, which thereby lose their corporate existence. A consolidation in a strict legal sense is effected when a new corporation is created to take the place of the constituent corporations, which are themselves dissolved in the process. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line Railway Co., 150 Fed. 775, 787.

The determination of whether a union of corporations results in a merger or in the formation of a new corporation depends upon the statute under which it takes place, and the intention therein manifested. Central Railroad Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 665, 670.

The merger or consolidation, as the case may be, which is here under consideration was effected under a New Jersey statute entitled: "An Act concerning corporations (revision of 1896)" and the several supplements thereto and Acts amendatory thereof. The statute provides that two or more corporations organized under the laws of the State for the purpose of carrying on business of the same or a similar nature may "merge or consolidate into a single corporation, which may be either one of said merging or consolidating corporations, or a new corporation to be formed by means of such merger and consolidation."

The New Jersey law clearly authorizes either a process by which one corporation retains its corporate existence and absorbs one or more other corporations, or a process by which two or more corporations unite in the formation of a new corporation; but the interpretation of the various provisions of the statute is somewhat confused for the reason that the terms "merge" and "consolidate" in their different grammatical forms are employed therein more or less indiscriminately and without regard to the true legal niceties of their respective meanings.

The Act in reality gives an option to the constituent corporations to unite either by the merger of one or more into another or by the formation of a new corporation to take the place of the old ones. Difficulty arises in determining which of the two options is exercised in a particular instance since the statute prescribes substantially the same procedure in one case as in the other. The terms of the agreement entered into as a first step in the union of the corporations furnish the best evidence of what the parties intended in this respect.

In examining the language of the agreement entered into in 1904 between the respective directors of the N Company, the O Company, and the P Company, but little aid is obtained from a consideration of the use of the terms "merge" and "consolidate" for the reason that they are employed, as in the case of the New Jersey statute, in a confused and inexact sense. The true intention, therefore, must be ascertained by other tests.

It is claimed in behalf of the corporation that the N Company and the O Company were merged in the P Company, which retained its corporate existence under the name of the M Company. There is no evidence in the record other than the bare assertion to support that contention. If that had been the intention it is believed at least that in the resulting corporation some distinctive feature of the P Company would have been preserved by which its survivorship could be recognized. As the matter stands there is no basis other than conjecture or surmise to justify an inference that the P Company survived to any greater extent than the other two constituent companies, and it is conceded that the latter were dissolved.

It is true that the P Company by virtue of its stock holdings in the other companies was the parent corporation of the group and that its powers more nearly corresponded to the powers of the resulting M Company than to those of the other constituent corporations, but such facts merely create a likelihood that the P Company would have been the one elected to survive if any had been chosen; they do not show the fact of such election.

On the other hand, there are various provisions in the agreement which indicate that the resulting M Company was regarded as a separate corporate entity distinct from that of any of the three constituent companies, as evidenced by the following quotations:

Article V. The said corporations are merged and consolidated upon the understanding and agreement that the present indebtedness of each of said corporations shall be assumed in full by the said merged corporation.

Article VI. All property, real, personal, and mixed, of the said corporations, parties hereto, shall vest in the said merged corporation immediately upon the adoption of this agreement by the stockholders of the said corporation, as provided by the provisions of the said Act entitled "An Act Concerning Corporations (Revision in 1896)" and the several supplements thereto and Acts amendatory thereof; but if the said merged corporation shall deem or be advised that any further assignments, assurances in the law, or things are necessary or desirable to vest the title to such property in the said merged corporation, the said corporations, parties hereto, shall execute and do all such assignments, assurances in the law, and things necessary to vest title to such property in said merged corporation, and otherwise to carry out the purposes of this agreement.

Article VII (in part). The capital stock of each of the said corporations, parties hereto, shall be converted into the common stock, the preferred stock, or the obligations of said merged corporation, and the common stock, preferred stock, and obligations of said merged corporation shall be apportioned among the stockholders of the said corporations, parties hereto, according to the shares held by the respective stockholders of said corporations, and shall be delivered to them upon the surrender of their certificates of stock.

* * * By the act of merger the stocks of all the companies, parties hereto, held by any of the companies, parties hereto, shall stand and be canceled.

The most important evidence as to the status of the M Company is found in article II of the agreement of 1904. As a first step in the union of corporations the New Jersey statute provides for an agreement between the directors, which must then be submitted to and ratified by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders of the respective corporations. Thereafter the perfected agreement is to be filed with the Secretary of State when the merger or consolidation becomes complete, and the resulting corporation becomes vested with all the powers, rights, privileges, and franchises of the constituent corporations. The statute also prescribes what must be embodied in the agreement, including the terms and conditions of the merger or consolidation, the mode of carrying the same into effect, and various other provisions, but does not require any statement therein of the powers of the resulting corporation. In article II of the directors' agreement in the case at hand it is expressly provided that the said merged corporation in addition to the powers conferred by section 1 of the "Act Concerning Corporations" (which section covers the usual powers of corporations) "shall have the powers herein set out." Then follows an elaborate enumeration.

It appears, therefore, that it was the intention of the agreement to vest the so-called "merged corporation" with a distinct and complete set of powers such as would be conferred upon a new corporation rather than to permit the statute itself to operate by conferring on it merely the resultant powers of the old corporations.

Thus the final result of the union of the N Company, the O Company, and the P Company was that each of said corporations alike was left without property and stock—the latter of which particularly, or its equivalent, is in some form essential to corporate existence, Keokuk & Western Railroad v. Missouri, 152 U. S., 301; 309—and there emerged in their place a corporation having new stock, new officers and directors, and a new, distinct, and complete grant of corporate powers.

In view of the foregoing considerations, particularly of the distinct corporate character designed for the resulting corporation as evidenced by the directors' agreement, and also the lack of evidence to manifest the intention of the parties that the P Company, or any of the other constituent corporations, should survive and absorb the others, it is my opinion that the M Company was created as a new corporation in 1904 through the union of the N Company, the O Company, and the P Company.

WAYNE JOHNSON,
Solicitor of Internal Revenue.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917.

Held, that a corporation, organized in October, 1917, which acquires the business and properties of a partnership as of January 1, 1917, the ownership continuing identical as does the business, can not make a return for the entire year, as if it were a corporation, using the invested capital of the partnership as of January 1, 1917, as its invested capital.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying this corporation, which was organized in October, 1917, the right of filing a corporate return for the full taxable year 1917, by treating the partnership prior to October, 1917, as if it were a corporation.

The M Company was incorporated October, 1917, taking over the partnership business of two brothers. By a written agreement, between the corporation and the partnership, the corporation acquired all of the assets of the partnership, including the business, as of January 1, 1917, and assumed its obligations from that date. Except for one or two statutory shares the two partners received the entire capital stock of the corporation. All necessary adjustments were made to state the balance sheet as of January 1, 1917, and certain transactions of the partners were revoked in order that the identical book values and liabilities as of January 1, 1917, might be assumed by the corporation under the agreement with the partners.

It is stated that the corporation, between October, 1917, and January 1, 1918, paid dividends to its stockholders, offered to pay its capital stock tax for said year of 1917, and at the proper time in 1918 filed its corporate return with the Federal Government covering the entire year 1917, using as its invested capital the invested capital of its predecessor as of January 1, 1917.

The corporation, in making an appeal to this Committee to sustain its action in filing a corporation return for the full taxable year 1917, relies upon section 204 and section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and upon section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918. Section 204 of the Revenue Act of 1917 established a basis for prewar data, while section 208 has to do with invested capital at date of reorganization, consolidation or change in ownership. It does not apply retroactively to the beginning of the taxable year but is applicable only to the value of assets immediately transferred.

Section 330 (articles 931, 932, 933 of Regulations 45) approves the practice followed by the taxpayer for the year 1917, except for the important provision that the net income of a trade or business from January 1, 1918, to date of reorganization, if reorganized on or before July 1, 1919, may be taxed as that of a corporation.

There was no provision in the 1917 law for treating a partnership in the taxable year as if it were a corporation, and Congress did not see fit to make section 330 of the 1918 Act retroactive to include the taxable year 1917 at the rates of taxation then in effect.

The Committee does not consider that it can read into the 1917 law, under any of the sections therein, an authority to disregard, for taxation or otherwise, the important distinctions between a partnership and a corporation.

It is accordingly recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying this corporation the privilege of using the invested capital of the partnership as of January 1, 1917, and of considering the income of the partnership during the taxable year 1917 as if it were the income of the corporation, be sustained under section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Where under the laws of a State a charter granted to a corporation is limited to a period of years, the renewal of such charter merely prolongs the existence of the original corporation and does not of itself constitute a reorganization within the meaning of the excess profits tax laws.

Law Section 330.—Reorganizations (§575).

Article 932.—Net Income and Invested Capital of Predecessor Partnership or Individual (§838).

1-19-137: T. B. R. No. 2.

The provisions of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 should be applied on the basis of the adjusted balance sheet of the predecessor as of the date of reorganization.

This section reads:

That in case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business of 50 per centum or more remains in control of the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received.

The question at issue is whether the provision quoted above required the new corporation to base its invested capital on (1) the invested capital of the predecessor as of the beginning of the then taxable year of the predecessor, or (2) on the basis of the balance sheet of the predecessor as of the date of reorganization.

This provision should be held to require the new corporation to base its invested capital on the adjusted balance sheet of its predecessor as of the date of reorganization. The limitation in this section relates in terms to the value which shall be placed upon assets transferred or received from the prior trade or business. Appreciation in the value of assets so transferred or received can not be included in the invested capital of the new corporation. The statute, however, does not prohibit the treatment of the date of reorganization as the beginning of a new taxable year. Consequently it does not require the exclusion from the invested capital of the new corporation of surplus and undivided profits earned between the beginning of the then taxable year of the predecessor corporation and the beginning of the taxable year of the new corporation.

6-19-286: T. B. R. 27.

Recommendation in the case of the application of the X Company for permission to incorporate and then make an affiliated return with three corporations owned by the same individuals.

The X Company is a partnership owned by two individuals with equal interests. In 1918 the partnership owned all or more than 99 per cent of the capital stock of three corporations, Y Company, Z Company, and the W Company. The request now before the Bureau is that the partnership should be allowed to incorporate before July 1, 1919, in accordance with section 330, Revenue Act of 1918, and thereafter be allowed to file a consolidated return with the other three corporations which the partnership now owns.

Section 330 of the 1918 Revenue Act provides that:

In the case of the organization as a corporation before July 1, 1919, of any trade or business in which capital is a material income-producing factor and which was previously owned by a partnership or individual, the net income of such trade or business from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may at the option of the individual or partnership be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the net income and invested capital of such trade or business shall be computed as if such corporation had been in existence on and after January 1, 1918, * * *. Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any trade or business the net income of which for the taxable year 1918 was less than 20 per centum of its invested capital for such year: * * *.

In the case of the X Company it has been stated that the income of this partnership was more than 20 per cent of its invested capital for the year 1918. Such being the fact, it appears that the law specifically gives to this partnership the right to make return as a corporation for the year 1918 if it shall, before July 1, 1919, organize as a corporation.

While the partnership has a net income of more than 20 per cent of its invested capital, the affiliated group of corporations will have a net income of less than 20 per cent of their invested capital, but this fact does not deprive the partnership of the privilege of incorporating and paying the tax as a corporation for the year 1918.

The partnership upon becoming a corporation in accordance with the provisions of the law, and owning 99 per cent of the capital stock of the other three corporations referred to above, should, in the opinion of the Advisory Tax Board, file a consolidated return.

If a partnership was an "original subscriber" to Liberty bonds of the fourth series and was reorganized as a corporation prior to July 1, 1919, and elects to be taxed as a corporation from January 1, 1918, in accordance with section 330, Revenue Act of 1918, the corporation will be considered

A partnership whose net income for the taxable year 1918 was more than 20 per cent of its invested capital may elect to be taxed as a corporation from January 1, 1918, only in case of its reorganization as a corporation before July 1, 1919. There is no authority vested in the Treasury Department to extend the time within which to effect the reorganization.

15-20-854: O. D. 457.

Returns for 1918 were filed for a partnership and its members in accordance with the Revenue Act of 1917, prior to the passage of the Revenue Act of 1918, and tax paid accordingly. The partnership was incorporated prior to July 1, 1919, and elected to be taxed as a corporation under the provisions of paragraph 3, section 330, Revenue Act of 1918. Amended returns for 1918 showing overpayment of tax were filed by the partners.

There is no provision in the law whereby either the tax paid by the partnership or any excess tax paid by the partners may be credited against any tax liability of the successor corporation for any year. Remedy may be sought only by the partnership and the individual members thereof filing claims for the refunding of any excess tax paid.

16-20-872: O. 1023.

Corporations De Facto.

No taxpayer can be entitled to the benefits of the third paragraph of section 330 unless a corporation de jure or de facto came into existence prior to July 1, 1919.

The intention to incorporate, the execution and mailing of the articles of incorporation to the Secretary of State on June 30, 1919, the opening of corporate books as of June 30, 1919, and the manufacturing for one day under the same name as used by the partnership, in the absence of other proof of user prior to July 1, 1919, held not to justify the inference that a corporation de facto existed before July 1, 1919.

The M Company was a partnership engaged in manufacturing during the calendar year, 1918. Early in 1919 the advisability of incorporating and obtaining the benefits of section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918 was considered and a determination to incorporate prior to July 1 was reached. So far as appears only the following events took place prior to July 1: The determination to incorporate was reached. The plant closed down on June 27, and an inventory was taken as of June 27. No business was transacted as a partnership after June 27. The plant reopened on June 30; and the accounts of the corporation began as of June 30. So far as appears the only work done on June 30 was manufacturing. Articles of incorporation were drafted, signed, and acknowledged, and mailed to the Secretary of State on June 30. Minutes of the first meeting and by-laws were drafted by counsel, and it was decided who the temporary dummy directors should be.

No other evidence tending to show user of corporate powers prior to July 1 was in evidence, although the parties made every effort to produce all facts in their favor.

Because of defects in the articles, they were returned by the Secretary of State, amended, and actually filed on July 2, 1919. It was stated orally that the first meeting was held, directors were elected, and the property was formally transferred from the partnership to the corporation after July 2.

It is the contention of the company that it became a de facto corporation on June 30, 1919. Section 330, of the Revenue Act of 1918, reads in part as follows:

In the case of the organization as a corporation before July 1, 1919, of any trade or business in which capital is a material income-producing factor and which was previously owned by a partnership or individual, the net income of such trade or business from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may at the option of the individual or partnership be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the net income and invested capital of such trade or business shall be computed as if such corporation has been in existence on and after January 1, 1918, and the undistributed profits or earnings of such trade or business shall not be subject to the surtax imposed in section 211, but amounts distributed on or after January 1, 1918, from the earnings of such trade or business shall be taxed to the recipients as dividends, and all the provisions of Titles II and III relating to corporations shall so far as practicable apply to such trade or business: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any trade or business the net income of which for the taxable year 1918 was less than 20 per centum of its invested capital for such year: Provided further, That any taxpayer who takes advantage of this paragraph shall pay the tax imposed by section 1000 of this Act and by the first subdivision of section 407 of the Revenue Act of 1916, as if such taxpayer had been a corporation on and after January 1, 1918, with a capital stock having no par value.

This is a remedial provision and should be liberally construed. It will be assumed that in this controversy the Government stands in the same position as an ordinary creditor, and that it is sufficient if the existence of a de facto corporation is shown.

The requisites of a de facto corporation are, first, the existence of a charter or law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully exist; second, an effort in good faith to incorporate thereunder; and, third, an actual user or exercise of corporate powers. Tulare Irrigating District v. Sheppard, 185 U. S. 1.

In applying these tests, however, there is considerable conflict in the decisions even from the same jurisdiction. It may be admitted that the first two requisites were complied with in this case on June 30; but there is great doubt whether there was a sufficient user or exercise of corporate powers prior to July 1, 1919, to justify a decision that a de facto corporation existed. Only one day's user of corporate powers is claimed, and so far as appears no business of a peculiarly corporate nature was transacted on that day.

It is essential to the existence of such a corporation (a de facto corporation) that there be user of such corporate rights as could be authorized by law and not merely such as might be exercised by individuals or unincorporated societies. If such a user, therefore, consists only of acts or proceedings that might be exercised without incorporation, a corporation de facto will not usually be inferred therefrom. (Citing cases.) Under the allegations of the bill the name "Elgin Jewelry Company" was so used by defendants under which to conduct their business before any attempt at incorporation, and the use of such name is entirely consistent with individual or copartnership capacity.—Elgin National Watch Company v. Loveland, 132 Fed. 41, 45, 1904.

Merely manufacturing under the name of M Company is, therefore, not a sufficient user of corporate powers, since they were merely doing what had been done for a long period under the same name by the copartnership. In fact it affirmatively appears that the acts, which are usually the first acts, such as first meeting, adoption of by-laws, and election of officers, took place after July 1.

A recent authority, discussing the question of user in this connection, says:

Generally, it is sufficient to show that the corporation was acting as a corporation and transacted business as such. But there is no fixed rule for determining just how much business must be done. Taking subscriptions to and issuing stock, electing managers and directors, adopting by-laws, buying a lot and constructing and leasing a building upon it; electing officers and trustees, who manage the corporate property for years, and lease and mortgage it, and expend large sums of money, executing powers of attorney, and loaning money and taking a loan and mortgage therefor, have been held to be sufficient. (Fletcher, Cyclopedia of Corporations, Vol. I, p. 625.)

It is significant that the illustrations given all include action of a peculiarly corporate nature and all include acts which are not present in the case under consideration.

It is clear that mere execution of the articles of incorporation is not a sufficient basis for inferring the existence of a corporation de facto. Stevens v. Episcopal Church History Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 573. The mailing of such articles to the Secretary of State may indicate an attempt in good faith to comply with the statutory requirements but can not be said to be a user of corporate powers. (Fletcher, Cyclopedia of Corporations, Vol. I, p. 625.)

In the case of Childs v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 34, principally relied upon by the taxpayer, meetings were held, officers were elected, by-laws adopted, minutes kept, and business done. These were peculiarly corporate acts and indicated a state of facts very different from the one now in question. (So in re Cordova Shop, 216 Fed. 818.)

No case has been found which would justify a decision that there was a sufficient user of corporate powers prior to July 1, 1919, in this case from which to infer the existence of a corporation de facto. Under these circumstances administrative officers are not justified in extending the definition of de facto corporation beyond the limits established by the courts. Nor can the administrative officers extend the time limit established by Congress in section 330.

Some reliance is placed by the taxpayer upon the language of section 330 which requires the "organization as a corporation before July 1, 1919, of any trade or business." Under any interpretation of these words, however, it seems clear that a corporation de jure or de facto must exist prior to July 1. No such corporation existed at that time in this case, and the taxpayer must therefore be denied the benefits of section 330.

13-21-1529; O. D. 855

The M Company operated as a partnership until June 30, 1919, on which date it was incorporated.

The accounting period of the partnership, as well as that of the corporation, was a calendar year. During the calendar year 1918 the partnership earned a net income, and during the period from January 1 to June 29, 1919, it suffered a net operating loss. The corporation also suffered a net operating loss during the period from June 30 to December 31, 1919. Held, that since neither the net operating loss sustained by the partnership nor the net operating loss suffered by the corporation was a loss for a full taxable year, neither organization is entitled to deduct the amount of its net loss from the net income for either the preceding or succeeding taxable year as provided by section 204 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1918.

If, however, the organization is qualified and elects to take advantage of the provisions of section 330 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 933 of Regulations 45, it is then entitled to seek relief under section 204 by applying the total net operating loss sustained during the entire year 1919 against the net income of the year 1918 and applying the excess, if any, of the 1919 loss over 1918 net income against the net income of the year 1920.

II(23)-35-1223: I. T. 1857.

Revenue Act of 1918.

Section 330 is interpreted as meaning that members of partnerships existing January 1, 1918, and members of partnerships formed subsequent to that date were equally entitled to its benefits, provided they came within its other provisions.

The O partnership was formed April 1, 1918. On October 31, 1918, the partnership was reorganized as a corporation, and the business passed into the ownership and control of the M Company, which was formed for the purpose of succeeding to the title and interest of the individual partners. A corporation return was filed for the period from April 1, 1918, to December 31, 1918. It is now argued, in substance, by the taxpayer that the provisions of section 330, to the effect that the net income of a trade or business previously owned by an individual or partnership, and otherwise within the scope of that section—

* * * from January 1, 1918, to the date of such reorganization may at the option of the individual or partnership be taxed as the net income of a corporation is taxed under Titles II and III; in which event the net income and invested capital of such trade or business shall be computed as if such corporation had been in existence on and after January 1, 1918, and the undistributed profits or earnings of such trade or business shall not be subject to the surtax imposed in section 211, but amounts distributed on or after January 1, 1918, from the earnings of such trade or business shall be taxed to the recipients as dividends, and all the provisions of Titles II and III relating to corporations shall so far as practicable apply to such trade or business: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any trade or business the net income of which for the taxable year 1918 was less than 20 per centum of its invested capital for such year: * * * confines the benefit of that section to such partnerships as were in existence at January 1, 1918, and that a partnership coming into existence during 1918 at a date subsequent to January 1 must make a return as a partnership during the time the business was conducted as a partnership venture, and that a separate corporation income and profits tax return must be made for the period in 1918 subsequent to the organization of the business as a corporation. It is desired to file amended returns on this basis.

This office does not agree with this contention. The Revenue Act of 1918 was passed February 24, 1919, and was retroactive and was effective as of January 1, 1918. Under its provisions the rates of the surtax imposed upon individuals were greatly increased, and as individual partners were taxed upon their shares in the undistributed net income of partnerships accumulated during 1918, a situation was created which might have caused hardship and even financial embarrassment to the individual members of a partnership who had been unable to anticipate this radical increase over the 1917 surtax rates and whose business methods had been pursued in accordance with their best interests as dictated by the provisions of the 1917 law. As an act of justice to persons so situated, section 330 was introduced into the 1918 Act. This section enabled such persons to protect themselves against increased individual taxation through the exercise of an option to have the income of their business for the entire taxable period in 1918 taxed as the income of a corporation in the manner indicated by the provisions of that section, and provision was made so that this right to protection might be exercised to and including June 30, 1919.

No good reason is found for restricting the provision of section 330 to members of partnerships which were in existence at January 1, 1918, nor does the language employed in section 330 require such a construction. The date January 1 is used in this section to designate the date beyond which the benefits of an election could not be enjoyed, as beyond that date the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1917 still remained effective. There is no reason why the members of a partnership formed at January 2, 1918, were not as much entitled to protection and relief as the members of a partnership existing at January 1 of that year, and the same reason that applies to January 2 applies to all subsequent dates within the scope of section 330. The hardship to be relieved and the danger to be averted were as much present in the one case as in the other. As a greater period of time includes a less, this office construes the language of section 330 to mean that members of partnerships existing at January 1, 1918, and members of partnerships formed subsequent to that date, were equally entitled to the benefits of section 330, provided they came within its other requirements.

Mere change of domicile without change as to capital and surplus held not to affect the invested capital, which remains the same for the new company as for the old.

The facts in the case appear to be that the M Company, a corporation organized in a certain State, decided that its development would be hampered by its organization in that State and it was therefore decided to reincorporate the company in another State. Accordingly, a new corporation was formed in another State which exchanged its stock directly with the stockholders of the old corporation for their stock, share for share. No change was made in the capitalization or the surplus, but after it had acquired all of the stock of the old corporation the assets of the old corporation were transferred to the new corporation and the charter of the old corporation surrendered. This was in essence merely a reincorporation in a different State without essential change as to business, capitalization, or surplus.

The change of domicile took place in 1916, and the Committee has considered a number of precedents established under the Acts of 1913 and 1916 with regard to the treatment of essentially similar transactions. It finds that under such conditions it was the practice of the Bureau to require only one return as covering the income of both the old and the new corporation. It also finds that in numerous cases it was held that no income accrued to the stockholders by reason of exchange of their stock in the old for stock in the new corporation.

The Committee is of the opinion that it is not necessary to make any radical departure from the "distinct entity" theory which has been the guide of the Bureau in the past, but feels that where there is merely a transfer of domicile through the surrender of the charter issued in one State and the taking out of a new charter in another State, without any change in the business or amount of the capital and surplus of the corporation, that the new company is entitled to the same invested capital as the old.

It is therefore recommended that the M Company (new) be permitted to use the invested capital which would have been permitted the M Company (old) if there had been no surrender of charter, and change of domicile.

The provisions of section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 relate only to the computation of invested capital. In the reorganization of a corporation owning timber lands and engaging in the manufacture of lumber, the basis for deductions for depletion of the timber and depreciation of the plant, machinery and patents claimed by the reorganized company is the cost of these assets at the time they were acquired in reorganization, or their fair market value as of March 1, 1913, if acquired prior thereto.

REVENUE ACT OF 1917

The question is submitted whether or not where there was a change of corporate entity prior to March 3, 1917, without a change of officers or directors, or proportions of stockholdings, the new corporation is limited in its invested capital to that which might be claimed by the old corporation, or whether, in such case, the new corporation is entitled to recognize the cash value of assets for which its stock was issued not in excess of the par value thereof.

The point is illustrated by the cases of two corporations, each of which was reorganized in 1916 and the larger amount of stock issued against appreciated value, patents, good will, etc.

Section 207 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides for the recognition as invested capital of—

(1) Actual cash paid in; (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment . . . , etc.

It is clear that this means subject only to the limitation in the section itself and in section 208, the actual cash paid in or the actual value of tangible assets paid in to the specific corporation, which is the present taxpayer. The limitation in section 208 referred to is:

That in case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, if an interest or control in such trade or business of fifty per centum or more remains in control of the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received, unless such asset was paid for specifically as such, in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment.

The necessary corollary of the provision quoted above is that if the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership took place prior to March 3, 1917, the actual value of the assets paid in, limited by the provisions of section 207, is the invested capital.

The only question, therefore, left in the case is: Was there such a change of entity in the corporations named as to create in effect a new corporation? The uniform practice for some years in dealing with the question of sales of stock has been to treat every change of corporate entity as the creation of a new organization. The only exception to this has been in the case of a mere change of domicile; that is to say, surrender of charter in one State and the taking out of a new charter in a different State, without change, however, in the amount of the stock, the identity of the stockholders or capital and surplus as it appears on the books of the corporation.

It is clear that under the rulings of the office stockholders who, in either of the cases above mentioned, surrendered their stock, receiving therefor stock in the new corporation, would have been held liable to income tax if the value of the stock received was in excess of the cost of the stock surrendered therefor, or the value of such surrendered stock on March 1, 1913, on the ground that there had been an exchange of property of one kind for property of a different kind.

The Committee is therefore clearly of the opinion that both of the corporations in question are entitled to the actual cash value of the tangible and intangible properties paid in for their stock in 1916, subject only to the limitations provided in section 207 as to the value of the intangibles which may be recognized.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX: REVENUE ACT OF OCTOBER 3, 1917.
CORPORATION INCOME TAX: REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

Where a corporation transfers its property to an association composed of its stockholders, and the association after January 1, 1914, but prior to March 3, 1917, transfers substantially the same assets to a new corporation, the fair market value of such assets when transferred to the new corporation should be included in determining the invested capital of the latter.

Proceeds of a judgment recovered in 1918 are income for the year in which received, not for the year or years in which the right of action accrued.

The appeal of the M Company of Texas raises the following questions:

1. Should the property received by the company in or about June, 1914, in return for its entire issue of capital stock, be valued for the purpose of determining invested capital as of the date of transfer, or as of an earlier time, since it appears that the property transferred has been acquired several years previously by a preceding corporation, and by it assigned to an association composed of its stockholders?

2. For what year or years should income derived from the sale of oil be returned where delivery of the oil was made in 1914 and 1915, but only one-half of the purchase price was paid at that time, and the balance was received in 1918, as the result of the entry of a final judgment in a court proceeding?

The war excess profits tax law of October 3, 1917, provides:

Sec. 207. * * *

As used in this title "invested capital" * * * means subject to the above limitations:

(a) In the case of a corporation or partnership: (1) Actual cash paid in, (2) the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash, for stock or shares in such corporation or partnership, at the time of such payment * * *.

Sec. 204. * * *

A trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership, or individual, although formally organized or reorganized on or after January second, nineteen hundred and thirteen, which is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, shall, for the purposes of this title, be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of its predecessor prior to that date shall be deemed to have been its net income and invested capital.

Prior to March, 1914, the M Company was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Louisiana and owned property located there.

In March, 1914, this corporation, pursuant to a resolution of its stockholders, duly transferred, sold, and conveyed all of its property to certain stockholders as trustees for themselves and the other stockholders of the company. It was provided in the resolution authorizing such transfer that the trustees named should have authority to conduct the business theretofore carried on by the corporation in the form of a limited partnership under the name of the M Company, (Ltd.), and that the trustees should also liquidate the corporation affairs of the M Company of Louisiana.

In June, 1914, the M Company of Texas was duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Texas, having been organized by the above named trustees. The entire issue of capital stock of the new corporation was thereupon issued to the trustees and beneficiaries of the M Company (Ltd.), the above named limited partnership, in return for all of the assets of that partnership owned jointly by the principals thereof, who were the sole and only stockholders of the original M Company of Louisiana.

It is represented that the assets of the limited partnership were in value greatly in excess of the par value of the stock issued by the M Company of Texas, as purchase price thereof, and that company contends that the excess in value of said property when transferred to it in return for its capital stock over the par value of that stock shall be regarded as paid in surplus under the Revenue Act of 1918.

As to the year for which proceeds of the judgment obtained by the M Company against the X Company should be returned as income, the facts were as follows: A contract was made in 1912, between the X Company and the M Company, by which the latter agreed to sell to the former—and the former to buy—oil produced from certain wells of the M Company. The contract was to become effective December 25, 1912, and to continue in force for two years. The X Company agreed to pay for the oil delivered at the rate of 90 cents per barrel, and was given an option of purchasing any oil delivered in excess of the agreed maximum at the market price prevailing at the time of delivery. The X Company was also given an option to extend the contract for a period of two years after its expiration, December 24, 1914, to pay for the oil thereafter delivered at a price equal to the highest contract price then being paid by any one of four of the largest purchasing companies. Before the expiration of the contract in 1914, the X Company exercised its option to extend the same for a period of five years, and notified the M Company that the price for oil sold thereunder would be 60 cents per barrel, as that was the price for which the companies were at that time making contracts.

In acknowledging receipt of the letter exercising the option the M Company advised that the price of oil would be $1.00 per barrel, as that was the highest price then being paid by purchasing companies under contracts already existing. The parties being unable to come to an agreement as to price made an arrangement by which the M Company delivered the oil as provided in the contract, but the X Company paid only 50 cents per barrel, leaving the balance of the purchase price to be paid as determined by the courts. Suit was brought by the M Company, as a result of which judgment was finally obtained in 1918, ordering the X Company to pay the balance of 50 cents per barrel.

First, as to the time the capital assets in question should be valued for the purpose of determining invested capital. The excess profits tax law of 1917, explicitly provides that the term "invested capital" includes the actual cash value of tangible property paid in other than cash for stock or shares in the corporation. (Section 207.) This is the general provision and applies to the term "invested capital" whenever used in the title. One qualification is found in cases in which it is sought to determine invested capital for the prewar years, viz: 1911, 1912, and 1913. This qualification is found in section 204, which provides, in substance, that if the trade or business carried on by the corporation existed prior to January 2, 1913, although the reorganization took place later, the invested capital of the new organization shall be deemed to be no greater than that of its predecessor. This provision, however, applies only to determination of invested capital for prewar years, and has been so regarded by the Bureau. (See Regulations 41, article 22.)

A further qualification of the general rule is found in section 208 which provides, in substance, that in the case of the reorganization, consolidation or change of ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business of fifty per centum remains in control of the same persons, or any of them, the invested capital of the trade or business shall be ascertained by allowing no greater value to any of the assets transferred to the new corporation than would have been allowed in computing invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been transferred, unless such asset was paid for specifically in cash or tangible property.

The fair inference to be drawn from section 208 is that in the case of such reorganization before March 3, 1917, the general rule shall apply, viz: Assets should be valued as of the date of transfer to the new corporation for the purpose of determining the invested capital of such corporation.

As to the second question, viz: Whether income derived from the sale of oil to the X Company should be reported for the years 1914 and 1916, when the oil was delivered and part of the purchase price paid, or for the year 1918, when final judgment was secured and balance of the purchase price paid.

In Jackson v. Smietanka, T. D. 2960, which was decided very recently in the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, it was held that a fee of $100,000, determined and received in 1918, for services rendered and received during five years, was income for the year of payment, although the receiver had a court order allocating to each of the years a portion of the entire amount.

In the instant case the M Company delivered oil during the years 1914 and 1915, under a contract so worded as to give rise to a dispute as to the amount of purchase price. The X Company was willing to pay 60 cents per barrel. The M Company demanded $1.00 per barrel. The parties agreed to pay and receive 50 cents per barrel, and to leave the balance of the price to be determined by the court. The 50 cents per barrel paid by the X Company in 1914 and 1915 was, so far as the record shows, included in the gross income of the M Company for those years. The record does not show that the M Company accrued on its books the balance of 50 cents per barrel. Sound business policy would not have permitted such accrual, for at that time there was no assurance that the amount of 50 cents per barrel would be recovered. Since the X Company had agreed to pay 60 cents per barrel, it would seem that 10 cents per barrel could have been set up on the books of the M Company in 1914 and 1915 as accrued. As to any further amount, however, there was a grave element of doubt. In fact, in the lower court it was held that the contract price was 50 cents per barrel, and it was not until the final determination in 1918, that the price was fixed at $1.00 per barrel. For this reason it is believed that the facts in this case bring it squarely within the principle laid down by the court in Jackson v. Smietanka above. There, as here, the services had been performed in prior years, but it was not possible for the parties, as in this case, during such prior years, to fix and determine an amount as representing the final amount to be received. The opinion is accordingly expressed that the entire proceeds of the judgment recovered by the M Company in 1918, should be reported as gross income for the year of actual receipt.

It is accordingly held that where a corporation transfers its property to an association composed of its stockholders, and the association after January 1, 1914, but prior to March 3, 1917, transfers substantially the same assets to a new corporation, the fair market value of such assets when transferred to the new corporation should be included in determining the invested capital of the latter; that the proceeds of a judgment recovered in 1918, are income for the year in which received, not for the year or years in which the right of action accrued.

Solicitor of Internal Revenue.

42-20-1252: A. R. R. 285.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company, from the action of the Income Tax Unit eliminating an item of 40x dollars from the invested capital claimed for the years 1917 and 1918.

It appears that the N Company, a Massachusetts corporation, was organized in 1907; that in 1917 the M Company was organized under the laws of the State of Connecticut, with an authorized capital stock of 150x dollars, of which 80x dollars was issued for the purpose of taking over all the assets and liabilities of the N Company, a Massachusetts corporation. The charter of the reorganized corporation was drafted so that the corporation could engage in the collateral business of owning and renting real estate in addition to its regular business.

In 1917, subsequent to March 3, the newly organized corporation took over the entire assets and assumed the liabilities of the Massachusetts corporation. Some time after that date the Massachusetts corporation surrendered its charter and was dissolved.

A complete field audit of the returns filed by the M Company for the years 1917 and 1918, has been made and the report has been received, audited, and accepted by the Income Tax Unit. Minor adjustments were made in the net income for these years, all of which have apparently been accepted by the corporation. The additional tax found is due largely to the adjustment of the invested capital for these years.

The revenue agent in his report deals quite fully with the reorganization of the corporation and the transfer to it of certain parcels of improved real estate by A, the principal stockholder of both corporations. It appears that soon after the transfer of the assets of the Massachusetts corporation to the M Company, the newly organized corporation, A, its principal stockholder, transferred certain real estate to the new corporation for stock. Such transfer was made after March 3, 1917, and the revenue agent has included in invested capital for both years the adjusted cost of such real estate to A.

The adjustment made was proper for 1918, and was in accordance with the provisions of section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918, and article 941 of Regulations 45. The same adjustment for 1917 was not proper, if the corporation can show that at the time of acquisition of the real estate in question such real estate had a cash value in excess of the adjusted cost allowed by the revenue agent.

It will be noted that in section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 the phrase "or change of ownership of property after March 3, 1917," does not appear, but section 208 deals with reorganizations, consolidations, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, where 50 per cent of the control remains with the same person or persons. Section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 goes a little further and takes in any change of ownership of property after March 3, 1917, where an interest or control in such trade or business or property of 50 per cent or more remains in the same person or persons. In accordance with the above and under the provisions of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917, if the corporation can show that the real estate acquired from A after March 3, 1917, even though 50 per cent or more of the ownership remains in A, had a value in excess of the cost as adjusted by the revenue agent, the corporation is entitled to include the actual cash value of the property at the date of acquisition. This is not true, however, with respect to the 1918 return. The limitation is extended by the provisions of section 331 to any change of ownership of property after March 3, 1917, where an interest or control of 50 per cent or more remains in the same person or persons. The amount which can be included in the computation of invested capital is limited to the actual cost, plus improvements, less depreciation, of the physical property so transferred. Therefore the adjustment made by the revenue agent for 1918 appears to be proper, and his action in reducing the invested capital to the adjusted cost of the real estate in question is sustained. An examination of the record does not show that satisfactory evidence has been submitted by the corporation establishing the value of the real estate transferred to the new corporation in 1917 in excess of the adjusted cost. Therefore it is recommended that the adjustment made by the revenue agent and accepted by the Unit be affirmed.

In the examination of this case the revenue agent has apparently erred by treating the return filed by the corporation under the first two sentences of article 206 of Regulations 33, revised, which reads as follows:

A mere change in name does not constitute a new corporation. If the business was continuous throughout the year, no change in management or operation other than the change in name having occurred, the return should be made covering the business transacted throughout the year, such return to be made by the corporation in the name which it bears at the end of the year, with a notation on the return to the effect that the name had been changed, giving both the old and the new names. If, however, a distinctly new corporation was organized to take over the property of the old, both corporations will be required to make separate returns covering the periods of the year during which they were respectively in charge of the business.

It appears that a new corporation was created to take over the assets of the old corporation, that the authorized capital stock was increased, and that by the new charter the new corporation was authorized to hold title to real estate. A distinctly new corporation came into existence, which took over the property of the old corporation; therefore, both the old and the new corporations will be required to file separate returns covering the periods of the year during which they were in active control of the business. The last sentence of the above-quoted article of the regulations in the judgment of the Committee covers the situation in the instant case. Therefore it is recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit accepting the revenue agent's recommendation on this point be reversed and that both the old and the new corporations be required to render separate returns for the respective periods of the year. It is also suggested that the net earnings, if any, of the Massachusetts corporation from January 1 to the date of dissolution be included as part of the invested capital of the newly organized corporation for the period for which a return is rendered.

5-21-1424: O. D. 789.

The M Company was incorporated for the purpose of acquiring that part of the business of the N Company, a foreign corporation, which it carried on in the United States and Canada.

The M Company issued common and preferred stock to the N Company, in the amount of  $x$  dollars, in exchange for its business in the United States and Canada. The domestic corporation requested permission to set up on its books as invested capital several increases over the amounts carried on its books for the same items by the foreign corporation.

Held, that where a foreign corporation has been taxed on its activities in this country, and its activities in Canada and this country are subsequently taken over by a domestic corporation organized for that purpose, and fifty per centum or more of the stock of the domestic corporation is held by the foreign corporation, the assets of the domestic corporation are to be valued under section 331, Revenue Act of 1918. In the case presented the domestic corporation may set up on its books as invested capital the assets taken over from the foreign corporation at such values as could have been established had the previous owner been required to set up invested capital as a domestic corporation.

(See 8-21-1470; Section 326, Article 831.) Valuation of assets upon a reorganization and the changing of a partnership into a corporation.

11-21-1512: A. R. R. 409.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Corporation from the action of the Income Tax Unit in denying the corporation an item of  $x$  dollars, or the statutory percentage thereof, carried on the books of the corporation as "good will, trade-marks, and foreign agencies."

The M Corporation was incorporated April, 1917, with a capital stock of 100y shares, taking over the net assets of the N partnership as a going concern as of January 1, 1917, and in addition thereto the sum of  $x$  dollars in cash. The consideration for the net assets of the partnership and the additional cash was the sum of  $4x$  dollars to be paid by the corporation issuing to the partners, or to their nominees, the entire issue of capital common stock of the corporation consisting of 100y shares. Certain adjustments were made of salaries of the partners to offset the credit for earnings from January 1, 1917, to April, 1917. The journal entry made to open the books of the corporation was in the following expression:

Net value of the tangible assets of the partnership.....	2x dollars
Cash to be paid in.....	x dollars
Good will, trade-marks, and foreign agencies.....	x dollars
To capital stock.....		4x dollars

The partnership books were not closed, and, on advice of accountants, they became the books of the corporation, subject, however, to the above corporate entry.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the corporation held April, 1917, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That upon the execution and delivery to this company of the instruments enumerated and upon the payment by A, B and C to this corporation of said sum of  $x$ dollars in cash, in accordance with the terms of said written proposal of April, this corporation, issued to said A, B, and C the entire issue of the capital stock of this corporation, to-wit, 100y shares, as provided for in said written proposal of said M Corporation dated April, 1917, and as accepted by the board of directors of this company at the board meeting held in April, 1917.

The following abstract and resolution are quoted from the minutes of a meeting of the corporation held April, 1917:

That said A, B, and C had presented a list of the nominees in whose names they desired that said capital stock should be issued, showing the name, address, and number of shares of stock to be issued to each person, firm, or corporation.

On motion, duly seconded, the following resolution was duly adopted:

RESOLVED, That the said list be set forth in full in these minutes and that as said A, B, and C had complied with their said offer of April, 1917, and had duly transferred all of the property and assets of said N partnership to this corporation, and had paid in to this corporation said additional sum of x dollars in cash, the certificates of stock prepared for that purpose be issued to said persons accordingly as the original issue of the shares of the capital stock of this corporation.

Of the 100y shares of stock issued by the corporation, the following shares were authorized by the officers of the corporation to be recorded by the transfer agent in the names of the former partners:

B.....	18y shares
C.....	10y shares
A.....	21y shares
Total.....	49y shares

or a few shares less than 50 per cent of the total issue of stock to them. According to the records of the transfer agent, the remaining shares were issued to the stockholders in number from 1 to 25y shares. The stock issued to the public was very well distributed. In the corporate organization B became president and general manager, C vice-president and secretary, and A chairman of the board of directors and treasurer of the corporation.

Section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides:

That in case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, if an interest or control in such trade or business of fifty per centum or more remains in control of the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received, unless such asset was paid for specifically as such, in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment.

Article 50 of Regulations 41 substantially follows the language of the Act. It would appear, therefore, that the sole question at issue rests upon the intent of the words "remains in control" as used in the Act. It is clear from the above facts that the partners who became the principal officers of the corporation continued in position to exercise direct and effective control over the affairs of the business. The corporate books were in the hands of one of the former partners and from this record he had intimate knowledge of the ownership of stock held by outside interests.

Apart from this effective control it is clear that by agreement and bill of sale the partners received the entire capital stock of the corporation for the net partnership assets and for other valuable considerations. This gave the partners immediate authority to dispose of such stock in any manner they might desire. Technically, the proceeds from the sale of any or all of the stock passed to the partnership. Out of these proceeds the partners paid to the corporation such amount or amounts as the partners had agreed to pay in part consideration for the stock received by them. In other words, the transaction was between the corporation and the partners and the latter named the proportion in which they desired the stock distributed to them and to their nominees. Hence, the partners did remain in control. They exercised this control in naming their nominees. It is immaterial that this stock control was not continuing—that it immediately passed by a small fraction into other hands.

In oral argument representatives of taxpayer laid stress on the amounts which had been expended by the partnership from time to time in developing foreign agencies. The Committee finds no provision in the law or regulations for the capitalization of such items which were invariably charged, and properly so, to cost of conducting the business.

Article 64 of Regulations 41 provides:

Amounts expended in the past for good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other intangible assets of a like character, are controlled by the language of the statute which provides that such assets "shall be included in invested capital if the corporation or partnership made payment bona fide therefor specifically as such in cash, or tangible property." The Commissioner of Internal Revenue will recognize additions to invested capital on account of intangible assets only if such assets have been explicitly paid for in the manner prescribed by the statute. Where expenditures have been made for the general development of intangible assets, and charged as current expense, no readjustment thereof will be allowed.

It is, accordingly, the recommendation of the Committee that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing this corporation  $x$  dollars, or any part thereof, as "good will, trade-marks and foreign agencies" be sustained under section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

39-21-1849: A. R. R. 618.

Recommended, in the case of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing an item of good will under section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be sustained, and that the action of the Income Tax Unit be also sustained under section 310 in declining the request of this appellant to use other years than the years 1911, 1912 and 1913 in establishing average prewar income for war profits tax purposes.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing in the statutory invested capital of this corporation a good will item of  $10x$  dollars and in declining to consider certain years other than the years 1911, 1912 and 1913 in arriving at the average prewar income for war profits tax purposes.

The M Company was incorporated in 1918, taking over the net tangible assets of the partnership of O & Company. For the net tangible assets of the partnership there was issued  $25x$  dollars of preferred stock of the corporation and  $10x$  dollars of common stock. The stock of both issues was delivered to the partners of O & Company in consideration for their partnership interests and the par value of the common stock, namely,  $10x$  dollars, which was in excess of the value of the net tangible assets of the partnership, was charged to good will on the books of the corporation. That item was eliminated from invested capital by the Income Tax Unit under authority of section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 941 of Regulations 45 because more than 50 per cent of the interest or control in the partnership continued in the same persons as stockholders of the corporation.

The appellant states that the partnership of O & Company had been operating successfully for approximately sixty years and that during this period it earned the good will of both the public and the trade on account of the sterling integrity of the members of the firm in their business relations, together with the maintenance of an unsurpassed standard of quality of merchandise offered for sale, It is contended that such good will thus established should be considered as entirely separate and distinct from the good will created through the medium of advertising and development of the trade-name brands of goods and that accordingly in addition to the "cost of acquisition," as stated in section 331 of the Revenue Act, there should be taken into account not merely "betterments" represented by actual cash outlay for advertising, etc., but a positive additional value represented by the gradual development of the good will value during the years, which must be measured in terms of profits earned.

It does not seem necessary to give consideration to the going concern value of this business as may be determined by its income over a period of years. Section 331 of the Act and article 941 of the Regulations are explicit enough in limiting the value of the assets of a trade or business reorganized after March 3, 1917, to the value of the assets of the predecessor company when there is an interest of 50 per cent or more remaining in the same persons. In the instant case the continuing interest was 100 per cent. Accordingly, under the mandate of the law itself, no recognition can be given in the instant case to the alleged value of good will measured by the capital stock of the corporation issued in excess of the value of the net assets, both tangible and intangible, of the predecessor partnership.

It appears, however, that in 190- there was a partnership reorganization and at this time, by agreement, there was set up on the books of the new partnership an item of  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars for good will of the business of O & Company. This item, however, was written off the books of the partnership prior to the incorporation of the business in July, 1918. It would seem, under section 331 of the Act, that if the value of this asset can be established by cost of acquisition at the time of reorganization of the partnership in 190-, the partnership should have the right to restate its proprietary interest so that the item of  $\frac{1}{2}x$  dollars would be reflected as an asset at the date of incorporation of the partnership and accordingly allowed as an intangible asset on the books of the corporation.

With respect to the contention of the appellant that other years than the years 1911, 1912 and 1913 be used for the purpose of establishing prewar income, it is noted that the contention rests on the fact that in the year 1913 great quantities of the product handled were sold by a foreign government in the American market at a stated price with the immediate effect that its value declined considerably. This contention, however, was not peculiar to this appellant. It is admitted that the act of the foreign government affected approximately all American concerns engaged in the same business. It is admitted, therefore, that while this was an unusual year of depression, all like trades were affected to the same extent as that of the appellant. Relief, which is sought by the appellant under section 205 of the Revenue Act of 1917, does not obtain and the point at issue must be disposed of under the mandatory provisions of section 310 of the Revenue Act of 1918, which prescribes the years 1911, 1912 and 1913 as the prewar period.

The Committee, therefore, recommends, in the case of the M Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit in disallowing an item of good will under section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 be sustained, and that the action of the Income Tax Unit be also sustained under section 310 in declining the request of this appellant to use other years than the years 1911, 1912 and 1913 in establishing average prewar income for war profits tax purposes.

Recommended in the appeal of the M. Company, that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained in holding that A did not retain an interest or control of 50 per cent or more in the trade or business previously owned and engaged in by him under the name of X, and that the case does not come within the provisions of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917, and article 50 of Regulations 41 and section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 941 of Regulations 45.

The Committee has had under consideration the appeal of the M Company from the action of the Income Tax Unit in holding that A did not retain an interest or control of 50 per cent or more in his individual trade or business transferred to the foregoing corporation on or about December—, 1917, and that the provisions of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 do not apply.

The tax returns of this corporation are under audit for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, and the question under consideration by the Committee arose in connection with the audit.

The Committee, after examining the facts in the case and the arguments presented by attorneys for the corporation, reached the conclusion that the appeal raised a question of law. An opinion was requested from the Solicitor, and the Committee is now in receipt of an opinion, which reads as follows:

In December, 1917, A was the owner of a certain business, which he engaged in under the name of X. In that month his son, B, together with two other persons, formed a corporation known as the M Company for the purpose of acquiring the assets of the business conducted by A so that the business might be continued by the corporation. On December —, 1917, A offered to sell to the corporation all his right, title, and interest in and to the assets of the business that had been conducted by him, in consideration of the issuance of  $48\frac{3}{4}y$  shares of stock of the corporation to seven persons, who were named in the offer. A was to receive  $\frac{1}{2}y$  shares, his children and close connections were to receive the remainder. The corporation was authorized to issue not more than 50y shares of stock under its charter. The offer was accepted by the corporation. The assets were then transferred to the corporation and the stock was issued to the designated persons in accordance with the agreement, with the exception of two qualifying shares issued to other persons. After the consummation of this transaction A held  $1\frac{1}{2}y$  shares of the corporate stock, y shares being purchased by him for cash.

Two questions are raised (1) whether the transaction in question constituted a reorganization of the business or a sale of the business to the corporation, and (2) whether an interest or control of 50 per cent or more of the business remained in A, the owner of the business prior to its transfer to the corporation.

Section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 provides:

That in case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March third, nineteen hundred and seventeen, if an interest or control in such trade or business of 50 per centum or more remains in control of the same persons, corporations, associations, partnerships, or any of them, then in ascertaining the invested capital of the trade or business no asset transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received, unless such asset was paid for specifically as such, in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or actual cash value of the tangible property paid therefor at the time of such payment.

Section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 reads as follows:

In the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business, or change of ownership of property, after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business or property of 50 per centum or more remains in the same persons, or any of them, then no asset transferred or received from the previous owner shall, for the purpose of determining invested capital, be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such previous owner if such asset had not been so transferred or received: Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment, or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise on or after March 1, 1913, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation.

The taxpayer states that the decision of this case rests upon the construction to be given to the words "interest or control," "remains in the same person," and "remains in control." These are said to be the key words to the whole matter. It is contended that the fact that A named persons of his own family to receive the stock of the corporation is immaterial in determining the question of control, as the transaction was entirely bona fide and no question of fraud or evasion is involved.

The solution of the principal question presented lies in the effect to be given to the contract arising from the acceptance by the corporation of the offer by A under date of December —, 1917.

In a majority of the States, where two parties enter into an agreement upon a valid consideration and thereunder third persons are to receive a benefit, the contract may be enforced by such third persons. The transaction in question took place in the State of Illinois, and this principle has been recognized by the courts of that State. It was stated by the Supreme Court of that State in Cobb v. Heron, 180 Ill. 49, 54 N. E. 189, Aff. 78 Ill. App. 654, that privity or consideration between a promisor and a third person who is a beneficiary under a contract need not exist to support a promise, provided there is a valuable consideration for the promise as between the principal parties to the undertaking, citing Deen v. Walker, 107 Ill. 540; Bay v. Williams, 112 Ill. 91. This principle has also been asserted in numerous cases including the following: Hartman v. Pistorious, 248 Ill. 568, 94 N. E. 131; Searls v. Flora, 225 Ill. 167, 80 N. E. 98; Harms v. McCormick, 132 Ill. 104, 22 N. E. 511. Under this rule then, which is sustained by sufficient authority, the moment the offer of A was accepted by the corporation a binding contract for the benefit of the third parties was affected.

As A chose to specify in his offer the persons who were to receive the stock, which, on acceptance by the corporation, obligated it to issue the shares to the persons designated (which obligation was promptly carried out), it is clear that the limitations of the statute do not apply, notwithstanding the relationship existing between A and the persons whom he designated to receive the stock, provided the transaction was bona fide and not designed to conceal the real ownership of the stock.

It appears from the evidence that the transaction was bona fide. An explanation of the transaction lies in the fact that A desired to provide for his children during his own lifetime and retire from active business. Almost immediately after he transferred the assets of his individual business to the corporation he retired from business and died about two months later. There seems to be no doubt that the issuance of the stock to the persons designated in the offer was absolute and unconditional and that A made no attempt to retain any interest, either directly or indirectly, in the stock.

For these reasons it is the opinion of this office that A did not retain an interest or control of 50 per cent or more in the trade or business previously owned and engaged in by him under the name of X and that, therefore, the case does not come within the provisions of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918.

It is immaterial in determining the question of invested capital whether the transaction in question constituted a sale or reorganization, and no opinion in connection therewith is expressed.

In view of the foregoing opinion of the Solicitor, in which the Committee concurs, it is recommended that the action of the Income Tax Unit be sustained in holding that A did not retain an interest or control of 50 per cent or more in the trade or business previously owned and engaged in by him under the name of X and that the case does not come within the provisions of section 208 of the Revenue Act of 1917 and article 50 of Regulations 41 and section 331 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and article 941 of Regulations 45.

45-21-1916: O. D. 1097.

In 1913, the M Company was required by order of court to dissolve. Prior to such dissolution, a new corporation, known as the O Company, was was organized with a capital stock equal to the aggregate par value of the capital stock of the M Company outstanding. The O Company then exchanged its capital stock (aggregate par value 3x dollars) for all the stock, assets, and liabilities of the M Company. At the time of such sale the M Company had capital stock outstanding of a total par value of 3x dollars, surplus and undivided profits, x dollars. The stock of the new company was issued share for share to the stockholders who held the stock of the old company. The officers and directors of the old company and the new company are identical.

The question presented is whether in computing invested capital of the O Company the value of the assets as carried on the books of the M Company may be taken up on its books and included at the same rate they were so carried on the books of the M Company.
